Compare Bryant Bowles' action to paperhanger in Germany

Sat. 10-16-54 p 1

POTTSTOWN, Pa. — A letter condemning the surrender to mob rule by Delaware State and Milford school officials and likening Bryant W. Bowles to "the" little German paperhanger (Hitler) has been written to Gov J. Calbeb Boggs by 28 Sunday school children here.

Bowles is president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, considered by some a successor to the defunct Ku Klux Klan and organized to defy the Supreme Court on public school segregation.

—o O o—

THE NAAWP was responsible for the official fiasco at Milford, Del., and stories in the newspapers about the victory of mob rule there sparked similar demonstrations in Baltimore and Washington.

Text of the letter written to the Delaware governor by the Royersford Sunday school youngsters—ranging in age from 11 to 15—all members of First Reformed Church, follows:

"We, the future of America and the hope of the world, wish to protest the disgraceful manner in which boys and girls of the colored race are being treated in Delaware.

—o O o—

"OUR PARENTS are considered our voice until we are of legal age to raise our own. We want it understood that the Society for the Advancement of White People is NOT THE VOICE OF OUR NATION'S HIGH SCHOOL CITIZEN.

"Today there is much talk of juvenile delinquency all over our country. IS THIS THE SHINING EXAMPLE OF ADULTS

The Crusader

"Are the utterances of a man who has himself been arrested on charges of false pretense to be accepted by false pretense to portant, is mob rule the American way or the Russian way?

Sat.-10-16-54

"ISN'T THERE a terrible sameness about W. Bryant Bowles and the paperhanger in Germany who liked segregation and mob rule?

"We, too, live in a small town and our local high school has an enrollment of 500, 10 of which belong to the colored race.

"Last week, the freshman class elected John Walker president of the class. He is of the colored race. As Christian boys and girls, we do not judge people by the color of their skins.

"We are proud of our friend John. Aaron Burr, Julius and Ethel (Rosenberg) were white remember?

—o O o—

"MILFORD, DEL., is the shame of the nation. Twenty years from today our children and yours will read of this most unglorious chapter of American history.

"Do the Stars and Stripes hang from the flagstaff over the schools and in classrooms where one is not allowed to go if one doesn't belong to the white race? How do you explain this?

"We hope the people of Milford, Del., won't make every teen-ager in the United States hang their head in shame while the hammer and the sickle gang jump for joy."

Milford Negro students obey board's edict

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 18—(AP)—Ten Negro pupils, ousted from Milford's all-white high school, today obeyed an order from the Delaware State Board of Education and reported for classes at the all-Negro high school at Georgetown, 16 miles south of here.

The state board had ordered them to the William C. Jason School yesterday and arranged for transportation. James Webb, principal of the William C. Jason School, said their enrollment was only on a temporary basis.

He said they will go there only until the controversy over attending the all-white school here is settled in the courts.

THE PUPILS have not attended classes since early this month, when their enrollment at the Lakeview Avenue School here was cancelled because of a boycott by white pupils.

Meanwhile, Vice Chancellor William Marvel will hold a hearing in Wilmington tomorrow on a request by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People for an injunction to restrain the Milford School board from keeping the 10 Negroes out of the white school.

DELAWARE RULING BACKS 10 NEGROES

But Lengthy Delay Appears Likely in Re-enrollment of Pupils at Milford

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 19—The ten Negro pupils seeking readmission to Milford High School won another legal victory in Chancery Court here today. However, their re-enrollment now is impossible before next Monday and is likely to be deferred for weeks.

Vice Chancellor William Marvel approved the formal order calling upon the Milford School Board to reinstate the Negroes. The pupils, all 15 or 16 years old, today spent their second day in the all-Negro high school at Georgetown, seventeen miles south of Milford. They are enrolled "temporarily" at Georgetown, pending final implementation of the order to transfer them back to Milford.

But Vice Chancellor Marvel suspended the order until Friday at noon, which meant it could not be served on the four-man Milford School Board until Monday. That was to enable Howard E. Lynch, attorney for the school board, to perfect an appeal to the State Supreme Court.

Mr. Lynch filed notice of appeal this afternoon with James Messick, clerk of the three-man Supreme Court. The Court will hear his application for a stay of the order pending the appeal at Dover at 10:30 A. M. Friday.

Appeal Is Denied

Earlier, in the Wilmington hearing Vice Chancellor Marvel had denied Mr. Lynch's appeal for a reargument. Last Thursday, after a hearing two days earlier in Georgetown, Vice Chancellor Marvel had ruled that the Negro children had a "clear legal right" to be re-enrolled at Milford. They had registered there early last month and had attended school without disturbance for ten days. After that time, pressure by segregationists mounted. The Negroes were dropped from the rolls on Sept. 30 and the court action followed.

Vice Chancellor Marvel asserted that the court was "dealing with constitutional rights that have to be, or rather should be, decided as quickly as possible * * * . I feel no further argument can be helpful. I shall enter an order now, from which, of course, there is immediate right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the state."

The order as approved applies only to the Negroes in the Milford case.

H. Albert Young, Attorney General of Delaware, was present as a friend of the Court but did not speak.

On Friday he will go before the Chancery Court in Dover to seek an order restraining the National Association for the Advancement of White People from further solicitation of members and funds. Mr. Young hopes to deprive the organization of its Delaware charter by proving that the charter has been abused.

In Georgetown, J. R. Webb, superintendent of the all-Negro Jason High School, said every effort was being made to enable the ten Milford pupils—out of school since Sept. 30—to catch up with their studies.

HURRICANE EASES MILFORD'S TENSION

But Respite Over Integration Is Brief as Town Faces Full Docket on Issues

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 16—Like so many communities in the path of Hurricane Hazel, this neat and leafy little town primarily was concerned today with cleaning up.

But in a sense, the big wind, which tore down signs, smashed windows and blacked out Milford, came as a relief. It took people's minds at least temporarily off the school segregation issue.

The respite is bound to be brief. Beginning tomorrow there will be developments daily in the fight over segregation—any one of which can bring a new crisis here.

But beyond next week's full schedule of formal developments there is the town iteself. Physically, Milford is a lovely town. Straddling the line between Kent and Sussex counties, it is dominated by Walnut Street, banked by beautiful homes and fronted by stately trees.

5,300 People in Milford

At the last census it had about 5,300 people, 900 of whom were Negroes. It is a trading center for 25,000 other persons, in a prosperous poultry region. Their family income, the Chamber of Commerce reports, is considerably above the national average.

Most of the white people around here do regard segregation as a way of life. So do some of the Negroes. But that is not the same thing as saying that most of the whites or any of the Negroes want to fight integration. Among the whites, there is a large and substantial body that agrees the Supreme Court is the law of the land. They do not propose to break that law.

Some feel that once the Supreme Court has issued its implementing decrees to its order banning segregation in schools, even the recalcitrant whites will yield. But among those who attend the meetings arranged by Bryant W. Bowles of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, are many who give a contrary impression.

When it was suggested that high state officials might be willing to lead the ten Negro children back to the all-white Milford High School, from whose rolls they had been dropped, one of these segregationists said:

"If they try that they don't know what they're getting into."

Called 'Five Dollar Man'

Several people around here scornfully refer to Mr. Bowles as the "$5 man"—suggesting that he is interested only in the membership fees collected at every meeting. Others regard him as a sincere spokesman for a cause. They can't see why he was arrested here last Sunday when leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have not been.

Here is the week's schedule of events bearing on the controversy:

Tomorrow at near-by Harrington Airport Mr. Bowles is due to address another meeting of his followers.

On Monday the State Board of Education will provide transportation for the ten Negro students to the all-Negro Jason School in Georgetown. This plan, according to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, is strictly to keep the children involved from missing school altogether.

Move Is Defended

Wagner D. Jackson, president of the Wilmington branch of the N. A. A. C. P., said the plan in no sense represented a retreat from the legal position gained by the Negroes in the court decision by Vice Chancellor William Marvel on Thursday.

"In fact," said Mr. Jackson "we are hopeful the children will be back in Milford High School this week."

On Tuesday Louis D. Redding, attorney for the Negro parents, will go before Vice Chancellor Marvel to get the definitive order reinstating the children in accord with the judge's decision that they had a "clear legal right" to attend school on an integrated basis.

The Milford school board, represented by Howard E. Lynch, has a right to seek a stay of the order—but so far has not said that it would.

If the order should be granted, the Bowles group has promised to renew the boycott by white children. An earlier protest virtually shut down the school last month and led to the dropping of the Negroes from the rolls on Sept. 30. Trouble at the school gates is regarded as sure to develop should the Negro children reappear.

And on Friday, in Dover, the state capital, Delaware will try to break the back of the Bowles organization in a hearing aimed at depriving it of its charter.

Teachers Back Integration

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 16—A resolution approving racial integration in the public schools and a by-law change to integrate Negro teacher units in the Maryland State Teachers Association, Inc., were adopted at the closing session today of the association's annual convention.

Adoption of the resolution was unanimous and adoption of the by-law amendment was almost so. A motion to postpone action on the amendment for further study was defeated. Opposition to both measures had been expected when they were introduced Thursday.

Milford School Board Appeals Ruling To Readmit Negroes

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 19 (AP)—The Milford School Board today appealed to the Delaware Supreme Court to hold up an injunction issued to allow 10 Negro pupils to return to Milford's all-white high school.

Howard E. Lynch, counsel for the school, said the three-man State Supreme Court had set Friday morning in Dover for a hearing on the School Board's request.

The School Board wants the state's highest court to halt the effective date of an injunction handed down today by Vice-Chancellor William O. Marvel to allow the Negro pupils to return to classes.

N.A.A.C.P. Asked Injunction

The injunction was requested by the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People after Marvel ruled last week that the Negro pupils have the right to attend the school.

Lynch said the arguments Friday will be on whether the Supreme Court should order Marvel to hold up his order, pending disposition of arguments now before the chancellor on the integration question. If the court rules in favor of the school board, Marcel's injunction will be nullified.

If the Court rules in favor of Marvel, the injunction will go into effect Friday noon. The earliest the pupils could return to school would be next Monday, because the state's schools will be closed for two days for a teachres' meeting.

The 10 Negro students were integrated at the beginning of the present school term, under provisions of a United States Supreme Court ruling. Boycotts, inspired in part fy the National Association for The Advansement of White People, cut attendance. The Milford board ousted the Negro pupils and the State Board of Education ordered the pupils to Georgetown's all-Negro high school yesterday.

Delaware Court To Hold Hearing On School Issue

WILMINGTON, Del. Oct. 20 (AP)—The Milford School Board today appealed to the Delaware Supreme Court to hold up an injunction issued by the vice chancellor to allow 10 Negro pupils to return to Milrord's all-white high school.

Howard E. Lynch, counsel for the board, said the three-man state Supreme Court had set Friday morning in Dover as the time for a hearing on the School Board's request.

The School Board wants the state's highest court to halt the effective date of an injunction handed down today by Vice Chancellor William O. Marvel to allow the Negro pupils to return to classes.

The injunction was requested by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People after Marvel ruled last week the Negro pupils have the right to attend the school, effective Friday noon.

School Board Told to Admit Negro Pupils

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 19 (AP).—Vice Chancellor William Marvel today signed an order calling on the Milford School Board to readmit 10 Negro pupils to the all-white high school —but left the way open for the school board to appeal the order to the State Supreme Court.

Marvel already has ruled that Negroes have the right to attend the Milford school. He was asked today to grant an order and injunction, requested by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, to restrain the Milford school from keeping the Negroes out of the high school.

However, he fixed the effective date of the order and injunction as 12 p. m. Friday. This leaves three days for the school board counsel, Howard E. Lynch, to appeal the order and injunction to the Delaware Supreme Court.

That three-man court can issue a stay of the injunction which would put off its effective date until the State Supreme Court hears arguments.

If the State Supreme Court refuses to hear the school board's appeal, the earliest the pupils could return to school would be next Monday because the State's schools will be closed for two days for a teachers' meeting.

Firm Hands Quiet School Disorders

Wilmington Chicago, Ill.
Sat 10-16-54 p. 7

Eruptions in Milford, Del., Baltimore and Washington over efforts to desegregate the public schools subsided this week but not before officials, including the police, took stern measures to suppress the adult-inspired demonstrations.

In Washington, Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning emphatically stated that the schools would continue to operate in accordance to the action of the board of education and Supreme Court decision.

Corning told the students that he had confidence "in the judgement and citizenship of Washington students and that they will not endanger their educational program by demonstrations of this sort."

The tense situation in Baltimore eased after Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of schools, warned students that drastic measures would be taken against those who stayed out of school.

In every case of truancy, Fischer said, time and work would have to be made up.

And in Delaware, Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young refused to represent the Milford school board in a battle over segregation in school.

REFUSES ACTION

Young declared that "denial of admission to schools solely on the ground of race, color and ancestry represents a violation of what I believe to be the law." Edmund Steiner, Milford School Board president, accused him of shirking his duty.

In addition, Young said he would file suit against an organization known as the National Association for the Advancement of White People, led by Bryant Bowles, 36-year-old ex-Marine. The organization is accused of touching off demonstrations in Milford, Baltimore and Washington.

Backing all these officials was U. S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell. Brownell said the Justice department is watching developments and is keeping Bowles and his organization under surveillance.

However, Brownell said, "I do not see how we could act until the Supreme Court acts."

The Delaware attorney general has asked Bowles to present his books for inspection. He has been accused of "misusing the power of the corporation."

TO RESTORE INTEGRATION

Meanwhile, the Milford school board has promised to restore integration early next year. Negro children who had been attending school in Milford have been temporarily transferred to an all-Negro school in Dover.

Dr. H. C. Byrd, Democratic candidate for governor of Maryland, touched off a controversy last week when some of his remarks at a speech in Snow Hill, Md., were interpreted as favoring segregated schools. Dr. Byrd, former president of the University of Maryland, told his audience:

"You will want members of the school board appointed who will be able to act and deal in accordance with age old customs and traditions that have been a part of your way of life."

Byrd has refused to clarify the statement but aides insisted it was "perfectly clear."

Thousands of letters and telegrams have been received by school officials in Baltimore. Most of them favor school integration, a spokesman said.

Defender

It was noted during the height of the demonstrations that most of the students participating seemed to be enjoying their vacation from the class room and was not very much concerned with anything else.

LEADER QUITS

Sat. 10-16-54

A student leader of the strike in Washington public schools, Robert Dean, 18, Anacostia High school senior, gave up his fight Friday.

Dean said he still didn't want to go to school with Negroes, "But we talked with a lot of city officials and they really convinced us we can't win. They explained that when they say "Supreme Court" they really mean supreme."

Demonstrations in Washington centered around Anacostia and McKinley High schools.

Southern High was the focal point of the demonstrating in Baltimore.

Reports that the strikes were adult-inspired were supported by the admission by Rep. Davis (D.-Ga.) that he told students at Anacostia High school to strike, and at the same time castigated the Supreme Court's decision as an "outrageous attempt to force upon an unwilling people the personal and sociological views of the court."

TWO CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE IN DELAWARE SIGN NAAWP PLEDGE TO UPHOLD SEGREGATION

Delaware men sign segregation pledge

MILFORD, Del. — Two candidates for public office in Delaware have signed an NAAWP pledge to uphold segrgation if and when they are elected to office.

The two candidates are Thomas E. Pearson, a Republican, who is candidate for representative from the Third District of Ken County, and Emory Lynch, a Democrat and a candidate for Levy court commissioner from the Third District of Kent County.

The two men attended a meeting of the NAAWP at Lincoln Monday night and sighed the pledge on the invitation of Bryant Bowles, head of the NAAWP.

—o O o—

THE PLEDGE which they signed read as follows: "I do with solemnity pledge wholeheartedly to practice, promote and effect segregation of the races so help me God."

Mr. Bowles has asked all candidates in Delaware to sign such a pledge but thus far only two have responded.

—o O o—

REPUBLICAN STATE chairman Clair J. Killoran said after learning of the signing that he feels that neither of the two men can ho'd office if elected because in signing the pledge they have advocated going against a ruling of the Supreme Court.

He said state officers are required to take an oath to uphold the Constitution and that anyone opposing a Supreme Court Ruling is not upholding the Constitution.

Determinant in the situation so far has been a body of opinion dedicated not only to segregation as a way of life—a way, incidentally, preferred by many in southern Delaware who abhor violence and the evasion of law—but to the maintenance of segregation regardless of the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court.

Though this group has disavowed violence, its members burned a large wooden cross one night in a green field opposite the school. And by keeping their own children home, and by other demonstrations, they compelled the resignation of one school board. Its successor resolved the crisis by dropping the Negroes from the rolls on Sept. 30.

Segregationist Reaction

Curiously enough, there had been nine school days of integration at Milford before there was a sign of trouble.

But there was an undercurrent of segregationist complaint. On Sept. 17 a meeting overflowed the American Legion hall. A series of threatening phone calls buzzed through the Milford exchange. And there was one long distance call, to the Washington office of the "National Association for the Advancement of White People."

This brought to Sussex County one day last month Bryant W. Bowles, a 34-year-old Floridian and former Marine Corps drummer, who had founded the N. A. A. W. P. back in December, 1953. He said he had "anticipated" the United States Supreme Court decision of May 17 and the pro-Negro "pressure group" activity it would stimulate.

Mr. Bowles, who blithely admits to a police record, including convictions in Baltimore, for failing to pay workmen, brought to the Delaware segregationists the leadership they wanted. Sussex County in return furnished him with a weekly sounding board. It has been at a tiny airport and outside a p...ate garage near Milford that he has been able to draw national attention to some of the bitterest of the old clichés of "white supremacy."

At the opposite pole in the situation there is also leadership from the outside.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, through its New York and Wilmington offices, is fighting the school board action in the courts. It has won every legal round so far. Most notable was the Chancery Court ruling by Vice Chancellor William Marvel that the ten Negroes had a "clear legal right" to reinstatement. It is on this ruling that the school board has served notice of appeal.

Various Group Attitudes

In between these major forces are the people of Milford proper. They are, in the over-all, unhappy and uneasy. They fall into the following subdivisions:

(1) A number of white families who take the idea of integration as a matter of law and who have been willing to back it to the extent of keeping their children in school throughout the worst of the trouble. The minority status of this group can be gauged by the fact that white attendance at the school dropped 70 per cent during the agitation that led to the ultimate dropping of the Negroes. Moreover, many of these whites have endured personal insult and economic boycott by segregationists.

(2) A probably larger number of whites who believe in law and order but feel that integration can only cause trouble, and prefer at all costs to keep their children away from it. As was briefly the case in Washington and Baltimore, it was families like these who unintentionally played the organized segregationists' game by keeping children home from school out of sincere fear for their welfare.

(3) Whites who believe in segregation on principle, who don't want to buck the United States Supreme Court, but who feel it is up to that court to resolve the situation nationally by the implementing decrees to be handed down some time after Dec. 6. In Milford this group includes one veteran local official who acknowledges that integration is inevitable. He feels that the best interests of everyone will be served if the ten Negroes continue to attend the Georgetown school until the Supreme Court issues its decrees. After that, he feels the crisis may shape up in definitive form but that segregationism will have lost all but its most extreme following.

(4) The Milford Negro population, which is for the most part willing to proceed toward a community goal far more slowly than an organization like the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on national and urban levels. The role of these Negroes has been the most difficult; they are under pressure from all sides within their own community. Until the very last, one of the ten families refused to let its child go to Georgetown, because it felt (or had been persuaded) that this might look like a surrender of a legal position. The majority of the local Negroes appear to prefer to go slow. As one harassed Negro clergyman put it, "we feel it is immaterial to the outside world" how many of the children do or do not go to the school at Georgetown. His tone unmistakably reflected the old and certainly understandable attitude that, left to themselves, members of a small community could eventually work out their local problems.

Wide Impact

Of course, the Milford situation is not really local at all. It already has dominated the political campaign in Delaware and it is being watched by everyone interested in desegregation on a national level, across the country.

What does the Milford story mean for the future of desegregation generally?

First, it underlines the fact that tremendous problems lie ahead, when the Supreme Court decrees come to be implemented in the Deep South.

Second, it shows clearly that the psychology of the Ku Klux Klan—the burning cross, the inevitable slurs on other races and religions—can readily be activated in a border state by a combination of local conditions and outside influence.

Third, it shows to an astonishing degree the amount of ignorance that prevails on the nature of our Government and on the role of the Supreme Court.

Intrastate Conflicts

Fourth, it shows that segregationists can seize on differences of opinion, or administrative confusion, evidenced between state and local authorities.

Fifth, and most hopeful, it points up that local trouble, like that in Milford, does not necessarily affect integration throughout a state. Integration in Delaware has worked in the small northern communities of Claymont and Hockessin, where the state Supreme Court ruled, long before the May 17 decision, that existing separate facilities were not also equal facilities. It has worked in Wilmington, whose population of more than 113,000 is nearly one-third the population of the state.

And most significantly, it has worked in Dover, only twenty miles above Milford, and like it a small town, where, down the years segregation had been "a way of life."

'CAN'T HOLD BACK THE TIDE'

10 children win right to attend school

Bowles loses as judge upholds plea of NAACP

GEORGETOWN, Del. — Ten colored children have won the right to return to the high school in Milford.

This was the verdict of Judge William Marvel, a Democrat, in Chancery Court here at 2 p.m., Thursday.

Judge Marvel had before him, Tuesday, a petition filed by NAACP counsel Louis Redding and Jack Greenberg asking readmission of the children to the same high school from which they had been ousted after a racial flareup of several days.

All that remains now is for NAACP lawyers to appear before the vice chancellor of the Court of Chancery and ask him to issue the order for the children to return to school.

ATTORNEY REDDING told the AFRO, Thursday, that that step will be taken at 11:30 a.m., Tuesday, Oct. 19, at Wilmington.

An NAACP spokesman said that he expects the children will return to school either the following Wednesday or Thursday since the order can be issued by the vice chancellor immediately.

When they return, it will mark the third time that the brave band of students have entered the school.

They were first admitted for the opening of the fall term, but the school was closed because of demonstrations.

They went back under police escort when the school was reopened, but a new school board ordered them transferred to a jim-crow school in Dover. They refused to go there and have not attended school since Sept. 23.

In handing down his eight-page ruling on the motion, Thursday, Judge Marvel, a Democrat, said:

"I hold that the plaintiffs have a clear legal right to have their status as students of Milford High School preserved, pending final hearing, and that an order will be entered enjoining the defendants from denying to the plaintiffs because of color or race, their vested right to attend Milford High School."

The attorney general of the State of Delaware, Tuesday, begged the chancery court judge to readmit the colored students to the all-white school and declared that if he did so, the governor of the state, its two U.S. senators and "myself stand ready to take them by the hand and lead them back into the school."

The dramatic plea came from H. Albert Young, attorney general of the state of Delaware as Chancery Court Judge William Marvel reserved decision on a motion filed by NAACP Attorney Louis L. Redding of Wilmington, asking that 10 colored students in Milford be readmitted to Lakeview High School there.

Mr. Redding, assisted by NAACP legal counsel, Jack Greenberg, filed the motion on behalf of the children and their parents.

THE STUDENTS were admitted to the school at the start of the fall term but were dropped from its rolls after anti-integration demonstrations led by the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

The impassioned plea by the state's attorney general on behalf of the 10 children came as a distinct surprise to many of the more than 100 persons who crowded the court room hoping to see segregation upheld and another 150 who milled around the courtyard because they could not get in.

It had been supposed in some circles that the attorney general, himself, might defend the state in the action filed by Mr. Redding, but even when it was announced that Harold Lynch, a Milford lawyer, would defend the board, there were few citizens of Delaware, and certainly none among the NAAWP membership, who felt that the attorney general would take the part of the colored students against the state.

— o O o —

BUT TAKE THEIR part he did and his argument went a long way toward influencing the decision of Judge Marvel, which came Thursday afternoon. Mr. Young dramatically appeared in the courtroom and asked to be heard as "a friend of the court."

Then, to the consternation of Bryant Bowles and his NAAWP followers, he proceeded to entreat the court to issue an injunction forcing the readmission of the 10 students.

He told Judge Marvel that the 10 children had been legally admitted to the Milford school, that the Milford board had acted within the law in admitting them and that they had been expelled from school by "mob rule."

AFTER HAMMERING home the point that it was "mob rule" and nothing else which had forced the students from the school, Mr. Young then begged the court to send them back.

Declaring that it was the "law of the land" which was at stake in the matter, Mr. Young said: "Your Honor, if you issue such a decree, it will arm the authorities of this state with a weapon with which they can bring the mobs into court."

Then, visibly shaken by anger, Mr. Young added: "And if it comes to a case of preserving law and order, this state will preserve law and order. And if it becomes necessary, the governor of this state, its two United States senators and myself will take those children by the hands and lead them into the school."

THERE WERE some boos from one side of the courtroom as he made this last statement, but the boos were drowned in cheers as Judge Marvel gavelled for order in the court.

Mr. Young's friend of the court pleas came after Harvard-trained Mr. Redding had presented the court with a brilliant and masterful legal argument for readmission of the students.

Mr. Redding argued that Delaware laws give every student under 21 the right to attend free public schools and that the Supreme Court decision of May 17 gives every student the right to attend a school which is not segregated.

— o O o —

HE THEN quoted Delaware statues which showed that the Milford board had no authority to transfer the students to another school and that the state board which might have such a right under the statues had never in effect ordered them transferred.

He argued that the state board had simply made a bus available to the students and said, in effect, that they might go to school in Dover if they wished to.

Bryant Bowles, head of the NAAWP, showed up at the courthouse Tuesday morning, but arrived too late to get a seat inside and had to content himself with sitting outside the court, making snide remarks at Attorney General Young, who is seeking to have his organization's charter taken from him.

THE CROWD was orderly and well behaved both in and out of the courtroom, though it was obvious that the case was the talk of the town.

The 10 pupils, Lillian Simmons, Madeline Staten, Anne R. Thompson, Edna Turner, Irene Pettyjohn, Charles Fleming Jr., Kenneth Bayard, Orland Camp, Eugene Harris and Roland Vann, all were enrolled at the all-white school at the beginning of the fall term.

After attending school for 10 days without incident, demonstrations headed by the NAAWP caused the school to be closed to all pupils.

The school board then resigned en masse but the school was reopened with the colored pupils being given police escorts. Then a new school board was appointed and it ordered the colored children to be dropped from the school rolls.

— o O o —

THE LOCAL school board had no authority under the law to send the pupils to another school but the State School Board urged them to go to the William Henry Comprehensive High School in Dover, 20 miles away. This is a jim-crow, non-accredited high school.

The pupils refused and since Sept. 23 have attended no schools. Last Tuesday they filed the injunction asking admission to the "white" school again.

Meanwhile, however, their parents, becoming concerned over the amount of school work they were missing, have agreed that the students should enroll at the jim-crow school while awaiting the outcome of the motion for the injunction.

Through it all the 10 pupils have shown the highest moral courage in the controversy raging around them.

— o O o —

THIS REPORTER has seen them bravely smile as they walked through hostile mobs under police escorts on their way to the white school.

All kinds of names have been hurled at them by the mobs and yet not one has refused to show up whenever NAACP officials and their parents have asked them to return to school. Six are girls and four are boys.

Much credit should also be given to the Rev. Randolph Fisher of Milford, NAACP branch head, and Attorney Redding, Wagner D. Jackson, NAACP state president; Dr. Kenneth Clark, NAACP psychiatric expert; June Shagloff, Dr. Clark's assistant, and the parents who have stuck with their children all the way in the controversy.

ON EACH TRIP to Milford this reporter can be assured of finding the 10 children, their parents and NAACP officials standing together, virtually a group against the whole city for they have always been outnumbered at least 100 to one in any of the flareups.

At week's end it appeared that the controversy has invaded the realm of politics and many political observers saw in the attorney general's firm action Tuesday, a bid by the Republican administration in the state to recapture or hold on to the strong colored vote centered around Wilmington.

Del. High Court sets new hearing for December 23

Baltimore, Md.

Ten children must remain in school 18 miles away

By JAMES L. HICKS

DOVER, Del. — Democracy took another dip in Milford, Delaware, Friday as the State Supreme Court ruled that there are "serious questions of law" as to whether ten colored children have the legal right to enter Milford's all white high school and set Dec. 23 as the date for argument in the case.

In handing down the ruling the supreme court thus granted a stay of an injunction previously hande ddown by Vice Chancellor William Marvel in which Judge Marvel had ordered the children readmitted to Milford high school after holding that they had a clear and legal right to attend there.

The supreme court's ruling came on an appeal from Judge Marvel's ruling made by the Milford school board.

IN SUMMARY, it was a temporary setback for Louis Redding, attorney and the NAACP which will have the effect of maintaining the status quo of the muddled Milford school situation until sometime after December 13.

This means that the ten children who were once students of the all white high school, but who are now attending a jim crow school in Georgetown, must continue to remain there until final arguments can be held on Judge Marvel's injunction.

It does not mean that the NAACP has suffered a reversal in its attempt to get the children back in school. Judge Marvel's injunction ordering the children back to school still stands in effect.

FRIDAY'S ARGUMENT was on whether the injunction was improperly issued by Judge Marvel.

The supreme court in granting the stay of the injunction was merely saying that it would like to probe further into the question before permitting it to go into effect.

The court pointed out in staying the injunction that its action neither expressed or intimated merits of the case itself.

After Mr. Redding and Howard Lynch had presented arguments before the three-man supreme court for two hours Friday the court recessed.

Christian Science Monitor

TWO HOURS later it returned with its opinion which said in part, "from a reading of the pleadings and the affidavits, arguments of counsel and such examination of the briefs we have been able to make during the recess, we are convinced that there are serious questions of law touching the existence of that legal right" (the right of the ten children to attend Milford High School).

Pub. Nov. 2

"It is therefore the unanimous opinion of the court that appellant's application for a stay should be granted. In announcing this decision, the court neither expresses nor intimates any opinion upon the merits of the case."

The granting of the stay was a hard blow to Attorney Redding and his faithful little band of supporters, who have joined him in bucking the Delaware mob rule almost singlehandedly.

IT MEANT that Redding, who has virtually deserted a lucrative law practice in Wilmington, must continue to struggle with the case until the end of the year.

The burden becomes double when it is realized that Redding, as a lawyer in the Delaware school cases, must also appear before the U.S. Supreme Court the week of December 6 to present final arguments to the court on its decision of May 17.

Friday's hearing could have ended the Milford situation and the children would have returned to school Monday if the court had not granted a stay of the injunction.

The session of the court was held in a room which [illegible] by only 21 persons. Fourteen newspaper reporters showed up for the hearing and only six of them were admitted.

THIS REPORTER, who was finally admitted, was one of a delegation of eight reporters who personally went to the offices of Governor Caleb Boggs of Delaware to lodge a complaint against officials, who would not permit the press in the courtroom.

Governor Boggs told the reporters "There is nothing I can do about it."

The delegation included reporters from radio, TV, Time Magazine, the wire services, the Chicago Defender and the AFRO.

It has become obvious that Delaware does not want outside reporters to cover its school incidents and all sessions dealing with the subject are held in as small a room as possible to cut down on their attendance.

THE ONLY colored persons in the court Friday other than reporters was Wagner D. Jackson, NAACP official from Wilmington, who was forced to sit at the counsel table with Attorney Redding.

The Rev. Randolph Fisher Milford NAACP branch head, was unable to get into the courtroom.

This reporter could not bribe or buy his way into the hearing just across the state capitol grounds where the attorney general in another court action sued to take away the charter of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

Bryant Bowles, head of the NAAWP, announced beforehand that he would not be present at the hearings but would be represented by his two lawyers.

The hearing, held in a small courtroom, like the supreme court case, came simultaneously with the hearing on the injunction.

REPORTERS LEAVING the injunction hearing found the courtroom filled when they arrived.

The session was concerned with remarks by the attorney general, which attempted to show that the NAAWP had violated its charter by violating state laws.

State Attorney General Young asked for a preliminary injunction to prevent the NAAWP from soliciting memberships, and obtaining contributions in Delaware.

Three Counties and Night and Day

Delaware Tiny But Split on Segregation

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

DOVER, Del.—The tiny state of Delaware is divided into three counties—New Castle, Kent and Sussex—and each is as different as night and day.

Especially is this true when you take a good look at the school desegregation program.

In northern Delaware, just a short jump from Philadelphia, you find New Castle County, and in it rests the biggest city of the state, Wilmington.

MAINLY BECAUSE of school suits brought by the NAACP, Wilmington has been desegregating its schools since 1952. At present only elementary schools are included in the integration program.

The county also lays claim to such cities as Newark and New Castle. In Newark, the junior and senior high schools are enrolling both Negro and white pupils, and in New Castle both races attend the ninth grade through the twelfth grades on an integrated level.

Negro residents of the state also attend the University of Delaware at Newark.

Arden and Hackesson in New Castle County has partial integration.

KENT COUNTY, beautiful in its old colonial setting, stretches across the middle of the state and its pride and joy is the capital city, imposing little Dover.

Dover is a sophisticated little city so to speak, and goes about what it has to do quietly and calmly. Spurred by the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in schools, officials of Dover's special school district decided to take a stab at this thing called integration.

All-white Dover High was thrown open to ninth grade Negro pupils in September after members of the special school board had called meetings of colored and white parents to discuss the matter.

NINETEEN NEGROES enrolled at formerly all-white Dover High. Later, nine dropped out and returned to the all-Negro Henry High School.

They dropped out for various reasons, Some wanted to be with their friends, while others felt that they were not interested in a strict academic school program.

Henry High offers the necessary academic courses, but stresses vocational work.

Of the ten Negroes remaining at Dover High, eight will finish with flying colors and two will fail. That is the opinion of Negro and white educators.

THE CHANGE-OVER in Dover was not done without incident. Some white parents, mostly of the low-income group, protested. One parent kept her children out of school for one day.

Some white kids pinned "hate" notes on the school bulletin board but these were quickly removed by observing teachers.

Teachers and the principal, Marvell L. Vehslage, received threatening telephone calls but these were ignored.

The success of the Dover change-over is traced to advance preparation. Plans for partial desegregation were discussed and outlined in public meetings long before the September opening of school.

AND THE would-be rabble-rousers and lily-whites in Dover know that police officials are prepared for any flareups or violence and that a group of 120 white people in Dover has banded together for the purpose of helping the police department preserve law and order.

Although Dover High can now be classed as a mixed school, Principal Vehslage said: "We don't consider what we are doing as integration or desegregation yet. The board wanted to do something this year and we agreed to admit Negroes to the ninth grade . . . Most people here are more concerned with law and order than they are with integration or desegregation."

Whatever they call it, Dover is getting a taste of it in three spots. Most significant is the situation at ultra-modern Henry High School, a school for Negroes in Kent County and directed by Principal Harley F. Taylor, an industrious civic leader and business man.

Principal Taylor last September employed two white persons, a Frenchman and his California wife. The man teaches French and English and his wife is secretary to Mr. Taylor. "Integration works two ways," said Mr. Taylor.

OVER ON the other end of town where sits imposing Delaware State College, headed by that former athletic great of Cornell University, Dr. Jerome (Brud) Holland, is another encouraging picture of integration.

Three white students are attending the formerly all-Negro state college and numbered among its faculty are four white teachers.

Integration on the campus actually was started last year with two white teachers and two white students.

THE INTEGRATION picture is fair in northern New Castle County and could be called encouraging in middle Kent County, but when you move through the southern county of Sussex you send a wire to your mother and say: "Mom, I'm in Georgia again."

With the exception of the city of explosive Milford, which straddles both Sussex and Kent counties, no attempt has been made to desegregate schools on the southern tip of the state.

Whereas New Castle County is greatly influenced by the actions and mores of Philadelphia, Sussex County picks up a lot of its ways and meanness from nearby eastern Maryland and northern Virginia.

IN FACT, when Bryant W. Bowles, better known in these parts as "Mr. Hitler," invaded Milford and initiated trouble that eventually resulted in eleven Negro children being kicked out of the formerly all-white high school, his chief henchmen and rabble-rousers were followers from Virginia and Maryland.

Milford, like Dover, decided to follow the edict of the Supreme Court and open its white high school to Negro students. But, unlike Dover, Milford failed to prepare its white citizenry for the sudden change-over. There were no meetings with parents, no discussions. The board decided that the white schools would be open and that was that.

"Those people down there don't know what the Supreme Court decision means," said a responsible person in northern Delaware. "They need education."

THERE WERE rumbles and mumbles in Milford and throughout Sussex County when the eleven 1954 graduates of all-Negro Banneker Elementary School enrolled in the formerly all-white school.

The protesters were ripe for action, but they had no leader. And, then along came this man Bowles. And all hell broke. They had been waiting for someone to stir 'em up and they really got stirred.

The Hitlers demanded that the Negroes be barred from the formerly all-white school. The school board sat pat and held to its decision to integrate.

TWO BRAVE, Negro parents, spurred by the NAACP and protected by local police, braved the mob and carried the children to school.

The Milford School Board received no outside help from the Governor and so it resigned. The schools were closed and the newly appointed school board, aided and abetted by that man Bowles, reopened the schools but denied Negreos admission to the formerly all-white high school.

The NAACP filed an injunction calling for the school to be reopened to Negro pupils, but no action had been taken by the Chancery Court at this writing.

THE FEELING throughout Delaware is that once the Supreme Court hands down a clear-cut edict after the Dec. 6 hearing, all schools will be thrown open to Negroes and whites in the state.

A clear-cut decision by the U. S. Supreme Court and a command from the state capital calling for full integration will wipe out school segregation completely in Delaware in another year, but the big question is: "What is going to happen to the Negro teachers?"

Teachers in this state do not have tenure law. In other words, they get a year-to-year contract, and although Negro teachers, comparatively speaking, are better educated and own more degrees than white teachers in the grade schools, there is still some fear existing among the Negro tutors.

DELAWARE HAS a peculiar school setup. There is a general state board of education and each of the counties has a county board of education. Yet, in the larger cities, you'll find a separate setup known as a "Special School District," and this, too, has its own officials. And then each school has a board of trustees.

Hiring of teachers is left up to the county boards or the board of trustees. Inasmuch as there is no tenure law in the state, Negro teachers feel that they may be overlooked when full integration does take place.

Negro county schools in the rurals are certain to be wiped out eventually, and county high schools in the towns or cities that serve the entire county on the Negro high school level may be turned into vocational schools for both white and colored pupils.

FOR INSTANCE, the William W. M. Henry Comprehensive High School in Dover is fed Negro students from five surrounding towns.

Once integration is in full operation, Negroes in these five surrounding towns will attend the nearest white schools, which means the enrollment at Henry High will be cut by 60 to 80 per cent.

Its only hope for continuing is to be converted into a junior high or vocational school for whites and Negroes.

Teachers are placing a lot of faith in their board of trustees or local school boards because most boards controlling Negro schools are composed of Negroes or Negroes and whites.

DELAWARE'S ENTIRE population is approximately 350,000, and only 33,000 of these are colored citizens.

The Catholics, who have paved the way for mixed schools throughout the South, are not too strong in this state, but all of their schools are open to Negro and white.

Negro leadership in Dover played an important role in bringing about the admission of colored pupils to formerly all-white Dover High. The parent-teacher association and the NAACP joined hands with Board of Education officials in working out plans.

It was learned that the P-TA suggested sending only select Negro students to Dover High, but the NAACP insisted that all Negro pupils, whether they had earned good grades or not, should attend the school.

TWO NEGRO pupils of note are attending Dover High. One is talented Cherritta Laws, 12, daughter of school teachers, and the other is Marshall Arnell, son of a Negro father and a Filipino mother. Marshall was elected treasurer of the ninth grade class at Dover High.

In one Delaware town, Harrington, where the doors of the white school were thrown open to ninth grade colored pupils, no Negroes showed up for registration.

Much credit for action taken to battle that man Bowles and the rabble-rousers in Milford and Sussex County goes to the white clergymen, the Council of Churches and the Catholics.

DURING THE height of the flareup in Milford, thirty-five workers walked out of a factory because the owner of the factory carried his daughter to the

Ten Students Go to Court Over Ousting

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERS Jr.

MILFORD, Del. — The ten Negro students who refused to attend the all-colored Henry High School in Dover after being thrown out of the white school here and then took out an injunction against the school board, are: Lillian Simmons, Madeline Staten, Annie Ruth Thompson, Edna Turner, Irene Pettyjohn, Charles Fleming Jr., Kenneth Baynard, Orlando Camp, Eugene Harris and Donald Vann.

Dover High School Integrated Without Any 'Trouble' at All

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA Jr.

Dover, Del.—Two very bright youngsters, among the first Negroes to enroll in the ninth grade class of Dover High School here, said they have had no trouble at all.

'Leader'—Surrounded by a cordon of reporters and photographers is a typical example of the kind of people that made up the Milford, Del., anti-integrationists. This woman was identified as "a leader," but she would not talk for publication nor would she give her name.—Rivera Photo.

Negroes here and in the middle section of Delaware, as in White Sulphur Springs and Four States, W. Va., were prepared to defend themselves and their children had it ever become necessary.

But, this would have been a last resort. The excellent leadership supplied by the NAACP advised Negroes to remain calm.

THEY WERE advised against meeting violence with violence: "Let the whites fight among themselves," they were told. "We'll fight it out in the courts."

The Rev. Randolph Fisher, a dapper little man, pastor of St. Paul Methodist Church here and president of the local branch of the NAACP, accepted us into his home cautiously.

He was on guard, and who could blame him? Milford is hot! There is a deceptive quiet throughout the city. Any minute you expect some fool to come along and drop a lighted match into the racial powder keg.

FINALLY, he said: "There are no rabbits here among us.

"Right now, it is a matter of seeing who wins—the law or mob rule," the Rev. Mr. Fisher added.

Asked what happened to cause whites to oppose Negroes attending the former all-white school in Milford, the minister replied: "It was a matter of bad leadership getting to the community first."

"Were the Negroes here afraid of the mob?" he asked.

THE YOUNG leader scratched his chin and said: "Several times I had to hold them in line."

"A sore doesn't heal over night," he added.

He thought again and said: "Whites who merely spoke to me downtown before the flare-up now speak, and smile when they speak."

He didn't know why.

Pastor of the largest Negro church in Milford, the Rev. Mr. Fisher, who has been here five years, is recognized as one of the fearless leaders of the town.

MELVIN STATEN was one of the two fathers, aided by police and supported by the NAACP and Negro citizens of Milford, who braved the mob and carried Negro children into the formerly all-white high school here.

"We're not running," said Mr. Staten. "The ball is rolling and everyone is hoping that we carry through. Many white friends want to see it go through."

William Fountain was the other father who waded through the Milford mob to get the colored children into the school.

Staten, Fountain, the Rev. Mr. Fisher, undertaker Perry A. Reece and Charles Fleming, along with some of the mothers and their high school children, journeyed to Wilmington to discuss final matters with NAACP Atty. Louis Redding before the hearing on the ouster of the eleven Negro children came up last week before the Chancery Court.

Milford's Negroes Say 'We Are Not Running'

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

MILFORD, Del.—"There are no rabbits here!" These power-packed words fell from the lips of a courageous Negro minister, one of the leaders who fearlessly faced Bryant W. Bowles' mob in the fight over the heated school segregation issue.

In stronger words, a Negro trucker and father said: "We are not running."

What these two gentlemen said added up to this—Negroes are no longer afraid of the mob.

They don't run and hide any more when Kluxers burn a cross on their lawn. They know that they must pay a price for their full freedom and they have the courage to do just that.

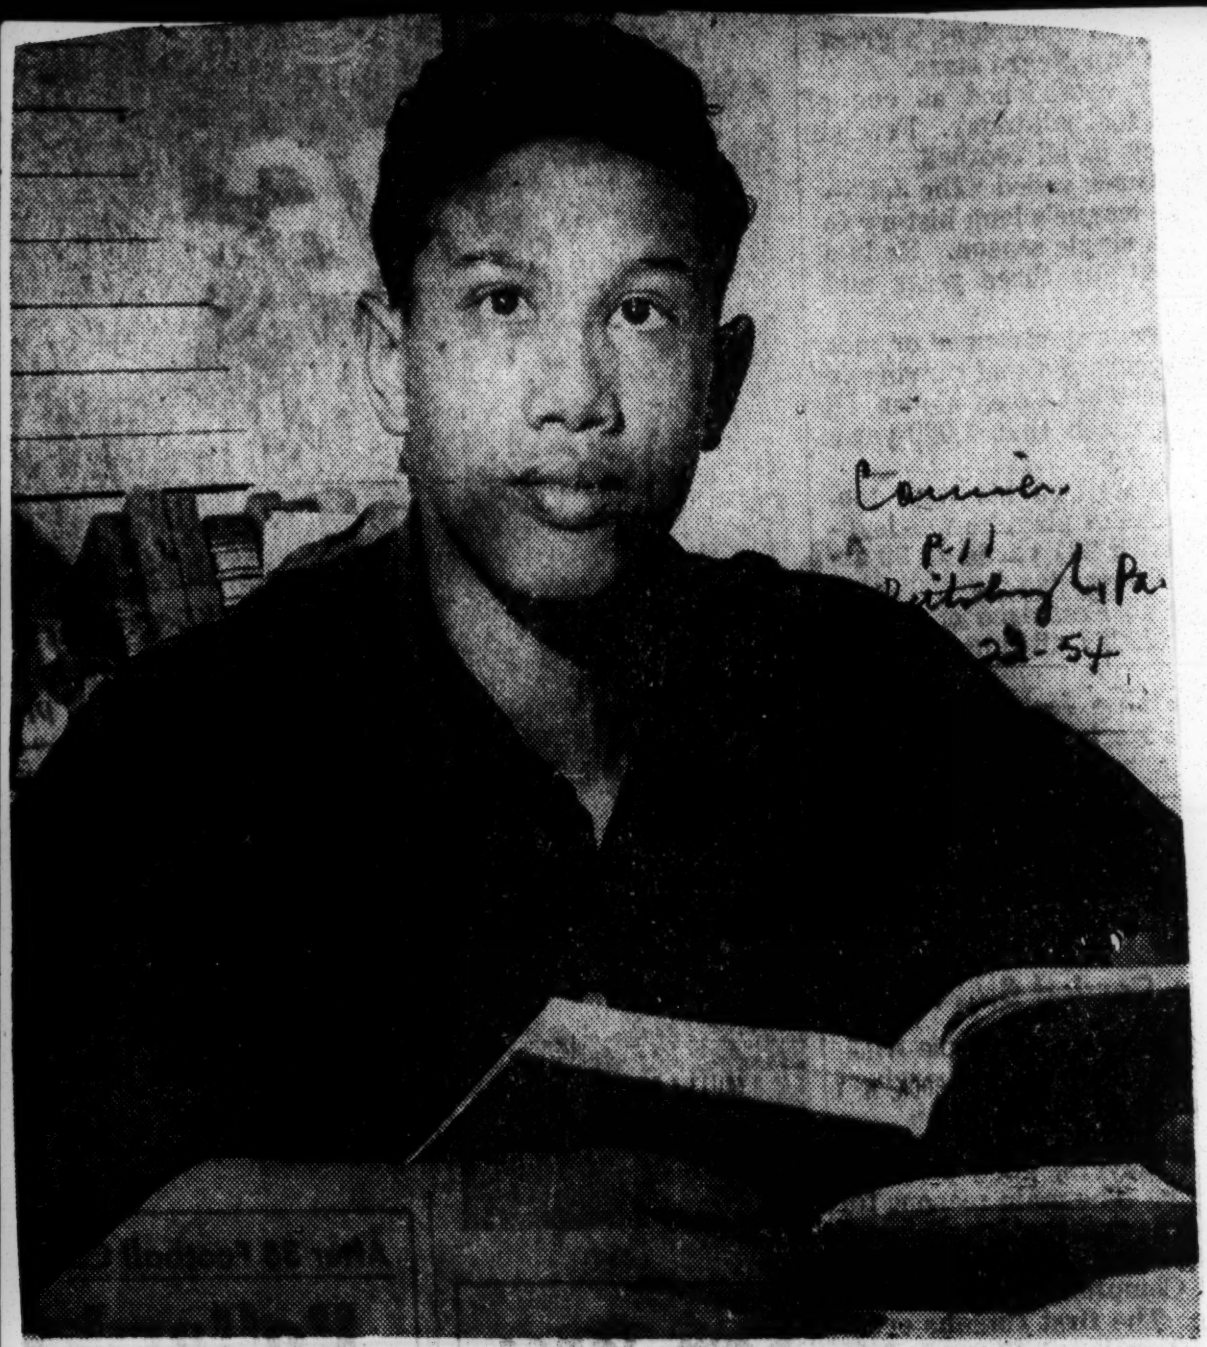
EVEN THOUGH the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court has wiped out school segregation, Negroes know that they must cross the picket lines and face the rabble-rousers before this thing actually works.

That's exactly what's happening in this explosive little town of Milford, Del., located in the southern part of the three-county state and commonly referred to as "Georgia."



They Like Him—Marshall Arnell, son of Negro and Filipino parents, has been elected treasurer of the ninth grade class since he became one of the first Negroes to enroll at formerly all-white Dover High School in Dover, Del. He's also a member of the high school football team.—Rivera Photo.

Doors close again—

Violence threatened in Delaware schools

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 21—(AP)—This community's two public schools were closed again today in the face of telephoned threats of violence if Negro children were allowed to attend classes in the previously all-white high school.

Dr. Raymond C. Cobbs, superintendent of the Milford schools, had announced earlier the schools would open as usual today after being closed yesterday.

However, Dr. Cobbs issued a statement shortly after 8 a.m. in which he said the schools will be closed until further notice "in the interest of the safety of all the children."

The statement said:

"Members of the board of education since making an earlier announcement have received numerous calls threatening violence in case any Negro children attend school. In the interest of the safety of all the children the board hereby serves notice that the schools are closed until further notice."

A DETAIL of five policemen arrived at the school along with several of the schools' teachers. The teachers entered the building, while the policemen spread around the building to keep watch.

Dr. Cobbs declined to elaborate on his statement as tension mounted in this quiet southeastern Delaware community. The situation developed yesterday when the Milford school board closed the schools after learning of a protest march planned by anti-integrationists.

Although the school board, composed of three business men and a housewife, had called for resumption of classes today, it left unanswered the question of whether 11 Negro pupils would be allowed to take up their high school studies.

MEANWHILE, several hundred miles away in Dayton, Ohio, Atty. Russell L. Carter prepared petitions on behalf of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People asking the United States District Court to enjoin what Negro leaders call segregation in the Hillsboro, Ohio, school system.

Mrs. Miley O. Williamson, regional coordinator in Dayton for the NAACP, said, "The Hillsboro action is designed as a test case for racial segregation in northern schools."

School board officials in the Southwestern Ohio community of some 5000 insisted there is no segregation. And city officials said a rezoning of the city's school districts—tending to keep most Negroes out of previously all-white Webster and Washington Grade Schools—was on a "residential" rather than a racial basis. The rezoning took effect last week.

IN ANOTHER North-South border point, Madison, W. Va., parents sat down last night with the County Board of Education to discuss the integration of Negro and white students while at nearby Seth picketing students brought the problem to a head.

From 15 to 20 student pickets roamed in front of Sherman High School in Seth in protest over the enrollment of three Negroes in the student body of about 700.

The Madison meeting followed which announced last night that Milford's schools would be reopened on Monday without segregation. The local Board took its stand despite anonymous threats of violence and protests by a large group opposing integration.

The two public schools in Milford have been closed since Monday because of threats directed against the Negro pupils, six boys and five girls, who were admitted to the Lakeview Avenue School at the start of the fall term Sept. 8.

Until then, the school, a combined elementary and high school with an enrollment of 687, had been for white pupils only. Negro children of the Milford area attended the Benjamin Banneker School through the ninth grade and, before this month, had to continue their education in schools for their race in this city or at Georgetown, eighteen miles south of Milford.

The Milford board has been criticized for not giving residents of the area advance notice of its intention of starting the integration program in conformity with the Federal Supreme Court's outlawing of segregation.

In similar cases, the state Board of Education has backed district school authorities, holding that all Delaware public schools should adopt integration as soon as possible.

Legal Chief Backs Board

The state board is supported by Gov. J. Caleb Boggs and H. Albert Young, Attorney General of Delaware. Mr. Young advised the Milford board members that they had acted within the provisions of the Delaware and Federal Constitutions.

The Milford board, reduced to three by the resignation of one member this week, has said that it would resign in a body if the state board did not support its decision to reopen the Milford schools Monday.

In Milford, Mayor Edward C. Evans and Chief of Police Samuel G. Powell said that no new threats of violence had been reported in the last two days. They added that they did not expect any trouble unless outside agitators came into Milford.

In this connection, Mayor Evans exhibited anti-integrationist pamphlets, entitled The National Forum. The pamphlets had been found by residents in their cars this morning, the Mayor said.

Mr. Evans said that the police had been instructed to arrest anyone found distributing such literature. The lead article in the pamphlet, which was headlined, "Left-wing Papers Lie to Northerners," expressed a violent anti-integration point of view. Another item said that "career men are leaving the integrated armed forces."

Mayor Evans called for "level-headed thinking" and said he did "not believe that any person in Milford or in the area surrounding our city wants to see trouble that might result in serious consequences for all of us."

Paris C. Kirby, operator of a farm at Milford Neck and a leader of the segregation proponents, said that his group would not decide on a course of action until the State Board of Education had announced its decision.

Sewanee Admits Negro

SEWANEE, Tenn., Sept. 23 (AP)—A Georgia Negro has become the first member of his race to attend regular winter sessions at the University of the South Theological Seminary here, officials of the Protestant Episcopal Church-supported institution reported today.

Bishop E. P. Dandridge, Dean of the seminary, identified the student as Merrick Collier of Savannah.

Mr. Collier's application was the first for the regular three-year theological course, the dean said. He is not, however, the first Negro to take up studies at the university. Bishop Dandridge said that a Negro had attended the post-graduate school in the summer of 1953.

The Sewanee board of trustees voed overwhelmingly in June, 1953, to consider all applications for admission to the School of Theology—regardless of race.

DELAWARE BOARD WEIGHS BIAS ISSUE

Backing Expected for Milford Panel's Decision to Push Integration in Schools

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

DOVER, Del., Sept. 23—The State Board of Education met here tonight to consider the "ticklish situation" created by the enrollment of eleven Negro pupils in the tenth grade of the previously all-white senior high school at Milford, twenty miles south of the state capital.

There was no indication as to when the board would make its decision known. However, the ruling was expected to uphold the Milford Board of Education,

Tense Delaware Area Flooded By Antisegregation Pamphlets

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 23 (AP) — Hundreds of antisegregation pamphlets have been distributed in the current row about Negroes attending Wilmington township schools with whites.

Mayor Edward C. Evans said the pamhplets were signed by "Bryan Bowles" who is not further identified. Printed on both sides of a single 9 by 12 sheet of paper, the pamphlet text carries the headline:

The text in part reads:

"I (Bowles) have just returned from a tour of the Southern states to check newspaper reports on Southern reaction to the U.S. Supreme Court's 'Black Monday.'".

"I found 99 per cent of the black and white people opposed to mixing their children.

"I found people who are threatening to move from their states if the states adhere to the court ruling.

"I found people who threatened to dynamite the schools if this goes through. . . ."

The pamphlet also contains a cartoon showing a Negro walking through a cottonfield with a fishing pole on his shoulder. The caption underneath reads: "I'm a ramblin' wreck from Georgia Tech and a Supreme Court engineer."

Powder keg in Delaware—

Border town faces segregation crisis

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 24—(AP)—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs demanded today Milford High School be reopened Monday to both white and Negro pupils "without incident."

The governor issued his order as the State Board of Education prepared to take over operation of the Milford school district after the local school board resigned last night amid mounting tension over racial integration at the community's only high school.

"I must insist that no disorders, threats or violence take place," Boggs said. "I call upon every citizen, regardless of his personal views, to see that law and order and calmness prevail."

Boggs also asked all organizations in the school district to call meetings "so that I or other persons available may meet and discuss calmly and fully the situation."

"This is important in upholding law and order and the dignity of the state and its citizens," Gov. Boggs said.

"I must say frankly that law and order will be preserved under the law and the American way. I know that the citizens of Milford and Delaware will have it no other way."

Leaders of the anti-integration group were reported to be planning a mass meeting for either tonight or tomorrow to consider a course of action. However, leaders could not be reached for comment.

The Milford school board resigned last night at a meeting with the state board in nearby Dover, the state capital.

The local board's attempt to institute integration of Negro and white high school pupils at the formerly all-white combination elementary and grade school had led to threats of violence.

"We feel we are too close to the situation to accept the responsibility of opening the schools Monday morning with Negro students," Atty. Howard E. Lynch, speaking for the Milford board, explained.

THE STATE BOARD'S decision encountered a "wait and see" attitude in this Southeastern Delaware community that has become a focal point in the segregation issue. Milford has a population of 5700 but some 14,000 persons reside within the school district.

Milford's schools originally opened Sept. 7 with 11 Negro students registered along with 686 white pupils for the high school classes. However, the school—along with an all-Negro elementary school—was closed following the threat of violence if the local board tried to maintain integration.

The state board said last night the local school officials had not followed procedure in the integration. The state board had ordered local school districts to submit integration plans by Oct. 1. Milford was the only district in the state to put an integration plan into effect prior to submitting it to the state board.

The spokesman for the anti-integration group, Russell V. Bradley, had complained earlier this week that some of the objection resulted because the local board "didn't tell us these Negroes were to be admitted to school this term. They could have waited until the Supreme Court figures out how they're going to run this thing so it won't be so much of a problem."

Anti-integration pamphlets were circulated anonymously in Milford yesterday.

Signed by a person identifying himself as "Bryan Bowles," they purported to describe a tour of Southern states by "Bowles" to check reaction to the U. S. Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation in public schools.

THE PAMPHLETS stated that "99 per cent of the black and white people" in the South are "opposed to mixing their children" and that some persons have "threatened to dynamite" Southern schools if integration goes through.

Mayor Edward C. Evans ordered an investigation into the source of the pamphlets. He said they are entitled "The National Forum" and are published under the name of "The National Assn. for the Advancement of White People."

ANSWERING a suit aimed at ending public school integration the board of school commissioners at Baltimore has said "there is no valid, constitutional law requir

The board made its view known in a demurrer to the mandamus suit filed recently by parents of seven school children, the Maryland Petition Committee and the National Assn., for the Advancement of White People. The suit contended the city is required by law to maintain segregated schools.

The petition was received by the school board early this week. It bore the names of 19 Brewton Negro parents and the signature of Peter A. Hall, Birmingham Negro lawyer and attorney for the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People.

Charlie Harris told reporters he and his wife, Margareen did not sign the petition. Percie Black, a school teacher, said she could not have signed it because she did not agree with it.

Broox Garrett, school board chairman, said the board had accepted the petition as a bona fide document. No date has been set for the board to consider the request.

The petition, similar to one received by the Montgomery Board of Education recently, had offered the services of the Brewton NAACP branch in assisting in drawing up a desegregation program for the city schools.

DELAWARE TOWN SPLIT BY CRISIS

Milford Schools Due to Reopen Today; Many Citizens Fear Trouble

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 26 (AP)—A crisis over race relations has shaken this town of 5,700 to its roots. And many residents fear that before the question of integrating white and Negro high school pupils is settled, there will be scars—both physical and mental.

This town's two schools, closed a week because of threatened race violence, are scheduled to reopen tomorrow. But some citizens are still seeking to stop any classes with Negro and white students.

Milford is a normal small town, U.S.A. It is in the southeastern section of the Delaware peninsula near the Delaware Bay.

Agricultural Town.

Agriculture supplies 90 per cent of the town's economic lifeblood.

Since the turn of the century race relations have been friendly until four weeks ago. Then 11 Negroes registered for classes in the all-white combination high-and-elementary school.

The thing started when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that school segregation was unconstitutional. Delaware has segregation.

What happened, then, in Delaware after the court ruled?

In Wilmington, school officials decided to start integration at the first-grade level, allowing separate classes for whites and Negroes in the upper grades.

Downstate, on Sept. 7, the 11 pupils who had graduated from the all-Negro Benjamin Banneker Elementary School applied for admission to the all-white Lakeview Avenue High School.

Previously, Negro pupils had to attend high school in all-Negro schools in either Dover or Georgetown, 18 miles from Milford.

None of the 237 elementary pupils at Benjamin Banneker applied for enrollment at Lakeview.

Classes opened at both Lakeview and Banneker on Sept. 8. All went well. The school board plus school officials were satisfied that integration was working.

But on Sept. 17, a meeting was held. No one knows who called it, but 1,500 persons showed up. No Negroes were present. Petitions to fight integration were circulated.

On Monday morning, another mass meeting mushroomed at the Lakeview school.

Russell V. Bradley, a husky fortyish mechanic, conducted the meeting. He said:

"I'm not against Negroes or opposed to them or anything else. We're law-abiding people here and if we have to have integration we might not like it but we'll accept it. But I think this thing has been badly mismanaged by the school board. They didn't tell us these Negroes were to be admitted to school this term. They could have waited until the court figures out how they're going to run this thing so it won't be so much of a problem."

As the mass meeting broke up, Board President Dean Kimmel was handed the petition with 1,002 names. It called for the discharge of the 11 Negro pupils from the 10th grade before school reopened.

The board met that night (Sept. 20)—behind closed doors. Outside citizens stood around, getting more and more impatient.

Finally, Kimmel and School Superintendent Ramon C. Cobbs announced the schools would reopen Tuesday.

The board went home to be greeted by a deluge of phone calls threatening violence if the Negro pupils returned.

Kimmel and the board issued a statement closing the schools until further notice.

The situation simmered a few days, with the youngsters—white and Negro—taking advantage of the unexpected holiday.

Crisis In Board.

Last Wednesday the board met again. It now had only three members. The fourth had resigned. This time, the board decided to reopen the community's two schools tomorrow—again "without segregation."

It coupled this announcement with a threat: The three members would quit if the state board of education overruled them.

Thursday the state board rebuked the Milford board for putting integration into effect, but said that since the deed was done—it was done. The state board said local boards had been asked to submit plans for integration before placing them in operation.

This rebuke nettled the three Milford members and they resigned. Now the state board, temporarily, is operating the two Milford schools. They'll reopen tomorrow with Negro students integrated.

But opponents of integration haven't given up the fight yet. And police are ready for any emergency.

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs urged the community to obey the law. He said he wouldn't tolerate violence and it's a safe bet he'd call out the Delaware National Guard if there is any chance of a disturbance.

How do the other citizens of the community feel?

G. Marshall Townsend, editor of the Milford Chronicle, said "I don't think I've ever heard so many reports, rumors and conversation. This thing is tremendous in its implications. Potentially, it's dynamite."

James C. Davis, president of the First National Bank feels the same way about the situation as Albert Williams, president of the Milford Trust Co.

"We have both white and Negro depositirs in our bank. Most of them are long-time residents of the community and naturally this thing bothers all of them, not just the whites."

The Rev. Randolph H. Fisher, president of the Sussex County Chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, has been the spokesman for the 11 Negro pupils. He sums up his feelings this way:

"Before the eyes of God we know we are right. All we ask is equal opportunity, nothing more."

What Other Newspapers Say

Dr. Rivers Fredericks

(From the New Orleans Times-Picayune.)

The death of Dr. Rivers Frederick brings to a close a long and respected career that has earned for the Negro physician and surgeon recognition extending far beyond New Orleans.

The octogenarian, who had been chief of the surgical department of Flint-Goodridge hospital of Dillard university, was intensely interested in the welfare of New Orleans' large Negro population. For many years he had been in the forefront of efforts to better its economic condition, and much that has been accomplished is credited to his zeal and energy.

As a young man he had practiced medicine briefly in Central America and the West Indies, but most of his medical career, embracing over 50 years, had been spent here.

His many honors included the first Dillard university award to an alumnus for meritorious achievments. Another was the citation at the annual assembly of the International College of Surgeons in Florence, Italy. Recently he received the Distinguished Service Award of the National Medical Association.

Dr. Frederick was a simple man of temperance, moderation and dignity — a humanitarian looked up to and was revered by the people with whom he worked and lived, and to whom he ministered. The community loses by his passing.

In Three States

(St. Louis Post Dispatch)

Down in Arkansas the Democratic party has placed three Negroes on its state committee. This is partial fulfillment, pending the consideration of other prospective Negro members of the pledge of Arkansas Democrats to put six Negroes on the committee. No such attention has been paid to Negroes in Arkansas politics since the Civil War.

From New York comes the news that the Metropolitan Opera has signed a contract with Marian Anderson, surely one of the greatest vocalists of our times. She will be the first Negro to sing in Metropolitan productions.

In Delaware race-hatred fomenter Bryant Bowles is under arrest for conspiring to break the state's public education law in his rabble-rousing fight on the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

Every day that passes marks progress in the battle to make the United States the land of equal rights and equal opportunity envisioned by the Founding Fathers.

Desegregation: Many-Sided Issue

(From The New York Herald Tribune)

The first session of this year's Herald Tribune Forum, opened up the problem of desegregation in the nation's schools in all its challenge and diversity. Last May 17 the Supreme Court announced that henceforth in the nation's law the doctrine of "separate and equal" has no place. How did the country respond? What is being done to translate basic law into the living practice of the community? These questions were answered by a variety of speakers, stressing the human side of the task, as well as the economic, legal and sociological aspects.

When much else will have become blurred, there will undoubtedly remain in the minds of those who attended the image of the two young girls, their names and home towns not revealed, who had wanted to play the flutes together in their high school orchestra but had found themselves under the ban of their color-conscious elders. The image will remain of the Negro school teacher whose common sense and inspired example helped make possible integration in one Delaware high school even before the Supreme Court had spoken. These were dramatic and human touches in the evening's program; but no one will underestimate the solid contribution of facts and comprehension made by other speakers.

The changing economy of the South, which forms the context within which all other problems must be solved; the institutions, such as labor unions and the church, which provide channels of understanding among people; the educational press which gives objective information and the survey which reveals a community to itself—these were described and documented.

The record to date, needless to say, is mixed. There are places and examples that stand as bright threads in the pattern of American development. There are some others of a different and more somber hue. There is a Claymont and also (less happily) a Milford. Yet the advance already made is notable, and the next steps, as Mr. Thurgood Marshall indicated in his closing address, cannot but be forward—not alone in the field of education but wherever the practice of segregation remains. The advance of desegregation can already be seen as proof that democracy fosters those qualities of mind and heart which make the fulfillment of democracy a predestined fact.

NAAWP Postpones Showdown With Delaware Over Finances

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 11 (AP)—The National Assn. for Advancement of White People delayed a financial showdown for 24 hours and then called a mass meeting tonight to whip up opposition to a court test tomorrow on reassigning 11 Negro pupils to Milford High School.

Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young, who subpoenaed the financial records of the NAAWP on Friday, said this afternoon that Bryant Bowles, president of the group, had called him from Georgetown, Del., and asked for a 24-hour delay in appearing with the records. Young said Bowles' attorney was busy with another commitment.

Young said he granted the delay and is scheduled to meet with Bowles tomorrow in Georgetown where the state chancellor will hear arguments on an appeal by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to re-admit the Negro pupils to the all-white school.

Bowles modified his stand on turning over the records. He said yesterday he would turn over the records to a court but would refuse to turn them over to Young because the attorney general "is not a court." Today he said his legal counsel was checking whether Young has the authority to subpoena the records.

Bowles is free under $6,000 bond on charges that he conspired to break the state compulsory education law by leading a boycott of eight south Delaware schools in protest over the integration of the 11 Negro pupils—since re-assigned to an All-Negro school at Dover—where they in turn boycotted classes.

Bowles denied the charge saying that he is merely following the wishes of a crowd of a meeting spodsored by his group at Lincoln, Del., scene of tonight's meeting. Bowles said at a mass meeting yesterday that at that meeting "someone offered a motion" to boycott the schools and "it was unanimously approved."

NAAWP head arrested—

Bowles asserts DA won't get records

BY BILL LOFTUS

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 11—(AP)—Bryant Bowles, under arrest on charges of conspiring to break Delaware's education law, said today his pro-segregation organization will refuse to turn over all of its financial records to the state attorney general.

"I'll turn these records over to any authorized court that requests them," Bowles said, "but I'll not turn them over to the attorney general.

"Besides, trying to get the records of all the chartered organizations in the different states on such short notice is impossible."

Bowles referred to subpoenas issued last Friday by State Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young, calling on the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People to hand over the data on its finances and operations.

THE NAAWP OFFICIALS were scheduled to meet with Young in his office in the nearby state capital of Dover this afternoon.

Bowles, a 34-year-old Marine Corps veteran, faces other troubles in his fight against the U. S. Supreme Court anti-segregation edict. He was arrested twice yesterday on charges of conspiring to violate the state education law by leading a boycott of Milford's high school where 11 Negroes were admitted to classes last month for the first time.

Bowles is free under $6000 bond for a Nov. 3 hearing at Dover. The charges, a misdemeanor, carry penalties of up to $500 each or a prison term if the fines are not paid.

Two news photographers covering an NAAWP mass meeting yesterday were cornered for 20 minutes by a crowd and relieved of some film.

LATE SATURDAY, the state took another step in its growing battle against the NAAWP when Gov. J. Caleb Boggs ordered Bowles arrested on the conspiracy charges.

As a result of the boycott, the Milford School Board ordered the pupils transfered to an all-Negro high school in Dover 18 miles north of here, but the Negroes, in turn, boycotted these classes.

The two photographers at the airport were cornered by the noisy crowd, which hurled expletives at the newsmen, demanded their film and called for "an explanation of your position."

The ringleaders told the photographers, Warren Winterbottom of The Associated Press and Walter E. Dombrow of the Columbia Broadcasting System, to climb onto a truck platform and speak over the public address system.

Both men refused but the CBS man eventually intoned the pledge of allegiance to the flag.

"They called out 'Show our side once in a while,' 'You always show the worst side,' 'You're playing the Communist game' and other things not so polite," said Dombrow. "They ripped my shirt a bit, taking off a few buttons."

WINTERBOTTOM described the crowd as boisterous but not outright disorderly. He said he and Dombrow were surrounded for about 20 minutes, but added he was not given rough physical treatment.

The AP cameraman said he was forced to give vup a photographic plateholder, but added it was empty. He said he was able to get a shot of Bowles being served with the warrant before the crowd closed in on him.

Bowles was arrested yesterday by a state police detail at the Harrington airport, eight miles west of here, while an alternately jeering and cheering crowd stood by. They cheered when the plane bringing him from Washington, D. C., landed and they jeered when he was served with the warrant and he was taken to Dover for the first of two arraignments.

He posted $3000 bond there and then was brought to Milford for a second arraignment and posted another $3000 bond.

Both bonds were signed by local property owners who used their real estate as collateral.

A collection had been taken up at Harrington airport earlier and NAAWP officials later announced the sum was $415. But the judges in both courts refused cash.

Legal authorities said the two arraignments were carried out in different counties—Kent and Sussex—because the Milford school district straddles these counties and pupils from both are among the 1562 enrolled at the all-white school.

WHILE BOWLES was spending six hours in the two courts—without uttering a word for the record—the mass meeting went on at Harrington airport with seven speakers hammering incessantly at Young, Boggs and the U. S. Supreme Court among others.

When Bowles returned to the airport he noted that "Justice (Robert H.) Jackson, who voted against against segregation, has parted."

Bowles Booked On 2 Charges Of Conspiracy

Order By Governor Designed To Resist, 'Organized Mob Rule'

DOVER, Del., Oct. 10 (AP)—Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People and leader of a pro-segregation movement, was arrested today on charges of conspiracy to violate Delaware's school laws.

A warrant was served upon him this afternoon at Harrington Airport, eight miles west of Milford, scene of a boycott by white pupils of Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago.

Bowles had flown in from Washington to speak at a scheduled mass meeting at the airport.

Waiting for him there was a crowd which grew noisy and in some instances resentful because of Bowles' arrest.

A group of partisans cornered a Columbia Broadcasting System cameraman and an Associated Press photographer, shouted invective at them, and demanded their film and negatives and an explanation of their "position."

The ringleaders told them to climb onto a truck platform and speak over the amplifying system. Both men refused, but the CBS man a bit later read the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.

Even Less Polite

Walter E. Dombrow, the CBS cameraman, said "they called out "Show our side once in a while', 'You always show the worse side' and things even less polite. They ripped my shirt a bit, taking off a few buttons." He said he handed over two holders of unused negatives.

The AP photographer, Warren Winterbottom, of the Philadelphia Bureau, described the crowd as boisterous but not outright disorderly. He said he and Dombrow were surrounded for about 20 minutes, but that no one laid violent hands on him. He gave up only an empty photographic plateholder. He reported that he was able to take only shots of the crowd and of the warrant being served on Bowles, before the hecklers closed in.

The warrant for his arrest was served by Maj. Frederick Lamb, of the Delaware State Police, and Bowles promptly accepted it. He was then brought to the Dover Barracks of the state police, detained there for about 25 minutes, then squired to the Court House.

Out On Bail

In Common Pleas Court of Kent County, Judge Arley B. Magee released him when bail of $1,500 was provided on each of two counts of violating the state's school laws. A further hearing was scheduled for Nov. 3. Herman Brown, deputy attorney general, represented the state.

At Harrington Airport where a crowd estimated by police at about 2,000 had gathered for the expected meeting, many of Bowles' adherents set about taking up a collection to supply bail. Under Kent County law, however, only property can be accepted for such surety.

Bowles arrest was ordered yesterday by Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, who asserted "The State of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children."

First Appearance

The NAAWP moved into the Milford dispute at a Sunday meeting three weeks ago, similar to the one set for today. That was Bowles' first public appearance in Delaware, one of the areas troubled in recent months by cleavage over the integration of Negro pupils into schools heretofore enrolling white pupils only.

The arrest of Bowles at first caused an uneasy stir among the people assembled at the airport. Soon shouts rose here and there, chiefly that of "Block the highways." But state troopers in uniform and in plainsclothes, were on hand to keep order, and the highway leading to the airport was guarded by other police. The sentiments of the crowd, though boisterously expressed, therefore, led to no actual disorder.

One manifestation of crowd disapproval prompted the seizure of two photographers — Warren Winterbottom of The Associated Press and a Columbia Broadcasting System cameraman — but no violence was done to them. A photographic plate holder taken from Winterbottom was kept, however.

Winterbottom said he and his colleague, whose name was not immediately available, were "held" for about 20 minutes after being told that the seized plate would be held unless Bowles gave the word to release it.

Put On Truck

Winterbottom related that the ringleaders put him and the CBS man on a truck, equipped with a loud speaker microphone, and "asked us to go ahead and explain our position."

Both refused. Winterbottom got away simply by saying he'd go have a talk with Bowles. The CBS man, he added, "was reading the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag when I left." Later it was reported that the crowd insisted that he do that.

Police, the photographers and others described the crowd as a mixture of young and older people, with quite a sprinkling of children. Many appeared to be farmers.

The crowd stayed on after the removal of Bowles, obviously hoping that he would return to make the speech he said yesterday he definitely would make.

Open Air Meeting

The 34-year-old former Marine was told of Gov. Boggs' action when he arrived at an open air meeting near Baltimore where he helped to form a Maryland chapter of the NAAWP. At the same time he was served with a summons to appear before the internal revenue service in Wilmington, Del., on Monday for alleged failure to pay federal taxes.

An internal revenue spokesman said the summons had nothing to do with the NAAWP but was in reference to several hundred dollars due from a roofing business Bowles operated in Baltimore in 1952.

Bowles' group led the successful fight to have white parents and pupils boycott the Milford school so long as 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the tenth grade.

Delaware Urged To Arrest Integration Bias Backer

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 9 (AP). —Gov. J. Caleb Boggs today ordered the arrest of Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of the recent pro-segregation boycott in Milford, Del., schools, on charges of conspiracy to interrupt the education of children in Delaware schools.

Mr. Bowles, holding a meeting at Ritchie Raceway just south of Baltimore, said: "I will go to Delaware Sunday morning. I will call up and find out who holds the warrant. I will make an appointment and go up there to meet him.

"If Gov. Boggs wants to serve the warrant himself, I'll go to meet him."

Mass Rally Planned

Mr. Bowles has a mass meeting scheduled for 2:30 tomorrow afternoon at the Harrington, Del., airport, eight miles west of Milford—scene of a boycott by white pupils of the Lakeview Avenue School two weeks ago.

The text of Gov. Boggs' statement:

"The state of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech, but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calulated to disrupt the education of our children.

"After a thorough review of tape recordings of speeches by various self-styled leaders, interviews of numerous witnesses who attended those meetings and following consultation with members of the state police and the Attorney General, it was decided that arrest and prosecution of Bowles is warranted on charges of criminal conspiracy so that there will be no further interruption of education of the children in our schools.

Arrest Ordered

"Accordingly, orders have gone out for his immediate arrest. Law and order will be maintained and the police have been alerted and directed to arrest any one else who violates our laws.

"I approve the action of the Attorney General in seeking forfeiture of the charter of the N. A. A. W. P. for having abused the privileges accorded to it by the state of Delaware and further commend the state police for their vigilance in the past, which was largely responsible for the prevention of violence and injury.

"The Attorney General, the police and I will continue our constant surveillance of future activities of all unlawful elements in order to prevent injury to our citizens, damage to their property and to preserve the dignity of the state."

Active at Milford

The N. A. A. W. P. moved into the Milford dispute at a Sunday meeting three weeks ago, similar to the one scheduled for tomorrow. That was the first public appearance of Mr. Bowles in Delaware.

He told the crowd that he was for segregation and that he had a three-year-old daughter "who will never attend a school with Negroes as long as there is a breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

Mr. Bowles' group led the successful fight to have white parents and pupils boycott the Milford school so long as eleven Negro pupils were admitted to the tenth grade.

Boycott Succeeds

The boycott was successful with less than 30 per cent of the enrollment of 1,562 pupils showing up for classes for four days. Finally the newly elected school board—the old one resigned in a dispute with the State Board of Education—ousted the Negro pupils and ordered them transferred to an all-Negro high school at Dover, Del. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has filed an injunction—scheduled for hearing Tuesday in Georgetown—to get the pupils readmitted to the Milford school.

Earlier this week the state of Delaware sought revocation of the N. A. A. W. P.'s charter and Thursday issued subpoenas on state officers of the group to produce financial records by Monday.

RACIAL DISPUTE TAKEN TO COURT

Delaware Official Demands School Accept Negroes

GEORGETOWN, Del., Oct. 12 (AP) —State Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young asked the Court of Chancery today to return 11 expelled Negroes to the all-white Milford High School and promised that Delaware would preserve law and order.

Young, in an appeal before Vice Chancellor William Marvel, asserted that a court order readmitting the Negroes "will arm" Delaware officials "with the kind of decree where we can get those people who are trying to destroy our community and destroy our laws."

The attorney general emphasized that he was speaking as the chief legal officer of Delaware in backing the demand for a temporary injunction by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Has Official Support

What's more, Young said, he has the "wholehearted support" of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs and Delaware's two U.S. Senators — Republican John J. Williams and Democrat J. Allen Frear.

Young added that if the court orders the Negroes back to Milford High "the governor of the state and our United States senators" will "if it becomes necessary" lead these Negro students "by the hand into that school."

Marvel, warning some 200 persons who crowded into the small courtroom that he would tolerate no disturbance, reserved decision. He declined to say when he would act.

The integration issue has created tension throughout Southern Delaware. Officials have expressed fear of violence.

Crisis Began at Milford

The Milford crisis developed three weeks after the 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the school that accommodated more than 1,500 whites—both elementary and high school grades.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, headed by Bryant Bowles, demanded their transfer and forced the school board that had approved integration to resign. A new board ousted the Negroes after more than two-thirds of the white students boycotted classes. They were transferred to an all-Negro school in Dover, 20 miles away.

Young has filed a petition to revoke the NAAWP charter. A hearing on this will be held Oct. 22 in Dover.

The attorney general also had Bowles arrested on charges of conspiring to violate the state education law by leading a boycott of Milford's high school. Bowles now is free on $6,000 bail.

In addition, Young has demanded the financial and membership records of the NAAWP, but Bowles refused to turn them over.

Bowles and Young conferred privately today. The attorney general told newsmen later he would issue new subpenas tomorrow through the court of chancery for all the organization records.

Bowles said that only the court could issue the subpenas.

State Of Delaware Pleads With Court To Order School Take Back 11 Negroes

The integration issue has created tension throughout Southern Delaware. Officials have expressed fear of violence.

Young told the court: "If it is a question of preserving law and order x x the state of Delaware will preserve that law and order."

Louis J. Redding, counsel for the NAACP, said the U.S. Supreme Court had outlawed segregation and insisted that "these students should be back in school, in the Milford school. They have been admitted once. They should be readmitted and they should stay there. It is their right."

Howard E. Lynch, Milford School Board attorney, said a desire to "preserve law and order" was the chief reason for the ouster, then noted that today's action should be conducted as "a legal procedure" and not as "a very important social problem."

The Milford crisis developed three weeks after the 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the school that accommodated more than 1,500 whites—both elementary and high school grades.

Bowles Arrested Twice in Del.; Followers Roar in Protest

Frederick Lamb of the Delaware State police as he steps from a plane at Harrington, Del., to address a pro-segregation meeting. Man at left is unidentified. (AP Wirephoto)

Special to The Inquirer

HARRINGTON, Del., Oct. 10.—Bryant W. Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, was arrested today after he stepped out of a plane here to address a pro-segregation meeting.

He was seized by Delaware State police over the protests of a crowd of 200 which came to the Harrington airport to greet the outspoken foe of racial integration.

A moment after he was released in $3000 bail at the Kent County Courthouse, in Dover, Bowles was served with another warrant on identical charges, involving alleged violations in Sussex county.

$1500 BAIL FIXED

Whisked away in a State police car he was first taken to Troop 3 headquarters, north of Dover, and then to the courthouse where a special hearing before Judge Harley Magee was to have been held.

The proceedings, however, were cancelled at the last minute and the NAAWP president was ordered to post $1500 bail on each of two counts, pending arraignment at 10 A. M. Nov. 3.

Judge Magee insisted that the bail bond be signed by a Kent county landowner, pointing out that it is illegal to accept cash as bail.

RELEASE HELD UP

The technicality held up Bowles' release for nearly three hours. It was 5:10 when the bond was finally signed by Joseph Danes, president of the NAAWP's Delaware branch. Danes was brought to Dover from Washington in the same plane which carried Bowles.

As soon as the formalities were over, State police handed Bowles the other warrant. It was identical with the first one, except that it charged violations in Sussex county. Authorities pointed out that Bowles was arrested for his activities in Milford. Since Milford is in both Kent and Sussex counties, they decided to issue the second warrant.

SECOND BOND POSTED

It was a surprise move which brought a howl of protest from some of Bowles's followers who came to the courthouse, expecting him to be set free quickly.

Instead, Bowles was put into another State police car which carried him to Milford where he was finally released after another $3000 bail bond was signed—this one by a man identified only as Douglas Morgan.

Magistrate Morris Groverman, who took the bond in Milford, said Bowles would be summoned to appear before the Sussex County Superior Court sometime during the November term.

In the meantime, the meeting went on without the NAAWP head. It was called as scheduled, at 2:30 P. M., and was addressed by the Rev. Claude Lynch and the Rev. Manaen Warrington, the original president of Bowles' organization's Delaware Chapter.

The arrest was announced at the gathering and it was received with loud boos. A moment later a peach basket was passed among the crowd for contributions which speakers said would be used to bail out their leader.

BUSY FOR SIX HOURS

Bowles spent about six hours at arraingnment hearing in the two counties and in making telephone calls. He then appeared at the Harrington meeting and declared:

"Let's don't say this is the bitter end. There will be no bitter end. We'll keep going until ther's a sweet end."

Bowles, warned that he would be arrested the moment he stepped into Delaware, came to Harrington from Washington in a single-engine Stinson. He arrived shortly before 2 P. M. with two companions and the pilot.

ORDERED BY BOGGS

The moment he stepped out of the craft he was handed the two-count warrant, issued on orders of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, by Major Fred Lamb, Field Force Commander of the State Police. The warrant charged interference with school attendance and fomenting racial disturbances.

The crowd edged toward the plane, set up a loud protest when Lamb and State Troopers led Bowles to a waiting police car.

The crowd grew noisy and was obviously resentful of the arrest

DEMAND NEGATIVES

As Maj. Lamb and his aide were driving off the field with Bowles, a group of partisans cornered Walter E. Dombrow, a television cameraman, and Warren Winterbottom, photographer for the Associated Press.

From Winterbottom they demanded the negatives of photographs taken of the arrest. He handed them a blank filmholder.

Dombrow was ordered to mount the platform of a truck and explain his "position." He refused, although a short time later he read the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.

BUTTONS RIPPED OFF

Dombrow said the crowd ripped a few buttons off his shirt.

Winterbottom said the crowd was not outright disorderly, but surrounded the two men for about 20 minutes. He said, as a result, he was able to make photographs only of the warrant being served on Bowles.

At the courthouse in Dover, Lamb said no other warrants had as yet been issued for other officials of the NAAWP. He added that he intended to keep a check on Bowles' activities as soon as the suspect was released.

NAACP ALSO MEETS

About the same time the Harrington meeting was called to order, another gathering, the one of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was being held in the Mt. Carmel Methodist Church, in Wilmington. Attending this session were the parents of the 10 Negro students whose transfer from a Milford school to the Dover High School set off the stormy controversy on racial integration, which spread to seven other lower Delaware schools.

White students at first boycotted the schools. The parents joined in the protest and then Bowles came into Delaware to organize various group against integration.

DEFIES THREAT

Many meetings were held as speakers lashed out against the U. S. Supreme Court decision, which ruled that segregation in public schools was a violation of the Constitution.

As Bowles' drive for a larger organization at $5 per head got under way, Gov. Boggs in a dramatic announcement Saturday ordered the arrest of the NAAWP president.

Bowles, who learned of the order, announced that in spite of the warrant, he would appear in Delaware to address today's meeting here.

RECORDINGS HEARD

Gov. Boggs said his action was taken after a "thorough review of tape recordings of speeches by various self-styled leaders, interview of numerous witnesses who attended those meetings and following my consultation with members of the State police and the Attorney General."

Bowles' first brush with Delaware authorities came last Thursday when he was ordered to produce the financial records of the NAAWP tomorrow. These are expected to show the extent of the membership, established at $5 a year and $12 for three years, $25 for a "silver card" and $50 for "gold card" memberships.

BARRED IN PHILADELPHIA

The action, taken by Attorney General H. Albert Young, was a move to seek forfeiture of the NAAWP's charter for the abuse of privileges afforded to it by the State. This also had the approval of Gov. Boggs.

Bowles, who previously had been in trouble with the law on bad check charges, was banned from Philadelphia. District Attorney Richardson Dilworth threatened to arrest him if he made any effort to promote racial-hate campaigns in Philadelphia.

Racial Boycott Forces 4 Schools to Suspend

Special to The Inquirer

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 29. Four Sussex county public schools suspended classes today as an organized campaign against racial integration of the State school system gained momentum throughout lower Delaware.

State police headquarters at Georgetown reported that exceptionally high absenteeism forced suspensions at Millsboro, Gunboro, Ellendale and Lincoln. At the latter school, police said, not a single pupil reported. The school has an enrollment of 140.

At Gunboro, police said, four of 113 pupils reported and then returned home. At Millsboro, only 19 of 128 pupils arrived, then went home. At Ellendale, the count was 29 out of 131 pupils.

ABSENTEEISM HIGHER

Absenteeism was higher than normal at both the John M. Clayton School, in Dagsboro, and the Lord Baltimore School, in Ocean View, police and school officials reported. Classes were not suspended, however.

There was little change in absenteeism at Milford's Lakeview ave. elementary-high school, where a white boycott against the admission of 11 Negro pupils started the protest against integration on Monday, school authorities reported.

Police estimated that today more than 2000 pupils, nearly all of them white, did not report for elementary and high school classes here and in the six nearby communities.

PHONE DRIVE REPORTED

The National Association for the Advancement of White People, an anti-integration group headed by Bryant Bowles, of Washington, apparently was the power behind the white boycott movement.

There were reports that a telephone campaign was under way "suggesting" that parents keep their children out of the classrooms. Segregationists staged a motorcade here last night and burned a six-foot tall wooden cross in a lot across from the Lakeview Ave. School. Police said it was the work of youths.

State police said the escort for the Negro pupils attending the Milford School would be discontinued tomorrow. However, they said a heavy guard would be maintained in the school area.

OFFICIALS ARE SILENT

There was no indication today that State school authorities were planning any counteraction in the situation. And there were no statements from either Gov. J. Caleb Boggs or Dr. George R. Miller, Jr., superintendent of the State Department of Public Schools.

Meanwhile, a white boycott of a rural school near Fairmount, W. Va., ended yesterday after Circuit Judge J. Harper Meredith ordered white mothers to send their youngsters to the school. About 95 percent of the pupils of Annabelle School, at Four States, appeared after the two-day boycott.

In a court order naming 53 parents, Meredith warned that the boycott was "a rebellion against the State."

Integration Hits Snag in Delaware

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 20 (AP).—The Milford Board of Education closed the town's two public schools today following a protest against integration of Negro and white high school pupils. Later, the president of the board announced the schools would open tomorrow, but declined to say whether integration would be continued.

Dr. Raymond C. Cobbs, school superintendent, said the schools were closed by the board "in the interests of the safety of the children of the district."

The schools are the Benjamin Banneker School, which has only Negro pupils in grades one through nine, and the Lake Avenue School, a combined elementary and high school which until this term had only white pupils. Negro pupils graduating from the Banneker School in the past attended an all-Negro high school in Dover, nineteen miles away. Negro graduates of Banneker were enrolled at Lake Avenue with the start of school Sept. 7. The school district takes in the community of Milford and some nearby settlements. Best estimates place the total population at 9,000, with 2,000 Negroes.

The superintendent said that since the Lake Avenue school opened there have been "no incidents in classrooms involving the student body."

Plan March on School

An estimated 1,500 persons met at the American Legion hall Friday night to protest integration. Dr. Cobbs said no announcement was made, but the board learned that the anti-integration group planned a march on the Lake Avenue School today. Milford police and the State Board of Education advised the Milford school board to close the schools today.

Groups of men and women started arriving at the Lake Avenue School today, and more than 1,000 took seats in the auditorium. Dean Kimmell, president of the board, told the audience—including fifty Negroes—that the school board could not accept a petition protesting integration because the board had no legal basis for acting on the plea.

Petition Accepted

Then the public meeting broke up and the board went into a private huddle with leaders of the anti-integration group. Afterward, Mr. Kimmel said the schools would open tomorrow but did not say directly that the Negro pupils would attend classes. He did say that "they would be there." He said the board accepted the group's petition "for consideration and advisement from the State Attorney General's office."

Later, as observers reported mounting tension in this small southeast Delaware community, Mr. Kimmel modified his original statement and said the situation "is in a state of flux."

"I think the schools will open tomorrow, but I would not like to comment at this time on whether the pupils will be integrated," Mr. Kimmel said. "I am trying to get the school board together tonight for a meeting, but I anticipate some difficulty. The school board has not formally voted as yet on integration, and we hope to do that tonight."

Anti-Integration View

One of the anti-integration spokesmen, Paris Kirby, a farmer from Milford Neck, said the objectors were not opposed to the mixing of white and Negro pupils but rather to "rushing through it." "We feel the board should wait until the Supreme Court rules on how integration is to be established," he said.

The Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation of pupils is unconstitutional, but has delayed the actual enforcement until a method of integration can be perfected.

Parents' Picket Line

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Sept. 20 (AP).—A picket line of forty parents paraded today in front of the Harwood School in near-by Center Township, protesting the admission of thirty Negro pupils. The picketing was orderly as a sheriff and two deputies watched.

Officials said the grade school, which opened Sept. 7, has 675 pupils. About 40 per cent were absent today. Negroes attend all high schools and most grade schools in Evansville, but this is the first time they were admitted in the Center Township school, just north of Evansville.

Indiana's desegregation law has gradually been enforced since 1949.

Parents Continue Fight on Integration At Delaware School

By the Associated Press

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 28.—The deepening dispute over integration of 11 Negro pupils in Milford's previously all-white high school reached another crossroad today, with segregationists appealing again for white pupils to remain away from classes.

Attendance at today's session, scheduled under the watchful eye of State and local police, could well set a trend for future action in the battle over continuing the 11 Negro pupils in the 10th grade of the Lakeview Avenue school. Yesterday, less than 30 per cent of the enrollment of 1,562 pupils appeared for classes. Ten of the 11 Negroes arrived, went to classes and then were driven home with police escort.

School officials explained the low attendance by pointing to parents' fear of possible violence or opposition to integration. Just which is predominant apparently will be decided this morning, the officials felt.

Boycott Pushed at Rally.

Last night, prosegregation forces in the Milford school district, at their third meeting in three days, stepped up their demand for a boycott of the school at a mass meeting in nearby Lincoln. State police said a conservative estimate of the crowd was 750.

The Rev. Manaen Warrington, newly-elected president of the Delaware chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, urged the parents to keep their children home in opposition to integration "until the Negroes get out of our schools."

He said anti-integrationists would maintain their stand "no matter if it means bloodshed . . . no matter what the consequences."

Bryant Bowles, national president of the NAAWP, urged those in the crowd from towns near Milford, a southeastern Delaware community of 5,700, to "hold a sympathy strike in the towns surrounding Milford to show these parents we're behind them."

Yesterday's reopening, after a one-week shutdown, went off without undue incident.

Ouster of Two Sought.

Mr. Warrington and others were circulating a petition today calling for the ouster of School Supt. Ramon C. Cobbs and High School Principal M. Alexander Glassmire. Mr. Warrington said a "criminal investigation bureau is being started to probe the rest of the teacning staff."

Another speaker last night, Earl Hastings of Georgetown, Del., introduced 14-year-old Betty Jean Tingle, who confirmed that she signed a letter to the NAAWP stating that a Negro boy asked her for a date last Friday afternoon when the schools were closed and she was sitting on her front porch. She said she refused.

Delaware has a State law calling for compulsory attendance of children in schools until they are 16. Mr. Bowles told the meeting if any one was arrested for breaking this law by boycotting the Milford School, he would be furnished with a lawyer.

Dr. George R. Miller, State superintendent of public instruction, announced late yesterday that the administrative—but not policy-making—powers of the Milford district were being returned to the school superintendent. Dr. Cobbs was not at the school yesterday and his home said he was out of town but expected back today. The State Board of Education has assumed the power of the four resigned members of the Milford Board until the next election in May.

Negroes Segregated, White Students Return

Special to The Inquirer

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 1.—A majority of white school children here and in other southern Delaware communities returned to classes today, ending an anti-integration boycott set off by the admission of 11 Negro pupils to the all-white Milford High School.

The mass return followed promptly the action of the newly elected Milford Board of Education in barring the Negroes and directing that they be sent back to an all-Negro high school in Dover, 20 miles from here.

VIOLENCE IN BALTIMORE

While tension over the issue of segregation abruptly eased in this State, demonstrations and minor violence over the same issue broke out in at least seven public schools in Baltimore. Six white men and a Negro were arrested in a scuffle at Southern High School there. Police reported the arrested Negro dropped a pistol as he was taken into custody, but there was no gunplay.

The trouble developed when an unruly crowd closed in on Negro students leaving the school. One of the men arrested, Jack Zimmerman, 24, an unemployed shipyard worker, was fined $100 in police court later for striking a 14-year-old Negro student as the boy left the school building.

Demonstrations at the high school began just before class time yesterday morning, with about 500 white pupils milling in the streets. Some of the school's teachers came out and snatched from the pupils placards reading, "Negroes Not Allowed" and "On Strike." The 39 Negro pupils attending the school marched into the building in a body after police had ordered the demonstrating pupils either to go to class or go home.

'GERMS SPREADING'

Pickets marched outside six other Baltimore schools, precipitating a few small demonstrations. One woman picket carried a sign reading, "Keep Your Germs Spreading." This was an answer to the comment of John H. Fischer Baltimore superintendent of schools, that "it looks like some of the germs have spread down here from Delaware."

Dr. Fischer, after conferring with legal advisers on methods of halting the boycott, told reporters upon emerging from the conference that "there will be no Milford here."

In Milford, the 11 Negro pupils barred from the high school stayed home today. Edmund F. Steiner, the chairman of the new school board, said he did not expect these pupils to report for classes today, but anticipated they would resume classes at Dover next week.

In Dover, the capital city, J. Leon Tarburton, a member of the school board, called a meeting for tonight to "organize a group to prevent terrorism by lawless forces." Tarburton said he called the meeting, at Dover High School, after hearing that anti-integration groups had made Dover their next target.

SCHOOL BOYCOTT ENDS AT MILFORD, DELAWARE

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 1 (AP) — School buses crowded with white pupils returning to classes signalled the end today of a spreading boycott protesting admission of Negro pupils to Milford High School.

Eleven Negro high school pupils remained at home, their educational future uncertain. They had attended the formerly all-white school under a school board decision to comply with the U. S. Supreme Court ban on racial segregation. They were barred yesterday when a newly-formed board reversed the previous decision in the wake of protest meetings, burning crosses and the refusal of many white pupils to attend classes here and in nearby South Delaware communities.

Just where the Negro students would attend classes next week apparently had not been determined.

Edmund F. Steiner, new president of the Milford School Board, said they probably would report to classes at the all-Negro William Henry High School in Dover, 18 miles to the north. But Dr. George F. Miller, state superintendent of public schools, said no decision has been reached and Dr. Ramon C. Cobbs, Milford school superintendent, said the decision is up to the State Board of Education.

Attendance at Milford High School was reported officially today as 83 per cent of the 1,562 students enrolled, which school authorities described as "about normal." Yesterday, when 10 of the Negro children were at classes, total attendance was less than 28 per cent. Near-normal operations were reported at all-white schools in seven nearby communities to which the protest boycott had spread.

Attendance Normal In Milford School

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 1 (AP). Attendance jumped back to normal today at Milford High School as segregation forces hailed the defeat of an attempt to send 11 Negro students to the all-white school.

For four days this week attendance at the school, with 10 of the Negro pupils in classes—had dropped to only about one third of normal. Today, school officials reported it was more than 80 percent.

Prosegregationists called the return of all-white classes "the first step toward our ultimate goal of making sure that no Negroes attend white schools in the state."

A new school board selected yesterday promptly rescinded an order permitting the Negro children to attend the school. It said the action was "in the best interests of the pupils in the community."

Meanwhile, Police Chief S. G. Powell told newsmen that a police patrol car found a cross burning in a vacant lot across from the all-Negro Benjamin Banneker Elementary School late last night. He said the incident is being investigated. It was the second cross-burning of the week.

In nearby Dover, the State Capital, J. eLon Tarburton, a member of the Dover School Board called a meeting tonight to organize a group "to prevent terrorism by lawless forces."

Tarburton said tonight's meeting is "a private meeting for residents of the Dover Special School District who are interested in protecting their children and not knuckling under" to "rabble-rousers." Tarburton said he proposes organization of a "vigilantes committee," but did not further explain his objectives.

Dover High School has 10 Negroes attending its ninth grade so they may take an academic course not available at the all-Negro William Henry School.

Leads Fight

Bryant Bowles, Florida-born former Marine, is leading the fight against integration of white and Negro pupils in Delaware as president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

...th Threats Of Violence

Racial Crisis Shakes Delaware Town

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 26 (AP)—A crisis over race relations has shaken this town of 5,700 to its roots. And many residents fear that before the question of integrating white and Negro high school pupils is settled, there will be scars—both physical and mental.

This town's two schools, closed a week because of threatened race violence, are scheduled to reopen tomorrow. But some citizens are still seeking to stop any classes with Negro and white students.

Milford is a normal small town, U.S.A. It is in the southeastern section of the Delaware peninsula near the Delaware Bay.

Agriculture supplies 90 per cent of the town's economic lifeblood.

Since the turn of the century race relations have been friendly until four weeks ago. Then 11 Negroes registered for classes in the all-white combination high-and-elementary school.

The thing started when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that school segregation unconstitutional. Delaware has segregation.

What happened then in Delaware after the court ruled?

In Wilmington, school officials decided to start integration at the first-grade level, allowing separate classes for whites and Negroes in the upper grades.

Downstate, on Sept. 7, the 11 pupils who had graduated from the all-Negro Benjamin Banneker Elementary School applied for admission to the all-white Lakeview Avenue High School.

Previously, Negro pupils had to attend high school in all-Negro schools in either Dover or Georgetown, 18 miles from Milford.

None of the 237 elementary pupils at Benjamin Banneker applied for enrollment at Lakeview.

Classes opened at both Lakeview and Banneker on Sept. 8. All went well. The school board plus school officials were satisfied that integration was working.

But on Sept. 17, a meeting was held. No one knows who called it, but 1,500 persons showed up. No Negroes were present. Petitions to fight integration were circulated.

On Monday morning, another mass meeting mushroomed at the Lakeview school.

Russell V. Bradley, a husky, fortyish mechanic, conducted the meeting. He said:

"I'm not against Negroes or opposed to them or anything else. We're law-abiding people here and if we have to have integration we might not like it but we'll accept it. But I think this thing has been badly handled by the school board. They didn't tell us these Negroes were to be admitted to school this term. They could have waited until the court figures out how they're going to run this thing so it won't be so much of a problem."

As the mass meeting broke up, Board President Dean Kimmel was handed the petition with 1,002 names. It called for the discharge of the 11 Negro pupils from the 10th grade before school reopened.

The board met that night (Sept. 20)—behind closed doors. Outside citizens stood around, getting more and more impatient.

Finally, Kimmel and School Superintendent Ramon C. Cobbs announced the schools would reopen Tuesday.

The board went home to be greeted by a deluge of phone calls threatening violence if the Negro pupils returned.

Kimmel and the board issued a statement closing the schools until further notice.

The situation simmered a few days, with the youngsters—white and Negro—taking advantage of the unexpected holiday.

Last Wednesday the board met again. It now had only three members. The fourth had resigned. This time, the board decided to reopen the community's two schools tomorrow—again "without segregation."

It coupled this announcement with a threat: The three members would quit if the state board of education overruled them.

Thursday the state board rebuked the Milford board for putting integration into effect, but said that since the deed was done—it was done. The state board said local boards had been asked to submit plans for integration before placing them in operation.

This rebuke nettled the three Milford members and they resigned. Now the state board, temporarily, is operating the two Milford schools. They'll reopen tomorrow with Negro students integrated.

But opponents of integration haven't given up the fight yet. And police are ready for any emergency.

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs urged the community to obey the law. He said he wouldn't tolerate violence and it's a safe bet he'd call out the Delaware National Guard if there is any chance of a disturbance.

How do the othr citizens of the community feel?

G. Marshall Townsend, editor of the Milford Chronicoe, said "I don't think I've ever heard so many reports, rumors and conversation. This thing is tremendous in its implications. Potentially, it's dynamite."

James C. Davis, president of the First National Bank feels the same way about the situation as Albert Williams, president of the Milford Trust Co.

"We have both white and Negro depositirs in our bank. Most of them are long-time residents of the community and naturally this thing bothers all of them, not just the whites."

The Rev. Randolph H. Fisher, president of the Sussex County the Advancement of Colored People, has been the spokesman for the 11 Negro pupils. He sums up his feelings this way:

"Before the eyes of God we know we are right. All we ask is equal opportunity, nothing more."

Milford will prosecute groups stirring hatred

MILFORD, Del. — Mayor Edward C. Evans of Milford has issued a statement warning hate groups that they can be prosecuted for circulating printed matter designed to stir up the white population in the Milford school crisis.

After learning that hate circulars from the National Association for the Advancement of White People had been circulated at one of the meetings, the mayor said:

"Anyone distributing literature within the city limits of Milford which tends to incite either the white or colored race will be dealt with severely."

ONE OF THE pamphlets which fell into the hands of the mayor was from the NAAWP and stated under an article by its president, Bryant Bowles, "The National Association for the Advancement of White People Inc. was formed with the belief that the U. S. Supreme Court would hand down a decision outlawing segregated schools.

"It's past record of ruling in favor of organized left wing minority groups indicated that it would continue to unsurp legislative powers. If we had believed otherwise, we would have felt there was less need for forming this organization."

The pamphlet charged that the NAACP was not really a colored organization since its "president and real power is a Jew, Arthur Spingarn."

The pamphlet also carried a picture of a colored male student and a white girl student and said beneath that the picture was a "colored king and white queen" selected by the Los Angeles City College to reign over the school's 25th anniversary celebration.

Third Present As Integrated School Opens

Negroes Escorted By Delaware Police

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 27 (U.P.)—Only one-third of 687 pupils at Milford High School were present today when public schools, closed all last week following a protest against integration, reopened with 10 Negro students in the 10th grade class.

One Negro student scheduled to attend the formerly all-white high school remained at home.

Eight of the 10 Negroes present were brought to the school in private cars escorted by police. The two others came in a school bus without incident.

About 16 adults milled around the school grounds but made no effort to demonstrate. A total of 25 state police and 10 local policemen were on hand to prevent disorder.

There were no white children enrolled in the Dannecker Elementary and Junior High School, formerly for Negroes only. The school which also was closed all last week, reopened without incident with a near average attendance.

Students go back to school—

Segregation forces win in Delaware

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 1—(AP)—Attendance jumped back to normal today at Milford High School as triumphant segregation forces hailed the defeat of an attempt to send 11 Negro students to the all-white school.

For four days this week attendance at the school—with 10 of the Negro pupils in classes—had dropped to only about one-third of normal. Today school officials reported it was more than 80 per cent as laughing youngsters crammed aboard the 14 buses taking them to school.

Pro-segregationists called the return of all-white classes "the first step toward our ultimate goal of making sure that no Negroes attend white schools in the state.

AT BALTIMORE demonstrations against the mingling of white and Negro students spread to at least seven public schools today.

About 500 pupils milled noisily on the street at Southern High School just before classes started.

Some of the teachers came out and snatched from the youngsters crude placards which said: "Negroes not allowed" and "On strike."

Police in four squad cars and a patrol wagon broke up the demonstration and told the youngsters either to go home or go to school.

The 39 Negroes attending Southern walked into the building in a group. There were no audible threats against them.

A disturbance broke out at Southern when 10 Negro pupils left the building under police escort at the request of their parents.

The nine girls and a boy remained on a sidewalk across from the school and about 200 young white demonstrators jerred at them.

At one point the whites began moving menacingly toward the Negroes.

The 10 Negro students retreated down the street to the next corner, where police stepped between the two groups and sent them off in opposite directions.

Baltimore school officials have reaffirmed their position that schools would remain open.

A NEW MILFORD SCHOOL board selected yesterday promptly rescinded an order permitting the Negro children to attend the Lakeview Avenue School. It said the action was "in the best interest of the pupils in the community."

Even as the four-day integration attempt was ended, Police Chief S. G. Powell told newsmen a police patrol car had found a cross burning in a vacant lot across from the All-Negro Benjamin Banneker Elementary School late last night. He said the incident is being investigated. It was the second cross-burning of the week in this Southeastern Delaware community.

Meanwhile, in nearby Dover, the state capital, J. Leon Tarburton, a member of the Dover School Board called a meeting tonight to organize a group "to prevent terrorism by lawless forces."

Tarburton said tonight's meeting is "a private meeting for residents of the Dover special school district who are interested in protecting their children and not knuckling under" to "rabble-rousers." Tarburton said he proposes organization of a "vigilantes committee" but did not further explain his objectives.

He said, "Businessmen who fear reprisals may come masked but must identify themselves at the door."

Dover High School has 10 Negroes attending its ninth grade so that they may take an academic course not available at the all-Negro William Henry School.

DR. RAMON C. COBBS, Milford superintendent of schools, said today's attendance was 757 of 892 pupils enrolled in the elementary grades at Lakeview Avenue, and 562 of 620 in the high school. Dr. George R. Miller, state superintendent of public instruction, reported attendance at seven other schools in nearby towns, where a protest boycott had developed, also was back to normal today.

The Milford board's statement did not say whether segregation was permanent, or only effective for the period until the U. S. Supreme Court hands down its decision on how integration shall be carried out.

The president of the Delaware chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, Wagner P. Jackson, denounced the action as a "shameful, degrading spectacle of our duly constituted authority ignominiously surrendering to the illegal actions of a lawless mob. He said the NAACP "refuses to accept defeat by mob rule and . . . we have already begun planning our next legal action." He declined to elaborate.

LAST NIGHT, the pro-segregationists held their eighth meeting in as many days and celebrated what was termed "a point won" by Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, the spearhead of the drive against integration.

Bowles, a spokesman for the segregation forces, was asked what the group's stand would be after the U. S. Supreme Court hands down its decision and he said:

"We won't adhere to that. They would be telling us how to do it and it is unconstitutional for the Supreme Court to make laws."

THERE WERE other segregation developments yesterday.

In Washington, an examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that neither the Constitution nor federal laws prohibit segregation of passengers in interstate travel. Isadore Freidson ruled against Mrs. Sarah Keyes of New York, a Negro woman who attempted to ride with white passengers on an interstate bus in North Carolina. The case now is expected to receive a full review by the ICC.

The state Democratic convention in Georgia threw full support behind a "private school" amendment sponsored by Gov. Herman Talmadge.

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in Cincinnati said they will appeal a federal judge's ruling deferring action on "enforced segregation" in Hillsboro, Ohio, schools.

At Middletown, Ohio, 12 Negroes were turned away from an all-white school for the second time.

Senator Ired at Speech He'd Lead Negro Pupils

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 13 (AP)—U.S. Sen. John J. Williams (R-Del) expressed resentment today at a statement that he is prepared to "lead Negro children by the hand" into a previously all-white high school.

The statement in question was made by Delaware Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young in Chancery Court at Georgetown yesterday.

Young, in an appeal for an injunction to help authorities prosecute persons resisting racial integration in schools, told Vice Chancellor William Marvel:

"If it becomes necessary for the governor of this state and its U.S. Senators, and they have expressed it to me, to lead these Negro children by the hand, after a decree of this sort, into that school, they will do so."

Young referred to the Milford High School from which 10 Negro pupils were barred by a newly appointed school board.

Williams said this was a "defiant statement." He said he joined "every Delawarean in resenting the inference behind the attorney general's remarks."

Williams said he issued a statement on Monday calling for maintenance of law and order in the school integration issue.

"But by no stretch of the imagination," he said, "was my support of law and order ever intended to be so narrowly interpreted, and in particular such interpretation was not expected from one holding such a high position."

Williams said he wanted to make it "very clear" that he has "never delegated to any person, either in or out of the Republican Party, authority to speak for me." Young also is a Republican.

Court Order Is Requested in Milford Case

GEORGETOWN, Del., Oct. 12 (AP).—Attorney General H. Albert Young stepped into the school segregation issue today with a request for a court injunction with which State authorities could prosecute persons who resist integration.

Appearing as a "friend of the court," Young asked Vice Chancellor William Marvel of Sussex County to grant a temporary injunction sought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to restrain the Milford School Board from barring Negro students from Milford High School.

Such an injunction, Young said, will "arm the authorities of this State with the kind of decree we need to get the people who are trying to disrupt law and order her and so bring thm bfor you for contempt of court."

Marvel reserved decision.

Only 100 persons were admitted to the courtroom for the hearing before State Police sealed off the corridors of the courthouse. Several hundred persons, including Bryant W. Bowles, of Washington, D. C., head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and leader of the segregationists, crowded outside the door.

There was no demonstration when Young made his suggestion to the court.

Louis L. Redding, who successfully appealed the segregation issue to the United States Supreme Court, argued the NCAAP case. He contended the Milford School Board had no authority to transfer the Negro pupils outside its district to the high school for Negroes at Dover, Del., because such transfers specifically are limited by law to the State Board of Education.

Delaware Court Gets Pleas In School Segregation Fight

By MILTON BRACKER
Special to The New York Times.

GEORGETOWN, Del., Oct. 12—The Attorney General of Delaware pledged in court today that the Governor and the state's two United States Senators were prepared to lead ten Negro children by the hand into the Milford High School if the court ordered the school board to readmit the pupils.

Attorney General H. Albert Young declared that the full authority of the state would be brought to bear to preserve law and order if integration returned to the Milford school.

The Attorney General appeared in the Court of Chancery, before Vice Chancellor William Marvel.

The hearing involved a petition by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on behalf of the parents of the Negro children. The parents demand a temporary injunction to upset the school board's resegregation action in Milford.

Vice Chancellor Marvel reserved decision and adjourned court.

Courtroom is Crowded

The courtroom was crowded, largely with supporters of Bryant W. Bowles, founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People. The high point of Mr. Young's presentation came when he declared "mob rule" had taken over in Milford under a "leader peddling hypocrisy and prejudice."

Mr. Bowles' organization led the fight that resulted in the return of segregation to the Milford school on Sept. 30. The Negro students had started school at Milford Sept. 7.

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, a Republican, on Saturday announced that Mr. Bowles would be arrested if he came back to Delaware. Mr. Bowles returned on Sunday and was arrested on charges of conspiring to violate the state's education law by leading the boycott that led to resegregation. Mr. Bowles is free in $6,000 bail on the charges.

After court adjourned, Attorney General Young said, "I know I can speak for Senator [John J.] Wiliams and the Governor and I felt sure I could speak for Senator [J. Allen] Frear in this matter." This was with regard to his assertion that the three men would be willing personally to lead the Negro children into the school. Senator Williams is a Republican and Senator Frear a Democrat.

Great hostility to Mr. Young was apparent around the courthouse after he completed a forty-minute interview with Mr. Bowles on another aspect of the segregation issue. The Attorney General left by a rear door.

The population of Georgetown is less than 2,000, but it was swelled by several hundred segregationists from near-by Milford, Harrington, Lincoln and other communities.

Arguments Are Outlined

Louis L. Redding, a Wilmington attorney, represented the Negro parents in the hearing. He was assisted by Jack Greenberg of New York, associate counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Redding argued that on both statutory grounds in Delaware, and on constitutional grounds — since the Supreme Court decision of May 17 outlawing school segregation—the children were being deprived of their rights.

He cited the decision in Baltimore last week whereby Superior Court Judge James K. Cullen upheld desegregation in Baltimore in advance of Supreme Court decrees.

On behalf of the Milford school board, Howard Lynch said the issue was an "important social problem, the solution of which is most difficult."

Mr. Lynch said the fact that the Supreme Court had "restored the cases to the docket for further argument," indicated that "all of the vital questions other than the one principle of segregation" remained "unanswered and unsolved." This referred to the fact that the Supreme Court on Dec. 6 would begin to hear arguments prior to issuing decrees implementing the decision of May 17.

The attorney for the school board argued that there should be no solution prior to the Supreme Court decrees.

Mr. Young declared "the Supreme Court has spoken * * *, and now it becomes a matter not of what we feel or think but of compliance with law and order and decrees of courts."

The Attorney General called what had happened in Milford "mob rule," set up by "people who are trying to destroy our community and our law." He rejected the idea that the school board was thinking only of the welfare of the Negro pupils, on the ground that the State of Delaware was prepared to use the full measure of its authority to guarantee law and order.

After court adjourned, Mr. Young interviewed Mr. Bowles and two of his attorneys on the matter of the financial records of the National Association for the Advancement of White People. This involved proceeding separate from the morning hearing and was in effect a step preliminary to the state's action to deprive the association of its charter. A hearing on this will be held in Dover on Oct. 22.

Mr. Bowles' attorneys argued that the Attorney General had a right to subpoena Mr. Bowles personally, but not to subpoena the records of his group. Mr. Young countered by ordering new subpoenas issued.

Return Negroes to School, Delaware Court Asked

GEORGETOWN, Del., Oct. 12 (AP)—State Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young asked the Court of Chancery today to return 11 expelled Negroes to the all-white Milford High School and promised that Delaware would preserve law and order.

Young, in an appeal before Vice Chancellor William Marvel, asserted that a court order readmitting the Negroes "will arm" Delaware officials "with the kind of decree where we can get those people who are trying to destroy our community and destroy our laws."

GOVERNOR'S BACKING

The attorney general emphasized that he was speaking as the chief legal officer of Delaware in backing the demand for a temporary injunction by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

What's more, Young said, he has the "wholehearted support" of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs and Delaware's two U.S. Senators — Republican John J. Williams and Democrat J. Allen Frear.

Young added that if the court orders the Negroes back to Milford High "the governor of the state and our United States senators" will "if it becomes necessary" lead these Negro students "by the hand into that school."

Marvel, warning some 200 persons who crowded into the small courtroom that he would tolerate no disturbance, reserved decision. He declined to say when he would act.

The Integration issue has created tension throughout Southern Delaware. Officials have expressed fear of violence.

Young told the court: "If it is a question of preserving law and order . . . the state of Delaware will preserve that law and order."

Louis J. Redding, counsel for the NAACP, said the U.S. Supreme Court had outlawed segregation and insisted that "these students should be back in school, in the Milford school. They have been admitted once. They should be readmitted and they should stay there. It is their right."

Howard E. Lynch, Milford School Board attorney, said a desire to "preserve law and order" was the chief reason for the ouster, then noted that today's action should be conducted as "a legal procedure" and not as "a very important social problem."

20 MILES AWAY

The Milford crisis developed three weeks after the 11 Negro pupils were admitted to the school that accommodated more than 1,500 whies—both elementary and high school grades.

The National Assn. for Advancement of White People, headed by Bryant Bowles, demanded their transfer and forced the school board that had approved integration to resign. A new board ousted the Negroes after more than two-thirds of the white students boycotted classes. They were transferred to an all-Negro school in Dover, 20 miles away.

New School Board In Milford, Del. Abandons Integration Try

MILFORD, Del. — (INS) — A new school board was sworn in at Milford, Thursday and promptly announced that attempts to integrate Negro pupils into all-white classes would be abandoned.

Racial feeling in the community had been fanned to a fever pitch by the admission of 11 Negroes to the Milford combined Elementary-High school last Monday.

The new school board replaced the old one which resigned last week in a dispute with the State Board of Education over methods of ending segregation. Following an executive session this afternoon, the new board announced:

"The Board of Education decided in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole to remove the 11 Negro students from the enrollment records of Milford High School."

The board requested the State Board of Education to assume responsibility for the "future education" of the Negro students, who must travel 20 miles to a Negro school at Dover.

Parents of white children were asked by the new board to send their children back to school today.

The Milford school, with a total enrollment of nearly 1600, had been all but closed this week by a spreading boycott which enveloped six other schools in lower Delaware.

A fight against integration was led at numerous rallies by William B. Bowles, who described himself as president of a group known as "the National Association for the Advancement of white People."

Bowles hailed the action of the school board as a decisive victory for the anti-integration forces, but declared: "The fight has just begun." He said further rallies may be held this week-end.

The break in the strained Milford situation came as parents in Southwest Baltimore picketed and 300 children stayed home from school in the Maryland City's first expression of protest against integration.

The parents charged the Baltimore School Board with "trying to cram desegregation down our throats" and announced plans to strike against six other schools.

The new School Board in Milford was appointed Friday by two members of the old board, who temporarily resumed office for the task and then resigned again.

Negro Students Not to Attend White School

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 30 (AP)—A newly-elected Milford Board of Education voted today to remove 11 Negro students from the rolls of the formerly all-white Milford High School and send them back to a Negro school "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole."

The board's action, announced after an emergency executive session, was the latest move in a segregation struggle that developed in this Delaware community over the admission of the 11 Negro students to the high school in keeping with the recent Supreme Court ruling that segregation in the nation's school should end.

The issue of whether the 11 should attend classes with 1,500 white students at the Milford High School had kept the town and surrounding Delaware communities on tender hooks for the past week.

At one point the Milford school board resigned and the Milford schools, including the high school, were taken over by the state board. Today's action was described by the new Milford board as "an attempt to solve the current issue."

Integrate Or Else, Board Tells School

MILFORD, Del.—(ANP) - The Milford board of education has answered threats of violence made in an attempt to keep Negro students out of the community's two public schools with an ultimatum.

They'll reopen the city's formerly all-white senior high school with Negro pupils in attendance or resign in a body.

The board had ordered the schools closed "until further notice" because resentment of and threats of violence resulting from the enrollment of six boys and five girls, Negroes, in the 10th grade of the Lakeview Avenue school.

The state board of education has backed the local board in the matter, insisting that the schools be opened with Negroes in attendance.

At a meeting called by Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, H. Wilbert Young, attorney-general, advised the Milford board that the members had not violated any state law in admitting the Negroes in compliance with the Supreme court's decision outlawing segregation.

Present at the special meeting in Washington were representatives of the Delaware state board of the NAACP.

When informed about the decision of the school board, Milford's Mayor Edward O. Evans said the reopening was "problematic and depended on how the situation looked."

Delaware Town Hits Integration

'Fighting For A Principle,' Says Tennessean

To The Commercial Appeal,

The people of Milford, Delaware, are living examples that the love of liberty and local self-government still burns bright in the hearts of some Americans.

They are fighting for a principle, just as did their forefathers at the Boston Tea Party.

Segregation is as American as freedom itself.

Americans have the right to be different, and to have different ideas and customs.

America was settled by such people, who wished to live according to the dictates of their own hearts.

Colonists separated, when they found local laws unacceptable, and pioneered to other sections.

Freedom will survive in this country only so long as State laws are respected, and the people, themselves, not one man, not nine men, make the laws by which they are governed.

The colored people have the right to choose to live in states where customs and laws please them just as earlier settlers made their choice.

The pressure tactics of the N.A.A.C.P. violate all principles of true Americanism. Thinking men and women all over the country are awakening to this fact, and are organizing to resist the totalitarian form of government this organization is recommending.

The United States Government will be stronger, and our people more united, when government is returned to the people. Bitterness, greed, and hate and corruption result from the dictatorial powers the government has assumed in problems that can only be solved on local levels. Our great nation is too large, and the problems in different sections are too diverse to dispense with local self-government.

Foes of Integration To Seek Ouster of Delaware Educator

By the Associated Press

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 30.—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware today considered the recommendations of his attorney general, members of the State Board of Education and "many others" on what action to take in the tense school segregation situation in the southern part of the State.

New trouble spots cropped up yesterday in various communities around this town, center of the dispute for almost two weeks.

Schools are being boycotted here and in surrounding communities in protest against the integration of 11 Negro students among 1,562 students registered at the elementary-high school here. One of the Negroes has since transferred to an all-Negro school at Dover.

Out of 2,074 pupils registered in schools here and in Gumboro, Ellendale, Millsboro and Lincoln, 537 reported for classes yesterday.

Seek Official Ouster.

The National Association for the Advancement of White People, headed by Bryant Bowles of Arlington, Va., who has actively opposed integration in this area during the last week, has called a meeting to demand the ouster of school Supt. Ramon C. Cobbs.

Last night in Laurel, 12 miles to the southwest, Mr. Bowles and his followers took over a meeting called by a local committee there to arrange a referendum on voter sentiment on the issue in Laurel district schools, which have not attempted integration.

Mrs. Charles S. Workman, a member of the local committee, attempted to address the gathering, but was shouted down when she said that "under no circumstances" should there be a boycott of schools in Laurel.

Demand Protection From Acts Of Violence Or Intimidation

GEORGETOWN, Del. — (INS) — Parents of 10 Negro children ousted from Milford High School in a segregation dispute filed suit in Chancery Court at Georgetown Saturday demanding restoration of the pupils to classes.

Action seeking a preliminary injunction against the Milford School Board was lodged before vice Chancellor William Marvel, who set Oct. 12 for hearing arguments on the petition.

The suit was presented by Louis L. Redding, Attorney for parents of the Negro children who were stricken from the rolls of the combined elementary-high school at Milford on Thursday.

Ouster of the Negroes, ordered by a newly-chosen school board, had which led to a boycott of the school temporarily ended racial tension by white pupils. Six other Delaware schools also were hit by absenteeism.

In the petition, Redding pointed out that the children of his clients would have to travel to all-Negro schools in Dover, 19 miles from Milford, or Georgetown, 16 miles away.

PROTECTION ASKED

The action asked that the School Board be prevented from refusing the children admission, and demand that the pupils be given protection from "any acts of violence, intimidation or coercion."

The State Board of Public Instruction met Saturday afternoon and instructed the 10 Negro children to report to the schools in Dover and Georgetown. The Negroes have been without a classroom since the Milford Board's action which was termed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as "a surrender to the illegal actions of a lawless mob."

A fight against integration of White and Negro pupils in Milford had been led by an organization called "The National Association for the Advancement of White People."

Nightly rallies had been held in Milford and other communities urging parents of white children to keep them out of school. The old school board resigned last week in a dispute with the State Board of Public Instruction over methods of ending segregation.

DELAWARE DROPS INTEGRATION FIGHT

Negro Students at Milford Removed From the Rolls of White High School

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 30—In the fact of an organized revolt, Delaware late today abandoned its first attempt at racial integration in the public schools of Sussex County.

The ten Negro pupils at the center of the bitter controversy were dropped from the enrollment records at the Milford high school at the end of today's classes. To continue their education, the tenth-grade pupils will have to attend the all-Negro high schools in Dover, twenty miles north of here, or at Georgetown, eighteen miles to the south.

A new Milford Board of Education, created under a plan worked out at conferences with Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, officially announced the capitulation plan six hours after it had been outlined in detail by pro-segregation leaders.

Nevertheless, the new four-man board insisted that neither Governor Boggs nor any one else had had advance knowledge of the action. It was decided upon at a meeting after the Lakeview Avenue School in Milford had closed this afternoon.

Called Best Solution

The board's announcement, read by Edmund F. Steiner, president, stated that the members' action had been decided on at a two-hour session as the best means of solving the issue so that all white children might return to the combined elementary and high schools here.

"The board decided, in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole, to remove the eleven Negro students from the enrollment records of the Milford school," the statement said. It added:

"The school assignment and necessary transportation of these children for their education was the responsibility of the State Board of Education. The Milford Board of Education appeals to all of the constituents of the Milford school district to send their children to school tomorrow."

One of the Negro pupils referred to in the announcement did not eturn to class when the Lakeview Avenue School reopened this week under the supervision of th eState Board of Education. The latter stepped into the dispute after the former Milford board had resigned in a body.

Boycott Spreads

The old board quit rather than assume responsibility for reopening the school, which it had closed for a week because of tension and violence.

Of the 1,562 pupils, 456 attended classes Monday. Attendance rose to 508 before dropping back to 451 today, while a sympathy boycott spread to other all-white schools in Sussex County.

In Delaware's two other counties, New Castle and Kent, racial integration has been started without incident. At Wilmington, Delaware's largest city, more than 600 Negroes are attending elementary schools that were classified as white last year.

Bryant W. Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, credited "today's victory" at Milford to the revolt organized by his association. A celebration was held tonight at Lincoln, four miles south of here.

Hours before the board's announcement, Mr. Bowles told reporters that he had had an understanding with high state authorities that "new Milford board would remove the Negroes as their first order of business."

"Our meetings will continue," he said. "This is just the beginning. We are going to see that a thing like this never happens again. Since they will remove the Negroes, we're going to lead this school tomorrow."

New Members Recruited

Mr. Bowles, whose organization has recruited hundreds of new dues-paying members in Sussex County this week, said that a place on the Milford board had been offered to Paris C. Kirby, a prosperous farmer and one of the leaders of the anti-integration movement here, by "the Governor himself, but he turned it down."

Mr. Steiner, a Milford textile manufacturer, and the three other members of the board said they never had met Mr. Bowles or had attended any of his group's meetings.

"This action," Mr. Steiner declared, "is definitely not a surrender to the forces opposed to integration. Our decision to drop the Negro students was taken to give the state an opportunity to clarify their plans."

The other members of the board are George Robbins, a well-to-do farmer; David Greene, a feed dealer, and George Adams, dispatcher for a trucking firm.

"If any of the Negro students show up at the high school tomorrow they will not be admitted," Mr. Adams said. He added that the parents of the Negro pupils were being notified of the board's decision this evening.

Milford Board Bars Integration Of Negro Pupils

Special to The Inquirer

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 30.— Forces opposing integration of Negroes in former all-white schools here won at least a temporary victory today as a newly elected school board voted to remove 11 Negro pupils from the Milford High School and return them to an all-Negro school.

The step, which the new board said was taken "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole," was accompanied by an appeal from the board to all parents to end their continued boycott and send their children to classes as usual tomorrow morning. It also drew a cry of "Shame!" from the Wilmington chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and a renewed threat of legal action.

APPLAUDS BOARD ACTION

At the same time, William B. Bowles, president of the recently organized National Association for the Advancement of White People, applauded the board's action and warned that "our fight is just beginning." His warning was supported by the concerted action of white parents in other parts of the State, whose school boycott against integration cut still deeper today into classroom attendance through lower Delaware. The movement spread also to at least one school in Baltimore.

Edward R. Steiner, chairman of the new board, in a statement to parents late today, said that "in order that your children might return to school, the Milford Board of Education decided in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole to remove the 11 Negro students from the enrollment records of the school as of 3 P. M. Sept. 30."

"The school assignment and necessary transportation of these children for their future education is the responsibility of the State Board of Education. The Milford Board of Education appeals to all the constituents of the Milford Special School District to send their children to school tomorrow morning."

In Wilmington, Wagner D. Jackson, president of the Wilmington chapter of the NAACP, declared:

"We have just experienced here in Delaware the shameful spectacle of our duly constituted authorities ignominiously surrendering to the illegal actions of a lawless mob, and thereby depriving law-abiding citizens of fundamental constitutional rights, which are guaranteed them and which these officials are sworn to uphold. . . . We are sickened by the sight.

'DEFEAT BY MOB RULE'

". . . . While we cannot speak for others, we of the NAACP refuse to accept defeat by mob rule, and with our local and national legal staff we have already begun planning our next legal action. We have no other alternative."

Louis L. Redding, counsel for the 11 pupils slated for removal, could not be reached tonight for a statement as to whether he would fight the board's action in the courts.

Dr. George R. Miller, of the Delaware State Board of Education, said only 28 percent of the 1562 pupils enrolled in the Milford elementary and high school grades reported for classes today, the lowest figure since the schools reopened Monday after a week-long shutdown brought about by threats of violence.

Dr. Miller said attendance figures were "down sharply" at schools in Millsboro, Ellendale, Lincoln, Dagsboro, Oceanview and Gumboro.

PICKET IN BALTIMORE

In Baltimore, parents picketed Public School 34 in the southwest section of the city to protest admission of 12 Negro children to the kindergarten class. Dr. John Fischer, the city's school superintendent, said classroom attendance there was down by 50 percent.

The disturbance in Baltimore was the first such reported from that city, where integration began on a city-wide basis this fall. In other Maryland counties segregation is continuing pending further word from the U. S. Supreme Court.

Outside the high school here a jubilant crowd greeted the announcement that a new board of education had been named for the city. Its members are Steiner, a woolen mill owner; George Adams, a trucking company executive; George Robbins, a farmer, and David Green, a feed dealer.

HINGED ON RESIGNATIONS

Their appointment was announced by Dr. Miller but came about through a unique parliamentary maneuver involving the fact that resignations submitted by the previous board members never had been officially accepted by the State. The original board had permitted Negro students to register, but its members resigned —or tried to—on Sept. 23, when the State Board of Education said they had acted without its prior approval.

Two of the former members, Dean Kimmel and William V. Sipple, Jr., upon learning their resignations had not been accepted, met in special session, appointed a new slate of members under the board's constitutional power to fill its own vacancies—and then submitted their resignations to the new board.

Mass meetings called to protest against integration have been scheduled for Friday night at Roxana, Del., Saturday afternoon in Georgetown, Saturday night in Greenwood, and Sunday night in Bridgeville, according to Bowles.

In Dover, the office of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs reported the Governor would "have nothing to say for the present." Boggs was reported studying recommendations made by State officials and agencies concerned with the situation.

NO SCHOOL — Four young students are shown looking at a notice posted on the door of the Milford Public school in Delaware, which reads: "Closed until further notice." The Milford Board of Education closed the community's two public schools because of receiving calls threatening Negro pupils. More than 1000 persons attended a mass meeting the night before objecting, as they put it, not to integration itself, but to "rushing it through." (Newspress Photo)

Anti-Integration Feelings Fanned In Delaware Towns

MILFORD, Del. — (NS) — Heated sentiment against racial integration in public schools mushroomed throughout lower Delaware Wednesday as white students continued to boycott classes in increasing numbers.

The boycott started Monday at the Milford High School where 10 Negro pupils were admitted. Less than a third of the white pupils have attended classes since. On Tuesday, most of the white pupils stayed home at Lincoln, seven miles away.

The sympathy boycott struck again yesterday at Gumboro, where only three pupils of a normal attendance of 106 attended classes, after parents had been told by school district chairman Preston Niblett:

"I ask all people who are sending their children to Gumboro school to keep them home until further notice."

Meanwhile, the "National Association for the Advancement of White People" continued to whip up supporters by scheduling rallies throughout the area which witnessed the burning of a wooden cross Tuesday night on a field across from the Milford High School.

Top rally last night was slated in the Grange Hall at Laurel, with Bryant Bowles, President of the NAAWP, billed as principal speaker. Other mass meetings were slated at Dagsboro and near Millville.

Meanwhile, in Atlanta, Fulton County representative Hamilton Lokey declared yesterday that the private school amendment will be the death of the Georgia public school system.

In an interview with Ed Blair over radio station WAGA, Lokey said:

"This amendment wouldn't stand up under the Supreme Court."

Lokey added:

"It would be a shame and a disgrace if we permit our public school system to be thrown away under any such guise as this alleged private school plan."

Delaware Committee Formed to Prevent Integration Violence

By The Associated Press

DOVER, Del., Oct. 2.—A committee of citizens stood ready in this State capital today to ward off, if possible, an outgrowth of the anti-integration movement which has swept through other Delaware communities.

About 150 residents attended a closed meeting last night called by J. Leon Tarburton, school board member. The purpose, he said, was to organize a "vigilantes committee" to prevent "terrorism by lawless forces."

Ten Negro pupils are members of the otherwise all-white Dover High School's ninth grade, under an integration policy adopted this year as a result of the Supreme Court decision barring segregation.

Milford Program Abandoned.

In nearby Milford the School Board gave up on an integration program in the Milford High School when sentiment for segregation, fanned to a fever pitch by out-of-State proponents, brought about a boycott of the town's schools.

Those attending last night's meeting here were screened at the door of the meeting place by Mr. Tarburton and Dover Police Chief James E. Turner, who announced: "We will preserve peace and order in the city of Dover. If there appears there will be violence, we will stop it."

The names of those forming the so-called vigilantes committee were not disclosed.

No Disturbances at Meeting.

There were no disturbances at the Dover meeting and no one attended in hoods or masks, although Mr. Tarburton had announced earlier any one fearing reprisal could come so equipped.

Mr. Tarburton asked for and got a rising vote in support of any moves by the Dover School Board "to keep the schools open in the face of the segregation battle that has swept Lower Delaware."

Mr. Tarburton cautioned those present to stay away in the future from any segregation mass meetings because the "power of black magic sometimes can be strong." He did not elaborate.

Vice President Asks for End of Segregation as Milford Drops Integration Move

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 30—Vice President Richard M. Nixon came into Delaware, where white parents have been refusing to send children to racially integrated schools, and eloquently appealed today for an end to racial discrimination.

He noted he was sending his own two daughters Patricia, 8 years old, and Julie, 6, to Horace Mann Public School in the racially integrated Washington system, to grow up "respecting American traditions."

The choice of 600,000,000 nonwhites, who hold a possibly crucial balance of world power, as between communism and noncommunis may be swayed by an American example of equality of opportunity, he added.

The Vice President voiced his appeal extemporaneously when questioned at New Castle County Airport, on arriving here for a political swing. He repeated it for a state-wide radio broadcast later.

However, Mr. Nixon was not aware at the time that a new Board of Education in Milford had dropped the eleven Negro students from the rolls. This left the decision on integration up to the State.

Transitional Period

Observing that he only knew the situation here from newspaper accounts of the boycott organized in Milford and other communities in southern Delaware, Mr. Nixon said:

"I think we all have to realize that when the Supreme Court decision was handed down, it was anticipated that there would be a period in which we would have some difficulty while there was a transition * * *

"We have to realize that in the United States—in certain parts of it, at least certainly here in Delaware—there is an honest difference of opinion on this particular question. I can only speak from my own personal experience.

"My feeling is that here in Delaware and other states where there are similar problems, men and women of good will and good intentions, working patiently together, will find a way to carry out the letter and the spirit of the Supreme Court decision [outlawing racial segregation in public schools].

"I went to public schools al my life. I went to a Quaker college where there were students of various races, different racial and religious backgrounds. In my state of California we have nonsegregated schools. We find we get along. There is no reason why Americans, regardless of race, creed or color, cannot be educated together.

Tells of His Daughters

"My two daughters in Washington go to public schools, and in Washington nonsegregation is being applied.

"I have no fears at all with regard to sending my children to public schools, and they are going to continue going to public schools as long as they are of that age.

"I bring in this personal background only to indicate why I am confident that this present controversy in time will heal the differences, and we will find a way to work out this problem and meet it effectively.

"We think of this problem as a problem only for local schools, states, the nation. I know from the trip I took around the world that it is much bigger than that.

"There are 600,000,000 people in this world who hold the balance of power, and who are not white. They are trying to determine whether they should be on the Communist side or on our side. If they go to the Communist side, the struggle may be lost.

A 'Dream of Equality'

"One of the factors that would be tremendously helpful is for us here in the United States to show by example, by word and deed that the dream of equality—equality of opportunity, of education and of employment and the like—is coming true."

In the later radio version, Mr. Nixon added that such efforts at equality "will do immeasurable good in winning these people on the fence to our side, possibly even avoiding a war which we might lose."

"I commend Delaware officials who are trying patiently to work out the answer," Mr. Nixon concluded. "I am sure they will, and the people of Delaware in the end will agree with the decision, and will have no regrets."

Delaware officials, who have tried to avoid statements in the politically explosive situation heard the Vice President's extemporaneous remarks, and said privately that they had found his evident sincerity deeply moving

Segregationists Meet.

Last night, the pro-segrega...ionists held their eighth meet...g in as many days and cele...ated what was termed "a ...oint won" by Bryant Bowles, president for the Advancement of White People, the spearhead of the drive against integration.

Mr. Bowles was asked what the group's stand would be after the United States Supreme Court hands down its decision and he said:

"We won't adhere to that. They would be telling us how to do it and it is unconstitutional for the Supreme Court to make laws."

Asked if his organization planned to take any steps in Wilmington in the segregation issue there, Mr. Bowles said, "if they ask us for advice—and I understand we have been invited to attend a meeting there—then we will offer our help."

There were several other segregation developments in South1 eran and border States.

Baltimore Reaffirms Policy.

In Baltimore the Board of School Commissioners met late yesterday and unanimously reaffirmed their policy of integration after pickets protested the admission of 12 Negro kindergarten students to public school No. 34. Their action cut the overall attendance at the school by about 80 per cent.

The pickets, most of them women, varied in number from about 70 to about 13 at the noon hour, with replacements swelling the line again later in the day.

The school commissioners, decrying the picketing as "behavior that serves only to frighten children," announced that despite the demonstration, all public schools in the city will remain open.

"Teh Department of Education and the Police Department give their assurance that parents need not have any concern about sending their children to school.

Notes Apprehension.

"We are well aware," the school board added, "that it is only human to be somewhat apprehensive about changes in long standing customs.

"It is equally true, however, that one of the things that has made the United States the great bulwark against Communist and Fascist totalitarianism is the fact that, by common consent, we accept the principle of government by law and believe that adherence to law, especially when it concerns the rights of our fellow men, is a primary obligation of citizenship."

The board said it had confidence that "the overwhelming majority of Baltimoreans will not be misled into thinking anything good can possibly come from behavior that serves only to confuse and frighten children and to interfere with their education.

"Our schools have been open for almost four weeks without a single untoward incident, and in that time Baltimoreans have amply demonstrated the spirit of tolerance, understanding and fair play that has been a source of pride so often in the history of our city. Let us all continue to work together to maintain that tradition."

Travel Ruling Made.

In Washington, an examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that neither the Constitution nor Federal laws prohibiti segregation of passengers in interstate travel.

Isadore Freidson ruled against Mrs. Sarah Keyes of New York, a Negro woman who attempted to ride with white passengers on an interstate bus in North Carolina. The case now is expected to receive a full review by the ICC.

The State Democratic Convention in Georgia threw full support behind a "private school" amendment sponsored by Gov. Herman Talmadge. Indorsed also by the Governor-nominate, Marvin Griffin, the amendment would clear the way for the State to replace public schools with "private schools" to maintain segregation.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Cincinnati said they will appeal a Federal judge's ruling deferring action on "enforced segregation" in Hillsboro, Ohio, schools.

United States Judge John H. Druffel has stated that he will not rule on the NAACP petition hitting at segregation until two weeks after the United States Supreme Court outlines how segregation should be ended.

The NAACP says that Negro mothers were not allowed to register their children in almost all-white schools. But Hillsboro officials have insisted that the city has no segregation in schools.

At Middletown, Ohio, 12 Negroes were turned away from an all-white school for the second time.

NEGROES REMOVED AT MILFORD SCHOOL

New Board Says Move Is In Community Interest

TRYING TO END BOYCOTT

By The Associated Press

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 30. — A newly-elected Milford Board of Education voted Thursday to remove 11 Negro students from the rolls of the formerly all-white Milford high school and send them back to a Negro school "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole." White students have been boycotting the school.

The school board's action, announced after an emergency executive session, was the latest move in a segregation struggle that developed in this Delaware community over the admission of 11 Negro students to the high school in keeping with the recent Supreme Court ruling that segregation in the nation's schools should end.

One Board—Resigned

The issue of whether the 11 should attend classes with 1,500 white students at the Milford high school had kept the town and surrounding Delaware communities on tenterhooks for the past week.

At one point the Milford School Board resigned and the Milford schools, including the high school, were taken over by the state board. Tuesday's action was described by the new Milford board as "an attempt to solve the current issue."

The immediate question that arose was whether any of the 11 Negro students would attempt to disregard the board's edict and seek to attend classes Friday morning.

Attendance Up As School Bars 11 Negroes

By the Associated Press

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 1.—Attendance jumped back to normal today at Milford High School as triumphant segregation forces hailed the defeat of an attempt to send 11 Negro students to the all-white school.

For four days this week attendance at the school—with 10 of the Negro pupils in classes—had dropped to only about one third of normal.

First Step.

Pro-segregationists called the return of all-white classes "the first step toward our ultimate goal of making sure that no Negroes attend white schools in the state."

A new school board selected yesterday rescinded an order permitting the Negro children to attend the school. It said the action was "in the best interests of the pupils in the community."

Police chief S. G. Powell said today that police had found a cross burning in a vacant lot across from the all-Negro Benjamin Banneker elementary school last night. It was the second cross-burning of the week.

In nearby Dover, the state capital, J. Leon Tarburton, a member of the Dover school board, called a meeting tonight to organize a group "to prevent terrorism by lawless forces." He said he proposes organization of a "vigilantes committee" but did not further explain his objectives.

Masks Permitted.

He said "businessmen who fear reprisals may come masked but must identify themselves at the door."

Dover High School has 10 Negroes attending its ninth grade.

Dr. George R. Miller, state superintendent of public instruction, reported that attendance at seven other schools in nearby towns, where a protest boycott had developed, also was back to normal today. He disclosed that Milford's 11 Negro pupils have not been assigned as yet to any school.

Last night, the pro-segregationists met and celebrated what was termed "a point won" by Bryant Bowles, president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, the spearhead of the drive against integration.

Mr. Bowles, spokesman for the segregation forces, was asked what the group's stand would be after the U.S. Supreme Court hands down its decision and he said:

"We won't adhere to that. They would be telling us how to do it and it is unconstitutional for the Supreme Court to make laws."

In reply, the school board president said:

"Mr. Bowles is not a resident of this community. He is not a resident of this state and I consider his remarks inflammatory."

Town Shaken To Roots By School Racial Issue

Integration Closes Classes After Threats And Mass Meetings In Delaware

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 26 (AP)—The first crisis over race relations in 54 years has shaken this town of 5700 to its roots. And many residents are fearful that before the question of integrating white and Negro pupils in the community's high school is settled, there are going to be scars—both physical and mental.

This town's two schools, closed a week because of threatened race violence, are scheduled to reopen tomorrow. But some citizens still are seeking ways to stop any classes with Negro and white students.

Back at the turn of the century Milford had race trouble, now clouded factually by the passing years. Since then race relations have run on a friendly basis until four weeks ago when 11 Negroes registered for classes in the all-white combination high-and-elementary school.

The whole thing started when the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that segregation of school pupils was unconstitutional. Delaware had segregated schools.

Court Ruling Is Starter

What happened, then, in Delaware after the high court ruled? In Wilmington, school officials decided that they would start integrating at the first grade level, allowing separate classes for white and Negro pupils to continue in the upper grades.

In Kent and Sussex Counties downstate, nothing was said for a long time about the situation. Then on Sept. 7, 11 pupils who had graduated from the all-Negro Benjamin Bannecker Elementary School applied for admission to the all-white Lakeview Avenue High School.

Previously, Negro pupils had to attend high school classes in all-Negro schools in either Dover or Georgetown, 18 miles north or south from Milford.

All Seems Well

None of the 237 elementary grade pupils at Benjamin Bannecker School applied for enrollment in the elementary grades at Lakeview.

Classes opened at both Lakeview and Banneker schools on Sept. 8. All went well and the four-member school board plus school district officials were satisfied that integration was working. But on Sept. 17, a meeting was held. No one knows who called it, but 1500 persons showed up. No Negroes were present. Petitions to fight integration were circulated.

On Monday morning, another mass meeting mushroomed at the Lakeview School.

Russell V. Bradley, a husky, fortyish mechanic, took over the microphone and conducted the meeting. He said:

"I'm not against Negores or opposed to them or anything else. We're law-abiding people here and if we have to have integration we might not like it but we'll accept it. But I think this thing has been badly handled by the school board. They didn't tell us these Negroes were to be admitted to school this term."

Petition Delivered

As the mass meeting broke up School Board President Dean Kimmel was handed the petition with 1002 names. It called for the discharge of the 11 Negro pupils from the 10th grade before school was reoponed.

The board met that night (Sept. 20)—behind closed doors. Outside a knot of citizens stood around, getting more and more impatient.

Finally, Kimmel and School Superintendent Ramon C. Cobbs announced the schools would reopen Tuesday.

The board went home to be greeted by a deluge of phone calls which threatened violence if the Negro pupils were allowed to return to class. State Police now are trying to find out who made those calls.

Kimmel telephoned each member of the board, got their approval to issue a statement closing the schools until further notice.

Simmers Down

The situation simmered for a few more days, with the youngsters—white and Negro—taking advantage of the unexpected holiday.

Last Wednesday the Milford school board met again. It now had only three members. One had resigned when the fuss erupted. This time, after another lengthy closed-door session, the board decided to reopen the community's two schools tomorrow—again "without segregation."

It coupled this announcement with a threat: The three members would quit if the State Board of Education overruled them.

Thursday the state board rebuked the Milford board for putting integration into effect, but said that since the deed was done—it was done. The state board said that local boards had been asked to submit plans for integration before placing them into operation.

This rebuke nettled the three Milford members and they resigned. Now the state board, temporarily, is operating the two Milford schools. They'll reopen tomorrow with Negro students integrated.

But opponents of integration haven't given up the fight yet. And police are ready for any emergency.

Delaware School Shut By Threats Had Admitted 11 Negro Pupils

By The United Press

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 21.—The two public schools here were closed indefinitely today because of telephoned threats of violence over eleven negro pupils admitted to the local high school.

The Milford Board of Education said the schools will remain closed "in the interest of the safety of all children" until a suitable program can be worked out. The board said it would make "day to day" announcements of whether or not the schools will open the following day.

A detail of five policemen patrolled the 687-pupil Lake Avenue School, a combined elementary and high school for white pupils, as a precautionary measure, but there were no incidents. The other school closed is the Benjamin Bannecker elementary and junior high school for Negroes, which has a registration of 237 pupils.

Before this term, Negro high school students attended an all-Negro school at Dover, nineteen miles away.

The Board of Education suspended classes at the two schools yesterday when it received a petition against integration signed by 1,000 residents. Last night the board announced that classes would be resumed today, but did not state whether the Negro pupils would attend the high school.

The threatening telephone calls started coming in immediately after that announcement, Raymond S. Cobb, superintendent of schools, said. The board then announced the indefinite closing of the schools.

Before the board canceled its plan to reopen the schools, the parents of the eleven Negro children, at the request of the Rev. Randolph Fisher, local head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, agreed to keep their children at home until Monday.

Might Be Violence

Dean Kimmell, president of the school board, said that in addition to the telephone calls, a delegation of residents opposed to integration came to his home and told him some residents had "gotten out of hand and there might be violence."

Mr. Fisher said he advised the Negro students to stay home until Monday to "give the protesting people an opportunity to understand that they must respect the law."

Russel Bradley, president of the Parent-Teacher Association of near-by Lincoln, which is included in the Milford school district, said he and other anti-integrationists feel the school board rushed the intgeration plans into effect without proper consideration.

"We have a peculiar problem," he said. "In our Lincoln area more than 50 per cent of the school children are Negroes, and more than 30 per cent of the Negro children come from a labor camp for migrant workers.

"We think our children might be subjected to some influence which we do not approve. I think the problem can be worked out, but it will take time, and rushing into it like this is certainly not the solution."

Milford Schools Shut For Children's Safety

Special to The Inquirer

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 21.—Milford's two public schools were ordered closed early today until further notice "in the interest of the safety of all children" after members of the Board of Education reported they had received "numerous calls" threatening violence if any of 11 Negro pupils attended classes in the high school.

The board issued the order as one of its four members, Harry E. Mayhew, announced his resignation. He would not discuss his reasons, but indicated he might have a statement later. A Democrat, he is a candidate for the State Legislature at the November election.

BOARD CALLED UNITED

According to reliable reports, all of the board members have acted unanimously in their attempts to cope with the school controversy.

The board had announced late last night, as tension mounted over its efforts to abolish segregation, that classes would be resumed today. Both schools were closed yesterday to permit the board to hold a mass meeting to discuss a petition against integration signed by 1002 residents of this area.

PRESSURE ON BOARD

Consisting of three businessmen and a housewife, the board met at the high school last night to discuss the emergency. While the parley was in progress, a group of opponents of integration gathered outside. Some shouted and pounded on the walls with poles.

The board then decided to reopen the Lake Avenue School, a combined elementary and high schoo lto which the 11 Negroes were admitted to 10th grade classes at the opening of the fall term Sept. 7, and the Benjamin Bannecker School, which has 239 Negro pupils in grades one to nine.

CANCELS REOPENING

A notice to that effect was broadcast at 11 A. M. Two hours later, however, Dr. Raymon C. Cobbs, school superintendent and board secretary, issued a statement announcing the cancellation of reopening plans.

Members of the board, he said, had received after the broadcast "numerous calls threatening violence in case any Negro children attended classes today."

"In the interest of the safety of all children," he said, "the Milforad Board of Education has announced that Milford schools will be closed until further notice."

Dean Kimmell, president of the board, said that in addition to telephone calls, a delegation of citizens opposed to integration had called at his home last midnight and told him that some residents had "gotten out of hand and there might be violence."

Meanwhile, before the board canceled its plans to reopen the schools, parents of the 11 Negro pupils agreed to keep their children from school until next Monday.

PARENTS HEED PLEA

The parents' decision was announced by the Rev. Randolph H. Fisher, president of the Sussex county branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He said he had been asked by members of the school board to ask the Negro parents to keep the children at home.

The clergyman added that they had agreed "on a temporary basis only, to give the people who are protesting an opportunity to understand that they must respect the law."

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled earlier this year that segregation in public educational systems was unconstitutional.

According to Dr. Cobbs, about 14,000 persons live in the school district, which includes several nearby communities. About 3500 of these are Negro, he said.

In the past, all Negro children graduated from the Bannecker School were sent to the William Henry High School at Dover, 19 miles from here.

Racial Boycott Hits 2d School

Special to The Inquirer

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 28.—The boycott by most of the students of the Lakeview ave. combined elementary-high school in protest against racial integration spread today to the Lincoln elementary school, seven miles from here.

More than 100 of the Lincoln school's 140 pupils stayed away from classes this morning in sympathy with the Milford students and residents of Lincoln staged a mass meeting on the school grounds.

The Lincoln school has no racial problem of its own as compared to the school here where 10 Negro students have been admitted in a move to end racial segregation.

LAID TO AGITATION

Lincoln school officials said today's development was the direct result of agitation by opponents of integration who held a mass meeting in Lincoln last night. At the meeting speakers of the National Association for the Advancement of White People gave talks urging school boycotts in sympathy with the Milford pupils.

Today's mass meeting on the Lincoln school grounds was attended by about 100 residents. While the demonstration was orderly, teachers called State police, who dispersed the crowd. The Lincoln School Board called an emergency meeting to discuss the situation and ordered classes to continue.

MEETING IN LAUREL

Meanwhile, the racial school problem appeared to be spreading to other communities in Delaware. At Laurel, announcement was made of a meeting tomorrow night to "formulate plans for residents of the Laurel Special School District to vote on desegregation."

Lee Hastings, who said he was chairman of the meeting committee, said the meeting would be held at the Broadcreek Grange Hall just outside Laurel on the road to Georgetown, at 8 o'clock.

Hastings said the principal speaker would be Manaen F. Warrington, described as a nondenominational evangelist and newly elected speaker of the NAAWP.

ATTENDANCE INCREASES

At Milford, Dr. George R. Miller, State Superintendent of public instruction, said that 509 pupils, or 22.6 percent of the enrollment of 1562, attended classes today, including the 10 Negro pupils. This was an increase of 53 pupils over yesterday's attendance.

Dr. Miller said the two factors still dominating the situation were "fear of violence, and intimidation by those opposed to the integration."

He said State officials at present were not contemplating prosecuting parents who deliberately keep their children home in violation of the State compulsory school attendance law. The law requires school attendance until the age of 16.

De-Segregated Schools Absenteeism Spreading

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 29 (U.P.)—Heavy absenteeism spread to more public schools throughout South Delaware today in what appeared to be an organized campaign against racial integration of the state school system.

More than 2000 pupils, nearly all of them white, did not report for elementary and high school classes here and in six nearby communities.

The National Association for the Advancement of White People, a pro-segregation group headed by Bryant Bowles, of Washington, D. C., apparently was the driving force behind the school boycott.

There also were reports that many parents kept their children home today after receiving telephone calls "suggesting" that they do so.

Only 71 of 1018 pupils appeared today at schools in Gumsboro, Ellendale, Millsboro and Lincoln. Only 499 of 1567 pupils attended the combination elementary and high school at Milford, where the boycott began Monday over the enrollment of 11 Negro students.

State school officials apparently were watching the situation progress, but there was no indication that they planned any counteraction to end it.

POLICE GUARD NEGRO STUDENTS—Three unidentified Negro girl students leave Milford, Del., high school and walk toward private cars after classes were reopened with an integrated 10th grade. The girls and seven other Negro pupils were taken home in a private car and a bus under police guard. Less than 30 per cent of the more than 1,500 white pupils enrolled appeared for classes. There was no incident as the school was closed for a week.

Governor Acts As Integrated School Reopens

Indecision seen cause of trouble

- Order bans mobs from gathering
- Local board quits; state board queries

By JAMES L. HICKS

MILFORD, Del. — Governor J. Caleb Boggs, Friday issued an order banning all crowds from gathering near Milford's two high schools as this tiny community prepared Monday to resume its integrated school program amid muttered threats of "bloodshed" and "civil war."

The governor's belated action came as this tiny community of 5,700 persons found itself the focal point of a test which might go far to determine whether the nation's public officials are going to strike down school segregation as directed by the Supreme Court, or whether they will bow to local vocal minorities who oppose the court's order.

—o O o—

AS THIS IS written eleven colored students, six girls and five boys, are on their way back to the Lakeview High School which had admitted colored the first time this fall

On their way to the former all white high school they must pass through the streets of their own hometown which their own police chief has pictured as a "keg of dynamite which might explode any minute."

The "dynamite" referred to is an angry group of Milford citizens which already has reached 3,000 and which might grow to more by the time the school bell rings.

They have demonstrated such hostility to the integration of colored students that the Milford school board found it necessary to close the schools for a week and finally to resign en masse when the state school board refused to back their integration plan.

—o O o—

GOVERNOR BOGG'S statement was aimed at keeping down the crowds or mobs which many feel might appear here Monday when the students attempt to return to school after being ordered to do so by the state board of education.

The Milford schools were closed Friday September 17 after an angry group of citizens held a meeting on that date at the American Legion Hall here and staged another and larger demonstration at the school itself on September 20.

The Milford school board which had admitted the colored students in the first place decided to keep the school closed until it could get a defnite vote of approval on its integration plan from the Delaware State School Board.

—o O o—

TO FURTHER make sure of its position in admitting colored children to the school, the Milford board sought an opinion of their action from the Delaware State Attorney General.

Attorney General H. Albert Young gave the Milford board a clear and direct answer on its action.

He told the board that they not only had acted within the letter of the law in admitting the colored students, but he added that they would have violated the law if they had taken any other action except to admit them.

This was language which seemingly anyone could understand. It was made with the full knowledge of the governor and it came from the mouth of the highest legal officer in the state.

—o O o—

YET A FEW hours later when the Milford school board asked the Delaware State School board to back it up on admitting the colored students the state school board refused.

It ordered the school reopened with the colored students in attendance. But it would neither approve or disapprove the action taken by the Milford board in admitting the colored students.

Instead, and in the face of the Attorney General's previous clear cut statement on the correctness of the Milford board's action, the state school board said it would ask the Governor to ask the state Supreme Court for an "advisory opinion" on the entire matter.

—o O o—

THIS DILLY dallying and indecision by the state board headed by J. Ohrum Small of Wilmington, so enraged the forward-thinking members of the Milford school board that they immediately resigned en masse leaving little Milford with an integrated school, but no school board.

This was the situation as the eleven colored youngsters trudged back towards their classrooms Monday.

They did not know what to expect. They knew, and they told reporters, that they had had excellent relations with their white fellow students since the plan was first begun.

But they said after seeing the parents of some of their classmates in the hostile group which demanded their ouster from the school, they did not know what kind of reception they would receive Monday.

TWO OF THE youngsters had made a bid for berths on the football team. They felt that they had done well.

But they said Thursday that they did not know whether they would be welcomed on the squad again though they would try if permitted.

The ironic part of the whole sad mess was that the students had nothing to do with it.

As near as it can be learned some opponent of the integration plan started a wild report that a colored youth had escorted a white student to a school dance.

Although no one saw fit to pin down the rumor, this rumor was repeated on the air, talked in the community and circulated through the newspapers.

—o O o—

EVEN IF it had been true there are many who would see nothing wrong with it. But they would be those who do not know Milford.

This little city located on route 113, 18 miles south of Dover, Delaware's state capital ... is as southern in its habits of segregation as any part of the Deep South.

The majority of the city's permanent colored residents are grouped into a small section on the north end of town.

Milford is a crop-growing area and at times its population is considerably swelled by large bands of migrant workers who travel from one part of the state to another picking beans, and apples and crops in season.

The migrant habits of these workers cannot be held up to any community as an ideal, to say the least. But informed people know that they are not the only ones to blame for their plight.

—o O o—

HOWEVER, IT appears that Milford's bigots and even some of its self-respecting citizens seized upon the conduct of the migrants to judge the other colored citizens of Milford.

Thus one prominent white citizen said to the writer: "Some of our colored folks here are all right, but I'd never think of letting my daughter go to school with those bean pickers. You just don't know them, mister."

So Milford like Georgia and Mississippi and other communities set up a "place" for the colored man.

This writer was rudely refused a room at Milford's only hotel, and denied a meal in a Milford restaurant purely because of his race.

—o O o—

LET'S GO back to the "keg of dynamite." Ordinarily when there is a tense racial situation in any town the law enforcement officers go out of their way to minimize it in the press even though they know that such a situation might exist.

This is done of course with the hope that the smoldering situation might not be fanned into an open flame. But not so at Milford.

On the contrary the police chief was widely quoted in the press as stating that the town was a "keg of dynamite."

The day after the state board ordered the Milford schools reopened, this reporter on a routine check of the police chief's office, was told when he asked for the chief that the chief had "taken the day off."

—o O o—

OFFICIALS IN charge at the station said no special plans of action to ward off an emergency had been taken by police.

"We are here to protect life and limb in case anything happens," one officer said.

Out of the welter of confusion at Milford as the school prepared to open, one thing was clear:

Milford's school children had been the victim of indecision on the part of those paid to make decisions. And it beame increasingly apparent that the more they ran away from their responsibility, the more irresponsible the situation became.

—o O o—

THE NAACP is on the scene at Milford with the Rev. Randolph Fisher, president of the Milford branch doing everything possible to prevent an outbreak.

He is constantly in touch with officials of the national office and Louis J. Redding, Wilmington attorney, who represents the 11 colored students was present at the meeting of the state board in Dover Thursday night.

Dr. Kenneth Clark of the City College of New York and Wagner D. Jackson, Delaware State NAACP head, were also on the scene much of last week.

Mayor Edward C. Evans of Milford told the AFRO Thursday night that he did not anticipate any trouble in his city.

This statement was made, however, while the board was in executive session deciding on whether or not to readmit the colored students.

—o O o—

AFTER THE decision to readmit them, the mayor stated that Milford on Monday would either see a "hell of a mess or nothing."

Since the attorney general of the state has ruled that to deny the colored students admission would violate the law of the land, the situation in Milford offers a clear cut case of the law against the mob.

TEN NEGROES BACK IN MILFORD SCHOOL

70% of White Students Fail to Attend—The Reopening Takes Place Quietly

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 27—The Milford public schools, closed for a week because of threats over integration, reopened today with Negro pupils in attendance at a previously all-white school.

There was no violence or other incident, but some 70 per cent of the white pupils boycotted the Lakeview Avenue School, a combined elementary and high school, which had enrolled eleven Negroes on Sept. 8.

The town's only other school houses 237 elementary grade Negro pupils.

About fifty persons stood by, some muttering protests against integration as ten of the eleven Negro pupils returned to class at Lakeview Avenue, two of them aboard a school bus. The other eight arrived in two private cars, each escorted by State Troopers. There was no explanation why the eleventh stayed away.

A score of State Troopers and local police patrolled the school area throughout the day. Mayor Edward C. Evans and Samuel G. Powell, Milford chief of police, said the same precautions would be continued as a "safety measure" until tension had disappeared.

Reports on Attendance

Dr. George R. Miller Jr., State Superintenrdent of Public Instruction, reported attendance at the Lakeview school as follows: elementary department, 274 out of 892, and in the high school, 182 out of 670.

Ray Wilkerson, principal of the elementary division, attributed "half of the absenteeism as due to fear of possible disorder rather than opposition" to the Supreme Court's order outlawing segregation.

After today's classes, Dr. Miller announced that the "exceptional cooperation" of Milford residents and pupils in permitting the schools to reopen "without incident," had made it possible to return the schools to local school authorities.

He said this action was taken at the direction of J. Ohrum Small of Wilmington, president of the six-member State Board of Education. Dr. Miller noted that the state board had "temporarily assumed the responsibility for the initial reopening of the schools for security reasons only."

Some fifty anti-integrationists ignored Gov. J. Caleb Boggs' plea that there be no gathering at the school this morning. They stood in small clusters on the tree-shaded sidewalk near the main entrance laughing and cheering as school buses arrived with few children aboard.

Two of the buses were from the Milford Neck section, where Paris C. Kirby, a prosperous farmer, has been an outspoken leader of the pro-segregationists. Usually, the buses carry eighty-one pupils, but today one was empty and the other had only one youngster.

Later, the sidewalk group was joined by nearly 100 other persons, most of whom had been attracted to the scene by broadcasts.

Confident of Solution

Commenting on the resistance to school integration in Milford, Del., Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said yesterday he was confident that the situation would be solved with "American good sense and fair play."

In a statement issued by the N.A.A.C.P., Mr. Marshall pointed out that the Supreme Court ruling against segregation was being carried out in many Southern communities without incident.

MILFORD SCHOOL REOPENS: Two of the eleven Negro pupils in tenth grade of Milford (Del.) School entering the building yesterday under guidance of a Milford policeman. Ten Negro students reported for classes without incident, but a number of white pupils stayed home because their parents either feared violence or because they opposed integration.

Bulk of White Pupils Stay Away From Milford School

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 27 (AP)—Milford's integrated high school reopened without undue furor today but less than 30 per cent of the white pupils showed up for classes.

Ten of the 11 Negro pupils enrolled in the 10th grade reported for school, attended their sparsely populated classes and then went home under police guard. There were no incidents in this race-tense town of 5,700. Some of the absent white pupils were kept home by parents fearful of violence or opposed to integration.

One-Third Attend.

Of the 1,562 pupils enrolled in elementary and high school grades at the Lakeview Ave. School, 456 were on hand when the school's classes started.

This number decreased during the day as the restive pupils fidgeted under the glare of attention from cameramen and newsmen on the school lawn. At lunch time some pupils wandered out of school, bantered with newsmen and said they were going home for the day.

Meanwhile, the situation was reported normal at the all-Negro Benjamin Banaker School where 237 elementary grade pupils are enrolled.

The schools were closed last week by the now resigned Milford School Board. The state education board assumed jurisdiction and with the aid of 15 state policemen and the eight-man Milford police force reopened the schools today.

Crowd Gathers.

A crowd of about 100 persons gathered on the sidewalk and lawns of the school early this morning. Generally they were orderly but when they gathered in small groups or started talking loudly they were dispersed by police.

Dr. G. R. Miller, state superintendent of public instruction, issued a statement late in the day, announcing the state board was returning administration of the school—but not the policy-making power—to the superintendent, Dr. Ramon C. Cobbs. Dr. Cobbs was not in school today. His home said he was out of town.

Police Chief S. G. Powell and Maj. Fred K. Lamb, of the state police, said the details would be on hand again tomorrow for security purposes.

Officials said they expected a pickup in the number of pupils attending classes tomorrow. They explained parents notified them they were keeping their children home today because of the possibility of violence.

Students Strike In All-White Grade School

MILFORD, Del.—(INS)—The boycott of the Milford High School by most of its white pupils in protest against racial integration spread Tuesday to the all-white elementary school at Lincoln, seven miles away.

More than 100 of the Lincoln's school's 140 pupils boycotted classes "in sympathy" with the Milford students this morning and residents of the town staged a mass meeting on the school grounds.

The Lincoln School has no racial problem of its own, and all of its pupils are white, as compared to the Milford High School where 10 Negro pupils have been admitted in a move to end racial segregation.

INTEGRATION FOES BID PARENTS ACT

Ask They Keep Children Home When Milford Schools Open Today—3,000 at Rally

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 28—Foes of racial integration in the schools today urged parents to "beat" Federal and state laws by keeping their children home when schools opened here tomorrow.

The suggestions was made at a rally sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of White People. The rally was held on the "private property" of the Harrington Air Field, eight miles west of here.

It was greeted with cheers by about 3,000 persons, hundreds of whom arrived in cars bearing out-of-tate license plates, mainly Maryland and Virginia.

The meeting was arranged with the support of local pro-segregation leaders. It was called to discuss means of combatting a State Board of Education order that Milford schools reopen tomorrow with eleven Negro pupils continuing in the tenth grade of previously all-white senior high school, "until their legal rights are determined by proper judicial authority."

The schools here were closed all last week because of threats of violence if the Negro children were not dropped from the Lakeview Avenue High School. In the past, graduates of the Negro school, which has classes through the ninth grade, had to continue their education at Negro high schools in Dover, twenty miles north of here, or at Georgetown, eighteen miles to the south.

Founder Convenes Meeting

The mass meeting at the Harrington Air Field was called to order by Bryant W. Bowles, of Alexandria, Va., fonder and president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which he described as a non-profit organization with headquarters in Washington.

After an invocation by Fred Wittman, who identified himself as a Milford evangelist, the crowd recited the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag and stood while recordings of "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America" were played over a loudspeaker system.

Then, Mr. Bowles, a staff sergeant in the Marines during the last war, stepped before the microphone and declared that his organization felt, "like most of yuo, that your constitutional rights have been infringed upon."

He charged that the integration movement was backed by organized agitating groups which, if not Communist-supported, were playing into the hands of Communists. They would like to see violence, the putting of one race against the other, he said.

After outlining the purposes of his "rock bottom American" organization, which includes separation of the races, Mr. Bowles declared:

"If you people want to maintain separate schools, you will not win in the end through violence. There is another way.

"You could be fined for keeping your children out of integrated schools if they could find a jury among you that would convict you.

"But," he continued, "you certainly have the right to protect your child by keeping it home if you are afraid there is going to be violence. I'd lock the door before my child got out and not after."

Would Keep Child Home

He added that he would not permit his daughter, who was 3, to attend school with Negroes "while I have breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

Before obtaining three volunteers from the crowd to form a board for a local chapter of the organization, Mr. Bowles introduced his wife as a native of Texas, and said that he had been born in Florida.

William H. Macklin, who identified himself as "the 74-year-old Mayor of Cedar Creek," got on the speakers platform and cried into the microphone:

"Hurrah for the real white folks blue. We are not here to fight the colored people. They are citizens—but I am thinging about my grandchildren."

As the crowd yelled its approval, Mr. Macklin said:

"There's a way out of this. As fathers and mothers, we should keep our children home from school tomorrow. Who is going to drive them to school? Let us keep our childrfen home and see what the result is. We are the people."

Both speakers denounced the Supreme Court for outlawing school segregation.

Those who volunteered to oranize a local chapter of Mr. Bowles' organization identified themselves as the Rev. Manaen F. Warrington, a nondenominational evangelist from near-by Selbyville; Mrs. Mildred Sharp, the mother of three Milford school children, and Charles P. West, of Gumboro.

"I wouldn't he here if the Lord hadn't sent me," Mr. Warrington told the crowd. "But after much prayerful consideration, I know that God meant us to be separated." Also, he added, there must be no integration if "we are to keep faith with what the people sought to preserve at Pearl Harbor."

Meanwhile, in this town, all was quiet over the week-end. Mayor Edward C. Evans and Chief of Police Samuel G. Powell reported that there had been no new threats of violence. They said that they also had heard reports that some white parents were planning to keep their children home tomorrow.

Vacillating school board in Del. politically mixed

MILFORD, Del.—The Delaware State School Board, which acted so indecisively to bring on the current tense situation in Milford, is composed of three Democrats and three Republicans, as follows:

J. Ohrum Small of Wilmington, board chairman; Byard V. Carmean of Laurel, George Coulson of Wilmington, Edgar Buchanan of Dover, Marvel O. Watson of Dover and Clayton A. Bunting of Shelbyville.

It is the considered opinion of Milford citizens that if the board had acted decisively and approved the Milford integration plan the near riot siuation which the town found itself in on Monday would never have existed.

Bainbridge pupils without schooling

Refused at school on naval base, they boycott segregated unit

as a segregated school.

Cecil county officials maintain that they cannot integrate the school because of the ruling of Edward D. E. Rollins, Attorney-General of Maryland that the state segregation law is effective until the Supreme Court hands down its final decision in the school cases.

However, in leasing the building on the base now being used as a school, the county board of education agreed with Navy officials that:

"—The operation of the above mentioned educational facilities shall be conducted without segregation on the basis of race—"

—o O o—

THE CECIL COUNTY board has been advised by its attorney, Miss Doris Scott. that they had no authority to make such an agreement.

A copy of Miss Scott's legal opinion was sent to Dr. Dearing by Everett J. Connellee, president of the board.

Her letter said in part:

"It has been the policy, practice and law of the state of Maryland to maintain separate schools for colored children since the institution of public education for colored children.

"On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court — announced that segregation is a denial of the equal protection of the laws—

"However, no final decree has promulgaged in this case.

"The State Board of Education (on the advice of the Attorney-General) decreed on May 26, that no integration of colored and white children shall be commenced until such time as a final decree and effective date is handed down by the Supreme Court."

—o O o—

MISS SCOTT held also that the non-segregation agreement is invalid because the county board did not have the approval of the state superintendent of schools as required by law, in making such contracts.

She said "Moreover, it is obvious from the present position of the State Bord of Education that this contract cannot be ratified and that its performance is impossible."

She recommended that the county board so advise the Navy officials and revise the contract agreeing to do away with segregation:

"—At such time as the Supreme Court promulgates a final decree — and in accordance with the effective date of said final decree; and in accordance with the program of integration to be adopted by the State Board of Education."

—o O o—

MR. CONNELLEE'S letter to Mr. Dearing thanked him for "the interest you have taken in the educational problems of Cecil County." It said also:

"I am confident that when the Attorneys-General meet with the Supreme Court in October, a sound plan of procedure acceptable to all interested persons can be worked out, and cessation of segregation will commence in an orderly fashion."

The NAACP attorneys are now preparing details of their case to be submitted to the national office for advice and approval.

Six of the 13 Bainbridge children affected are attending the small colored school in Port Deposit. Md.

School Riots Receive No Church Group Support

Daily World Atlanta Ga

Sat 10-9-54

BALTIMORE, Md. — Opponents on integration in the city's public schools who caused nationwide attention to be focused on Baltimore last week by picketing several of the schools and making attempts at violence found no comfort from church groups.

The Council of Churches and Christian Education of Maryland Delaware issued a call on October 1 to the clergymen of Baltimore to urge picketing parents to cease their "self-defeating movement and to join with the rest of our citizenry in an earnest effort to maintain law and order in Baltimore."

COURT DECISION

Especially strong statements were issued by Superintendent Norman L. Trott and J. Luther Neff of the Baltimore South and Baltimore East Districts of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Church. Dr. Trott called upon South Baltimore Methodists "to support the position taken by public school authorities in conformity with the Supreme Court decision." He declared that it is "good Americanism" to believe that all men are created free and equal.

He added, "Christians are likewise committed to the belief that all the people of the world are children of the Heavenly Father and they are children in Christ. Methodists as good Christians and good Americans should cooperate with all responsible authorities in making possible this right decision regarding desegregation in our schools. They should not permit either persons or groups to upset the orderly process of law, substituting race prejudice instead."

The Rev. Herbert L. Weaver, Jr., pastor of the Patterson Memorial Methodist Church and chairman of the South Baltimore Ministerial Association, deplored the outbreak at Southern High School for the following reasons:

"First, it was a deliberate attempt to discredit those whom God loves and to further the breach which already exists between His children. Words that were uttered and blows that were struck a disgrace to a Christian community and an insult to the Almighty God. We must, as Christian ministers, condemn any such spirit or action.

"Second, it was an attempt at mob rule. The courts of our land and our own local authorities have created laws concerning the operation of our schools. As long as they are in existence, we believe that they must be obeyed.

"We bow to the Almighty in repentence that we have not more successfully led His people down the pathway of the Christian life."

L. Johnson, of Rehobth Church of God in Christ, is escorting the students. About two-thirds of the white students remained away from classes here last week in protest against desegregation.

Maryland Chant and March at Schools Ten Arrested

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 4—About [illegible] white students took part in running demonstrations here today against desegregation of the public schools.

City Hall and the Southern High School—scene of the first serious disorders last Friday—figured in today's developments. Reserve squads of the police had little trouble in dispersing each group as it gathered, but the shouting demonstrators usually regrouped and marched somewhere else.

There were three arrests during the day and each person involved was arraigned in South Baltimore Police Court.

Charles J. Luthardt, 46 years old, who who said he was the father of three sons attending Southern, was put on probation without verdict on a charge of disorderly conduct. George Hamilton, 33, a seaman from Charleston, W. Va., was fined $10 and costs for disorderly conduct. James Barbee, an 18-year-old Negro, who had been escorting Negro pupils to school, was fined $100 and costs on a charge of carrying a "dagger."

Most of the persons who protested the Supreme Court's decision on the schools, though, were themselves pupils on a self-assigned holiday. They were for the most part in a "school's out" mood. They wore slacks and sports shirts or T-shirts and they posed happily for cameras.

One small incident suggested the paradoxical nature of the events. Along Baltimore Street the wind blew a hat from the head of an elderly Negro at the fourth. One of the marchers broke ranks, recovered the hat and handed it to the man with apparently sincere respects.

But at City Hall, when Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro failed to respond to their chanted, "We want the Mayor," they yelled "Come and get us" at police officers who broadcast a warning to move on from a mobile truck.

Backed by the Mayor [illegible] in the effort to get high-level attention, they moved across a street, in some manner breaking a window on a street car in the process. A fringe of curious adults invariably gathered wherever the boys were concentrated.

Despite the substantial boycott of classes, the demonstrations and the appearance of inflammatory signs on the driveways of the Garrison Junior High School, Dr. John H. Fischer, Superintendent of Schools, said that the vast majority of Baltimore public schools are operating normally."

Baltimore has 140,000 pupils, about 85,000 of them white and 55,000 Negro. The races are being mixed at 52 of the city's 190 schools.

Dr. Fischer and other city officials are known to have been concerned with the likelihood that persons from outside Baltimore have figured in the rapidly developing situation here. Segregation had apparently ended quietly and amicably with the regular fall enrollment on Sept. 7. Then, on Friday, there was a spate of rumor-spreading phone calls, and violence broke out at the Southern High School.

Tonight a sergeant and nine patrolmen were on duty at the white-trimmed red brick school. It is in an industrial region of South Baltimore and its present student body numbers 1,787; of these, thirteen are Negro boys and twenty-four are Negro girls.

There is an irony in the fact that Southern is involved in the situation. Four times the school won Freedoms Foundation Awards. Then, last Feb. 22 at Valley Forge, it won a scroll "for outstanding achievement in bringing about a better understanding of the American way of life as recognized by Freedoms Foundation Awards for four years."

Southern had no Negro students at that time. But the principal, John H. Schwatka—at the school since 1926—has tried to inculcate into his student bodies a faith in the "political and economic rights which protect the dignity and freedom of the individual," as the honor scroll put it.

When the Supreme Court handed down its decision in May, he and his staff were prepared to do their part. On Friday two white women teachers took some risk in escorting safely home two of their Negro students. One of the teachers was Becky Kekenes, a physical education instructor. She pushed the nosed of her car through the crowd and drove pupils to safety.

INTEGRATION ISSUE IN MARYLAND RACE

Democrat Says State G.O.P. Follows National Party—Urges Local Policy

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 11—The issue of desegregation of the public schools has come rapidly to the fore in the Maryland elections, following disturbances here that reached a peak last week, but now virtually have ended.

Gubernatorial and Congressional campaigns are under way. As a general rule, leaders and candidates of both parties are doing everything they can to avoid the integration issue. But it was injected openly by one candidate in a statement the day after the worst of the trouble.

The statement was made by State Senator Edward Turner of Queen Anne County on the Eastern Shore. Mr. Turner is the Democratic nominee for the House of Representatives from the First district. This takes in nine counties, with a population of about 250,000.

Mr. Turner is running against the Republican incumbent, Edward Tylor Miller of Easton. Representative Miller was first elected in 1946 and has been re-elected three times. Four of Maryland's seven Representatives are Republicans.

Boards Advised to Wait

Like the rest of Maryland outside of Baltimore, the Eastern Shore counties have not yet started desegregation. That is because the State Attorney General advised the State Board of Education that the mixing of classes need not be undertaken before the issuance of the Supreme Court decrees implementing the decision of last May.

Baltimore operates under a home-rule charter. Thus it was able to begin desegregation upon the decision of its own school board, since backed by Judge James K. Cullen of the Superior Court.

In his Oct. 2 statement, Mr. Turner charged that the state Republican organization "is dedicated and committed to the National Republican party's way of thinking on the subject of segregation as reflected in the recent Supreme Court decision."

Mr. Turner declared that segregation in his district was part of a "way of life" and called for a state law to allow county school boards to establish policy on the local level.

Such a law should provide, Mr. Turner said, "that if the county boards do find that the people's health, welfare and safety would be endangered by a policy of integration, the boards would have the power to order segregation for the public schools."

Miller Voices 'Shock'

"In advancing this solution to the problem, I have not attempted to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision with mere words," he explained.

"Quite to the contrary, I now offer a plan which will protect all of our citizens—Negroes as well as whites—from the consequence of an unwise and hastily fashioned doctrine."

Representative Miller promptly replied. He expressed "shock and indignation that Senator Turner has seen fit to lower the level of the campaign * * * by injecting the racial issue."

But, Mr. Miller added, he had "no quarrel" with the ideal of "determination of the integration problem at the local level." He said:

"I have always supported states rights and opposed encroachment of the Federal Government into the field of education, but I take sharp exception to my opponent's attempt to bring partisan politics into an issue so basic while it is still pending before the highest court in the land."

Segregation Favored

In Cambridge, one of the larger Eastern Shore communities, popular sentiment appears to be largely segregationist. But, as elsewhere, proponents of segregation are strongly reluctant to go on the record with their stand.

The Negro population runs above one-third of the total in Cambridge and other Eastern Shore communities. The state level is about one-sixth, while the Baltimore figure is about one-fourth.

In the Gubernatorial race, the candidates are the Republican incumbent, Theodore R. McKeldin, and Dr. Harry Clifton (Curly) Byrd, former football coach and later president of the University of Maryland. In 1950 Governor McKeldin unseated Democratic Governor William Preston Lane Jr. by 369,807 to 275,824.

A few days ago a Delaware fisherman crossed to Maryland's Dorchester County and told Governor McKeldin during a speaking tour that "what the people want is a man who'll represent 80 or 90 per cent of us—and you know what that means."

The Governor answered: "I represent the law."

That has been interpreted as his stand on the segregation issue and he has not gone beyond it.

Byrd Issues Statement

Two day later Dr. Byrd, the Democratic challenger, in a statement that represented two full days of top-level party consultation, came out cautiously in favor of home rule.

"I would rely on the school boards of each county," the Byrd statement concluded, "to operate such programs in their counties that will best meet the educational needs of all their citizens."

Governor McKeldin declined to comment. The Republican Baltimore Sun, which has been severe in its condemnation of segregationist tactics here, observed that "in the nature of things, Dr. Byrd had to hedge * * * and as hedges go, his is a pretty good one."

Maryland is one of seven states that, as friends of the court, will submit briefs on the segregation issue to the Supreme Court in December, before the court hands down its implementing decrees.

School Pupils at Baltimore Stage Protest Against Integration

This picture shows a chanting throng of school students at Baltimore as they staged an anti-integration demonstration yesterday. Although there were demonstrations at at least eight public schools in Baltimore yesterday, there were no reports of angry disturbances and violence like the scenes staged by several hundred persons at Southern High School last week. The anti-integration demonstrations spread yesterday to Washington, where the District of Columbia has undertaken a model program of terminating segregation in public schools in keeping with the controversial ruling of the United States Supreme Court. New Student Flare-Ups On Negroes in Schools

News York N.Y.
By The United Press

BALTIMORE, Oct. 4.—Two thousand white teen-agers "stormed" City Hall to protest racial integration in the public schools here today and demonstrations were staged for the first time in the nation's capital.

High school students, shouting protests and anti-Negro slogans, demonstrated on the Baltimore City Hall steps after Mayor Thomas R. D'Alesandro ignored their demands that he come out and talk to them.

An emergency squad of police, led by Commissioner Beverly Ober, finally pushed the unruly rowd back after fifty had gained entrance to the building. After a hectic te nminutes, the demonstrators returned to the school grounds.

In Washington, white students staged noisy demonstrations at Anacostia and McKinley High Schools. It was the first such incident in the nation's capital since segregation bars were lifted this fall.

Milling around the school yards, they taunted students inside to join them and waved signs reading: "Send them back to the plantation," "Back to Africa" and "We want segregation."

President Eisenhower had expressed hope in the spring that Washington would serve as a model for the nation in bringing white and Negro students into the same classrooms under the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

Integration had gone so smoothly — until today — that Gen. Eisenhower congratulated the District of Columbia commissioners last week on the way it was working out.

Largest Demonstrations

Today's Baltimore-Washington demonstrations were by far the largest thus far in the various cities were mixed classes are being tried out for the first time this year. Similar incidents have occured at Milford, Del., and White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

Herald-Tribune

The Justice Department said its civil rights section is gathering information on the demonstrations to determine whether civil rights violations have occured. No formal investigation has been started, however. Dr. John H. Fischer, Baltimore school superintendent, said he was "impressed" by reports that "subversives" may be secretly stirring up trouble among students and parents.

Police In Baltimore Put Down Violence As Mob Protests Integration In Schools

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1 (AP)—A mob of about 400 whites, adults and teenagers, threatened three Negro pupils coming away from Southern High School today in spreading demonstrations against mingling of whites and Negroes in Baltimore's public schools.

Leon Thompson, 14-year-old Negro boy, was punched in the face.

Police arrested a man who identified himself as Jack Zimmerman, 34, and gave an address two dozen blocks away.

One other Negro boy was escorted from the school by a minister and a third was driven through the crowd by a teacher.

Two other white men were arrested.

The crowd tried to upset the cruiser in which Zimmerman and the Thompson boy were taken to a police station.

Police had squelched an earlier threat of violence at Southern High, one of six schools to which picketing, boycotts and protests spread today. There are only 36 Negroes among the 1,780 enrolled at Southern.

Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro issued a public statement saying the situation had become "a matter of serious concern." He pleaded against any inflammatory action and asked everyore to be calm.

The school board stuck by its announced intention of keeping schools open, with Negroes and whites assigned to study together at 52 of the 190 buildings.

Attendance was cut sharply at three schools as parents came to take their children home. Many explained they did not insist on segregation but feared their youngsters would be hurt.

Very few of the 581 pupils showed up today at school No. 34, where pickets made their first appearance yesterday. Integrated classes had been in operation almost four weeks without a sign of friction between white and Negro pupils.

Schools affected are in one of the poorer residential sections of the city, running heavily to day laborers, factory workers and domestic servants. Occupancy of the tightly packed row houses sometimes shifts from white to Negro in the middle of a block.

The schools involved in today's demonstrations have had only tiny minorities of Negro pupils since integration went into effect with the start of the school year.

The 36 Negroes enrolled at Southern High went into the building in a body after the initial demonstration there this morning.

All signs indicated this outburst was spontaneous among the students. About 500 of them milled in the streets around the building. They had placards saying "Negroes Not Allowed" and "On Strike."

They shouted for pupils inside the building to join them. The police broke it up by telling them either to go home or go in to class when the bell rang.

Some Negro parents decided their children would be safer if they went home, so ten were escorted out by police.

Angry taunts flew back and forth between the young white demonstrators and Negro pupils as they gathered on a sidewalk across from the school. The white crowd started moving toward the Negroes. The police stepped between before they could clash.

Adults triggered the demonstrations at the elementary schools.

Bainbridge pupils bear school expense

Attorneys challenge school segregation on U.S. Naval Base

BAINBRIDGE, Md. — Denied admittance to the school operated on the U.S. Naval Base here, the children of colored Naval personnel are attending the Havre de Grace Consolidated School, with transportation at family expense.

They have employed NAACP attorneys who are contemplating court action if they are not admitted to the school on the base which is attended by children of white service personnel.

This school is operated by the Cecil County school system as an annex to the Perryville, Md. Elementary School which is overcrowded. But, being on the grounds of the military base, it is on Federal property.

UNDER A DIRECTIVE issued last January 12 by Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson, no new schools on military installations were to be opened on a segregated basis.

NAACP attorneys Tucker R. Dearing and William M. Toadvine contend that the Perryville Annex at the Bainbridge Center is a new school since it was not in operation last term.

They contend further that the Supreme Court decision of May 17 which declared segregated schools illegal, immediately outlawed segregation in all public schools.

Cecil county officials maintain that they are bound to continue segregation in the schools because of the ruling of Edward D. E. Rollins, Attorney-General of Maryland that the state law is effective until the Supreme Court hands down its final decision in the school cases.

— o O o —

OF THE APPROXIMATELY 400 school-age children living on the Bainbridge base, only 13 are colored. Arrangements were made to send them to a colored school in Port Deposit, Md.

Those represented by the NAACP attorneys applied for admission to the Perryville Annex on September 13 and were refused.

Immediately letters were sent to the County Board of Education and to the superintendent of schools asking for a special school board meeting to discuss the situation, and to admit the colored pupils to the Bainbridge school buiiding.

The superintendent of schools is Morris W. Rannells. Members of the board are Everett J. Connellee, president; Peyton Patterson and Mrs. Louise Cameron.

— o OL O —

THE NAACP LETTER stipulated that "If we do not have a reply within ten days from receipt of this letter, we will deem your failure to reply a refusal to act."

Mr. Dearing said Thursday that no reply had been received.

However, Mr. Connellee has been quoted as saying that the board will not call a special meeting, but that the board's lawyer, Mrs. Doris Scott, will be instructed to answer the NAACP letter.

Negro Boy Punched in Fight Over Integration—Schools Resume in Milford

Sat. 10-2-54

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1—An angry crowd of 800 white adults and students attacked four Negro pupils in front of a South Baltimore high school this afternoon as violence flared in protest against desegregation ordered by the local school board.

The mob rushed a police escort provided for the four Negro students as they were leaving Southern High School. One Negro boy was punched in the face and an attempt was made to overturn a police car in which the pupils finally were taken away.

Despite the violence at the school and the picketing at five other schools today, the board planned to keep the schools open Monday without rescinding its anti-segregation order.

Mayor Thomas D'Alessandro issued an appeal to the population late today urging calm and pleading against any inflammatory action. He said the situation was one of "serious concern."

White Students Picket

The trouble at Southern High School, which is in the heart of a residential area largely inhabited by white and Negro industrial workers, began early in the day when picketing students appeared with signs reading, "Negroes Not Allowed," "On Strike" and "Keep the Germs Spreading."

The latter was a reference to an earlier charge by Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of schools, that "it looks as though the germs have spread from Delaware." Anti-integration demonstrations have occurred in Milford and Hampden, Del.

At one point, teachers took the placards away from the picketing students. The police told the demonstrators to go to school or go home, but the crowd continued to mill in front of the building, growing in size as the hours went by.

Near noon, Dr. John Schwatka, the principal, announced that those students whose parents wanted them to go home would be excused at once. Ten of the fourteen Negro students who came to classes today took advantage of it. Of the 1,780 students in Southern High School, thirty-six are Negroes.

Police escorted the ten Negroes out oft he school as demonstrators shouted insults.

Around 3:30 P. M., when school ended for the day, the mob, joined by hundreds of adults, had grown to about 800 persons. It was then that the attack on the four pupils occurred.

Five persons, including a Negro carrying a gun, were arrested during the afternoon demonstrations.

Near Cherry Hill, a Negro neighborhood in the southern section of the city, a bus carrying Negroes was stoned and a Negro boy was struck in the face.

Maryland PTAs Fight Integration

LOTHIAN, Md., Sept. 15.— (AP) A majority of 500 southern Maryland PTA members started an organization here tonight to try to keep the schools segregated despite a legal warning that racial barriers would eventually have to go.

"Under the Supreme Court decision, it is clear that sooner or later there will be no segregation in public schools of Maryland," Assistant Atty. Gen. W. Giles Parker told the group which packed the cafeteria at Southern High School here.

The problem, he said, is to achieve integration while maintaining stability in the schools. "We have no doubt citizens of Maryland will be able to solve their problems with a minimum of emotional display," he said.

Parker said Maryland planned to urge the Supreme Court to decree desegregation gradually and on a local option basis.

Despite Parker's warning that the Supreme Court decision would be the law of the land, the group from 31 or more parents and teachers associations agreed to name a steering committee to get their organization going.

Counties Await Final Ruling On Integration

Take Cautious Stand After Maryland Official Cites Option

School officials in nearby Maryland counties, informed of the State's view that integration should be a matter of local choice, are taking a wait-and-see attitude.

Board of Education members in Montgomery County and School Supt. William Schmidt, of Prince George County, said they expected officials of those two counties will keep their schools segregated until the Supreme Court takes final action.

They were commenting on a statement by W. Giles Parker, assistant State Attorney General, who said the State's official attitude, when it makes its stand known to the Supreme Court, will be that county officials should determine by local option when white and Negro children may go to Maryland public school together.

Addresses Opponents Tonight.

Mr. Parker is scheduled to address tonight a group of parents protesting proposed integration. His statement was a preview of what he is to say tonight.

This fall, schools in Baltimore are integrated but in the counties white and Negro pupils are attending separate schools. State school officials said earlier that they would await further word from the Supreme Court before making a decision on what action the counties should take.

Mr. Schmidt, who is chairman of a committee appointed by the State School Board to study the problem, said Mr. Parker's views coincide with the recommendations of the committee. Conclusions of the group have not yet been set down in a report, Mr. Schmidt said.

Cites Local Variations.

Mr. Parker said, "We feel that there should be a variation in local procedure because of the variation of local circumstances. There is as much difference between Garrett and Calvert Counties, for instance, as there is between Maine and Mississippi."

Relative sizes of Negro and white populations might determine how and when a particular county might best end its two-race system of education, Mr. Parker said.

Comments on Mr. Parker's statement by four members of the Montgomery County Board of Education were based on an early report of his remarks which was interpreted as permitting counties to put integration into effect immediately if they so desired.

Wylie W. Barrow, the chairman; Mrs. Helen M. Scharf William F. Bullis and Mrs. Willard Edwards all agreed that a further waiting period, at least until the Supreme Court acts would be advisable.

NAACP Offers Aid.

The Montgomery board, meeting yesterday, told county representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to get in touch with the board's integration committee. The NAACP had offered its advice and assistance on the integration problem, and asked to meet with the School Board.

Meanwhile, Joseph A. Hunter, president of the Maryland Congress of Parents and Teachers, made a statement indicating that the parent-teacher association at Southern High School in Anne Arundel County may be expelled from the congress. Mr. Hunter said the State organization probably will not recognize any PTA group which seeks to resist the end of segregation in the public schools.

This is the group Mr. Parker will address tonight at Lothian, Md.

NEGRO STUDENTS CROSS SEGREGATION PICKET LINE — BALTIMORE, Md. — While two sign - carrying women pickets stand by, Negro students arrive at Baltimore's southern high school for classes Monday morning. The Rev. Elder James L. Johnson, of Rehobth Church of God in Christ, is escorting the students. About two-thirds of the white students remained away from classes here last week in protest against desegregation.

It was here that the pattern of operation began to look suspicious. The students began to admit that they did not make the signs and really did not know why they were demonstrating. They told of men driving up to the school and providing the signs. Many of the students tossed them into the hedges, others said they saw a good chance to stay away from classes.

Throughout the week-end the leaders of the rebels conducted a telephone campaign designed to inflame the parents. On Monday, Oct. 4, an estimated twenty-five schools were demonstrating.

The NAACP reported that "it was obvious that the signs were being prepared and distributed systematically among the children." It was also reported that adults were intercepting children at strategic places near the schools and directing them to return home.

ONE WHITE PARENT, B. L. Buckner, wrote, "I am a white parent of five children attending Public School 22, Hamburg and Scott Streets. My children went to school Friday morning and four of them were sent home."

The NAACP reports: "The picket lines were obviously organized by experts and were serviced by several cars. The license numbers of these cars were obtained and a check revealed their ownership.

"One man, who appeared to be the supervisor of the picket line, was using a car, Maryland tags HC-5493. The car is listed in the name of Preston Thomas Donaldson, 5332 Rollins Avenue, Washington, D. C."

The NAACP report revealed that "another important person on the picket line was a man who did not carry a sign, but held frequent conversations with pickets and serviced them with soft drinks. He was using a car, Maryland license, No. CE. 9097.

"This car is listed in the name of Owen Bernard Hayes, 311 South Norris Street, Baltimore 23, Md."

Another car was observed by Baltimore city police in the vicinity of a school building.

The occupant of this car had a map of the city on which various spots had been pin-pointed. The license number of this car was AG-9743. It is owned by Richard Dann, 3803 Park Avenue, Baltimore, police said.

THE OCCUPANTS of another car carried placards, soft drinks and apples-on-the-stick and distributed the cards and refreshments to various school children.

Thic car's license number is BE-1560 and is registered in the name of Margaret Wheeler, 4212 Morrison Street, Baltimore, Md., according to police records.

A car with the license number BE-7185 had four occupants, all of whom had placards.

THIS CAR is registered in the name of Robert Davidson, 220 Greenmount Avenue, Baltimore, Md., police said.

The NAAWP revealed its interest in the picketng Oct. 5, when it sought to obtain a court ruling that the Baltimore City School Board had acted illegally by integrating the schools prior to a final decree from the U. S. Supreme Court.

Judge James K. Cullen declared that the Baltimore City School Board had acted legally in abolishing segregation.

One of the NAAWP sympathizers turned to another and asked, "What does that mean?" His friend told him, "He just cut our throats."

Integration Credit Goes to Local NAACP

By [illegible] RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

BALTIMORE, Md.—Credit for making a classroom desegregation work in this sprawling seaport city goes to the strong local branch of the NAACP, a progressive school board and an unyielding police force.

While Baltimore moves with its "gradual" school integration program, the State of Maryland, with but only one major exception, sits and twiddles its thumbs, watching the outcome of its Nov. 2 elections before making final action to be taken by the U. S. Supreme Court following its important decision.

Birthplace of the NAACP's brilliant legal mind, Thurgood Marshall, has been a sort of experimental laboratory for the NAACP, and court actions taken by this civil rights group aid much in readying the state for school desegregation.

The NAACP-sponsored school case was pending here when the Supreme Court handed down its famous decision. Then the Baltimore Board of Education had shown signs of desegregating its schools long before the Supreme Court's decision to abolish separate schools. Teachers have been integrated in the classrooms" for several years and Negro boys have been attending Polytechnic High School with white pupils for two years.

The late Dr. William H. Lemmel abolished separate teachers' meetings when he was superintendent of schools and the same policy was continued by Dr. John H. Fischer when he became superintendent. Negro and white teachers not only have been meeting together for nearly ten years, they also have been attending workshops together. On many occasions, colored instructors have presided.

Machinery necessary for putting into operation Baltimore's public school integration program began turning at a swift pace June 3, after the Board of School Commissioners adopted the following resolution:

"In view of the decision of the Supreme Court regarding our public schools, and in view of an opinion given us by the Baltimore City Solicitor (Thomas N. Biddison) dated June 1, it is the opinion of the board that our system should be conformed to a non-segregated basis to be in effect by the opening of schools in September of this year."

As a result of this resolution, integration began peacefully in Baltimore, Sept. 7.

But, twenty-three days later, Sept. 30, an organized movement to break up the mixed schools began taking form at the Charles Carroll School where twelve Negro children of kindergarten age were enrolled.

DISTURBANCES and racial flareups then spread to approximately twenty-five other schools. It was obvious that adults and young hoodlums were leaders of the protest movement.

Turning point came Oct. 4, when Commissioner of Police Beverly Ober announced that all pickets would be arrested.

On Oct. 5, Superior Judge James K. Cullen refused to order the Baltimore School Board to restore the segregation it ended Sept. 7.

The NAAWP, headed by Hitler-like Bryant William Bowles Jr., of Washington, had asked the judge to rule segregation legal in the Baltimore city schools.

No longer pestered by Bowles and his hoodlums, Negro and white children returned to their classrooms in full force on Oct. 8.

School Supt. Fischer told the Courier that desegregation is "working quite well here."

FORTY OF Baltimore's 172 schools already are operating on an integrated basis and some white pupils are attending at least three of the formerly all-Negro schools here.

Four or five Negro teachers have been placed in formerly all-white schools and it is known that one of these teachers is in charge of an all-white class.

Negroes number more than one-third of the overall enrollment of 141,000 pupils in the city. Approximately two thousand of the colored pupils have moved or been transferred to once all-white schools.

There are 3,500 white teachers and 1,900 Negro teachers in the city system.

No child is required to attend any particular school in Baltimore because the city has never adopted a districting policy.

This policy not only allows a Negro student to attend a school of his choice, it also permits a white student to select a school that is not predominantly Negro or a school that has not yet enrolled colored children.

DR. FISCHER made it clear that the board has not moved colored teachers to formerly all-white schools just so that it can be said Baltimore teachers are now integrated.

He explained that a teacher is moved from one school to another only when the board is unable to find a qualified teacher to fill a certain vacancy.

The fear of Negro teachers losing jobs does not exist in Baltimore. The high enrollment here makes it necessary for the city to hold on to its 172 schools and all of its teachers.

Should it ever become necessary for the city to cut its teacher roster, Negroes would stand above the white instructors because more colored teachers are either earning or have earned advanced degrees through out-of-state aid which was offered to Negroes during the days of outright segregation.

Negroes are now permitted to attend the University of Maryland on the graduate as well as the undergraduate level.

Much credit for curbing racial demonstrations staged by that man Bowles and his hoodlums goes to the white ministers of the city. Many of these clergymen escorted Negro children to and from school while being molested by Bowles' pickets.

DAILY PAPERS played a big role too, moving the school demonstration stories from front pages to back pages as a means of playing down Bowles and his mob.

To the NAACP, its members and officers goes the lion's share of credit for the present change-over in the Baltimore school system because it was the NAACP's constant pounding at the doors of city and state officials for years that finally resulted in the city getting its first taste of integration.

But, the NAACP is quick to give credit, too.

Said Mrs. Juanita Jackson Mitchell, leading attorney, NAACP executive and wife of the NAACP's Clarence Mitchell: "The church is the backbone of the NAACP in Baltimore."

Morgan State College, like most formerly all-Negro colleges in the border states, is operating on an integrated basis, boasting eight white teachers and six white students this year. One white female student is reported a resident of the campus.

THE CATHOLICS, who have been defying jim-crow laws and setting a pace for the entire South by opening the doors of their schools to all races, have a near-perfect program throughout the state.

Loyola University has been enrolling Negro students for several years.

Montgomery County, one of Maryland's largest and located near the District of Columbia, came out recently with a plan for integrating its schools. The successful operations in Baltimore and Washington apparently served as an influence.

The desegregation program, as expected, became a political topic in Maryland, too. Governor McKeldin made no reference to the segregation issue, but his opponent, Democratic candidate Dr. H. C. Byrd, former president of the University of Maryland, told one audience: "You will want members of the school board appointed who will be able to act in accordance with the age-old customs and traditions that have been a part of our way of life."

SHORTLY AFTER Byrd made this statement, energetic Atty. Juanita Mitchell told sixty ministers attending an NAACP-sponsored luncheon that "Byrd must be defeated."

Baltimore has proved that school desegregation will work, despite hostile foes and rabble-rousers like that man Bowles and his hoodlums. Opposition was expected and it was soon checked by unyielding police officers.

Baltimore has two important things in its favor — a strong NAACP branch serving as a watchdog and a Board of Education that is determined to make integration work.

A lot of credit goes to the alert president of the Baltimore NAACP, Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson.

And, don't forget Superior Judge James J. Cullen who ruled: "The Supreme Court has spoken and we must all abide by it."

Pickets use NAAWP technique

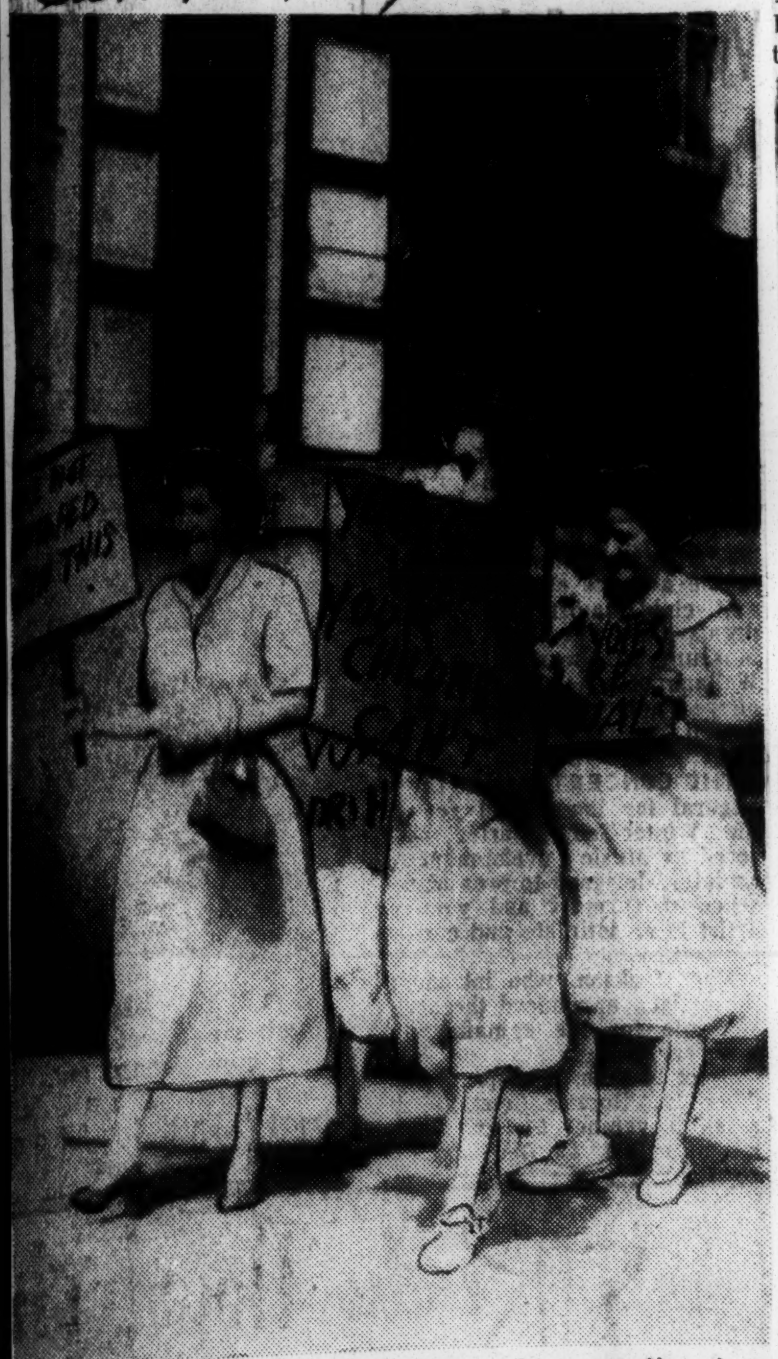
30 white parents march, tell pupils not to attend classes

Sat. 10-9-54



PICKET LINE—The continuance of segregation in public schools is what these parents of 587 pupils sought last Thursday at School No. 34, Carey St. and Washington Blvd. The group of 34 women and one man admitted that they were disorganized and were only a group of parents who had "gotten together." Twelve colored pupils are enrolled in the school.

BALTIMORE

Thirty white parents who began picketing School No. 34 at Carey St. and Washington Blvd., Thursday morning, 15 minutes before school convened, used techniques similar to those employed in Milford, Delaware by the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

1. They picketed the school.
2. They urged the white pupils to remain out of school.
3. They told other white parents they can change a ruling of the Supreme Court by a local referendum.

However, the 30 pickets, all women but one, denied they were an organized group and members of the NAAWP. They claimed they were simply a group of parents who are against the integration of public schools here.

It marked the first such incident since the Baltimore public schools opened on an integrated basis on Sept. 15.

— o 0 o —

THE PICKETS carried signs which said:

"Are We Satisfied? No. We Want Our Rights."

"Let the Taxpayers Decide."

"We Want Our Rights. We Voted for School Loan — Why This?"

"Join Us Now. Watching Is Doing No Good.

"Let The Taxpayers Decide."

"Is This Equal Rights?"

"Segregation Is Our Heritage"

"Equal But Separate Schools"

"Stay Home After Dinner"

The signs were being made up during the morning by the parents themselves on street corners. They were made up on shopping bags, cardboard box tops and printed in pencil and crayon.

THE SCHOOL has a total enrollment of 587 pupils, from kindergarten to the sixth grade. Twelve of the pupils attending there are colored. Miss Clara Crockett is principal of the school.

Thursday morning, only 169 pupils reported for school. Only three colored pupils reported for classes.

They were all kindergarten pupils.

THERE WERE about 100 persons standing on the corners watching the pickets Thursday morning. About 30 of them were colored.

The group of pickets which walked around three sides of the building was not organized and no leader could be found.

All the women pickets who walked around three sides of the building appeared ill-clad, the majority of them foreign-born. One pushed a baby stroller with an infant in it and another had an infant walking with her.

TWO POLICEWOMEN from Southwestern Police District arrived around 11 a.m. and tried to talk the women into getting off the streets. The women pickets refused to stop and talk to the policewomen.

"Ladies, can we talk with you?" the policewomen asked the group.

One woman picket replied: "No, they won't give us a mass meeting."

It was learned the picket was referring to the School Board which, they claim, has refused to hear their complaint.

— o 0 o —

DR. JOHN C. FISCHER, superintendent of schools, was at the scene early in the morning, looked over the situation and left. Later, it was learned, he was in conference with Walter Sondheim, president of the school board.

The two policewomen who attempted to talk to the pickets were Miss Cora Wolfe and Miss Frances Spidlich.

Mrs. Crockett, the principal of the school, called the picketing "a surprise to us."

She said she had not talked to any of the picketing parents and said none had been in to see her. She said she did not know what the picketing was all about.

— o 0 o —

SHE WAS of the opinion that the group got the idea from the incident in Milford, Delaware.

The picketing has been brewing for three days, the AFRO learned, from comments of bystanders on the streets.

The mother of one colored pupil at the school said a group of white people started gathering on the corner of Carey and Washington Blvd. Tuesday afternoon and the group has been increasing in size since then.

She said before Thursday, the group simply stood around talking and meeting the school children when they were dismissed from school at the end of the day.

— o 0 o —

THIRTY-FIVE white pupils were taken out of school by their parents Thursday morning following the appearance of the pickets.

It was reported that some of the pickets had a meeting Tuesday night in one of the parents' home to plan the next move.

An AFRO reporter asked one of the women pickets who appeared to be a ringleader what the meeting was for.

"We just had a meeting," the woman answered and continued walking.

— o 0 o —

THURSDAY MORNING, all the white bystanders congregated on one corner and all the colored spectators gathered on another.

Some of the colored parents had nothing but praise for the entire teaching staff at the school. They said they were satisfied with the situation at School No. 34, and said the teachers couldn't treat out children any better."

The aunt of one colored pupil said:

"They have been throwing slurs at us ever since we've been here." She meant since the integration of the schools on Sept. 15.

A second parent said:

"My child is going to stay in there." She stated she had no idea of taking her son out of the school.

SCHOOL BOARD

- Says pickets cannot halt integration program
- Asks parents to obey law;

all schools remain open

BALTIMORE

The Baltimore City School Board announced last Thursday afternoon that local schools will remain open "with the assurance of the police department and the department of education that parents need not have any concern about sending their children to school."

The statement from the board was prompted by the picketing of some 30 odd white parents of school No. 34, Carey St. and Washington Blvd. last Thursday morning.

The parents were protesting the integration of twelve colored pupils in the school which has an enrollment of 587 pupils.

— o O o —

THIS IS the statement from the Board of School Commissioners which was unanimously approved:

"All of our schools are, of course, open and will remain open.

"The police department and the department of education give their full assurance that parents need not have any concern about sending their children to school.

"We are well aware that it is only human to be somewhat apprehensive about changes in long standard customers. It is equally true, however, that one of the things that has made the United States the great bulwark against communism and fascist totalitarianism is the fact that by common consent we accept the principles of government by law and believe that adherance to law, especially where it concerns the rights of our fellow man, is a primary obligation of citizenship.

"We have confidence that the overwhelming majority of Baltimoreans will not be misled into thinking that anything good can possibly come from behavior that services only to confuse and frighten children and to interfere with their education.

"Our schools have been open for almost four weeks without a single untoward incident and in that time Baltimoreans have amply demonstrated the spirit of tolerance, understanding and fair play that has been a source of pride so often in the history of our city. Let us all continue to work together to maintain that tradition."

Meanwhile, picketing on last Friday morning was expanded to other schools, including Southern High No. 70 and Washington Elementary No. 22, Scott and Hamburg Sts.

— o O o —

CLASSES were disrupted at Southern High School with at least half of the 1,700 students out of classes. Parents are continually coming and taking additional students home. There are no picket lines.

Police kept traffic moving and keeping the students from congregating on school property. However, they are permitted to congregate on the other side of the street.

There was no actual disturbance, but a group of students agitated the mass walkout shortly after school started. The principal, John Schwatka, issued a special bulletin saying that lunch would be served indoors this afternoon. Mr. Schwatka said that anyone who wishes to go home is permitted to do so.

Some 39 colored pupils are enrolled at the Southern High and at least half of them have gone home, some with their parents.

— o O o —

THE SITUATION was orderly and quiet at School No. 34 which was picketed by 28 women. Friday morning. One of them said that they will continue the picket line "as long as necessary."

Only 65 children out of the more than 500 were in attendance on Friday including three of the 12 colored kindergarten children. There were no signs of disorder.

— o O o —

AT WASHINGTON Elementary School No 22, Scott and Hamburg Sts., another where classes were disrupted Friday morning, a white school guard jjoined with 75 women and children in picketing the school.

Mrs. Mary Shenton, principal, said that she believed the demonstration to be a publicity stunt. Some 400 persons congregated around the picket lines but were kept orderly by 15 policemen.

— o O o —

HOUSTON R. JACKSON, assistant superintendent of schools, told the AFRO school officials feel the picket lines and demonstrations at schools are sponsored by people out of the communities.

"They are not parents associated with our PTA's and other school groups," Mr. Jackson added. "The best evidence of that is that our parents have been responsible for the smooth integration program which has worked without incident for the past four weeks in these very same schools."

CHANTING STUDENTS PARADE IN BALTIMORE TO PROTEST AGAINST INTEGRATION OF NEGROES

... police broke it up when the youths took their complaints to city hall

mbled attendance at about 500, with more than 1200 absentees.

Police kept demonstrators moving past the school, where six persons were arrested Friday after a white man punched a Negro student.

At least 20 of the 36 Negroes enrolled in the school attended class today.

At least nine schools in the city reported demonstrations. Others were visited by the roving bands of students.

One crowd had easily covered 12 miles by noon.

Shortly before noon, the roving bands joined forces at Southern and the crowd, combined with hundreds who milled around that area, was estimated by newsmen at close to 2000. Police quickly dispersed the throng.

By 2 p. m., the marchers had weakened and broken into several small groups.

In a television appeal Sunday, Principal John J. Schwatka of Southern urged parents to send, or take their children back to school. He blamed "the continuous current of inflammatory rumors circulated by trained and organized agitators" for the near-riot at the school on Friday.

He described Friday as a day on which "our standards of common decency had sunk to a very low level."

One man, identified as Charles Luthhardt, 46-year-old white, was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct shortly after 8 a. m. in front of a candy store across the street from Southern.

The second arrest occurred after a Negro man who had escorted several Negro students to Southern was found to be carrying a knife, Ford said.

Several white women carried signs in front of Southern. One read, "Milford did it, so can we."

Another read "Segregation Is Our Heritage."

Classes have been integrated here since school opened September 8.

Integrated school picketed by parents

BALTIMORE, Sept. 30—(AP)—Parents picketed an elementary school in Southwest Baltimore today protesting the attendance of 12 Negro children in the kindergarten class.

Dr. John Fischer, superintendent of schools, said only about 5(per cent of the children were attending classes at the school.

Police were at the scene to maintain order.

Women carried home-made signs reading:

"We want equal—but segregated schools."

It was the first such disturbance in Baltimore. Schools opened this Fall on an integrated basis.

In Maryland counties, segregation in the public schools is continuing pending further word from the Supreme Court.

Baltimore has a population of about 950,000 with a non-white percentage of 23.8, according to the 1950 census.

Attendance at Schools Rises, Picketing Drops—Writ for Segregation Is Voided

wed. 10-6-54

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 5—Proponents of segregation in the public schools were set back strongly on several fronts here today.

City officials, mindful of the violence that erupted last Friday, with widespread picketing of schools and diminished attendance, were hopeful that the worst was over.

The actual disturbances and the number of those involved have been small with relation to Baltimore's entire school system. Its 170 schools have a total enrollment of 141,500, including 55,000 Negroes. Most of the Negroes continue to attend about fifty schools that operated as "separate but equal" facilities under segregation. Between 1,700 and 1,800 Negroes switched to white schools in last month's enrollment.

Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of schools, estimated tonight that not more than twenty-five of the 170 schools had been affected by the segregationists. The student bodies of the affected schools totaled not more than 20,000 of the total of 141,500.

The day's developments were favorable in one degree or another to those seeking to live up to the Supreme Court opinion that the doctrine of separate but equal school facilities for whites and Negroes "has no place" in American life.

The developments included:

¶A judge in Superior Court dismissed a writ obtained by two groups including the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which would have compelled the Baltimore School Commissioners to provide segregated facilities.

¶Attendance in the schools improved generally, and notably in the schools that had been more seriously affected by demonstrations.

¶Firm police tactics reduced picketing of schools to a minimum without arrests or incidents.

¶The student leaders of Eastern High School assailed in a public statement other schools for "debasing themselves" and declared that any individual, regardless of color, "ca nand will" add to the "fine reputation" of the school.

The court decision was made this afternoon by Judge James K. Cullen. The writ had been obtained on Sept. 8 on behalf of the Maryland petition committee and the National Association for the Advancement of White People. Robert M. Furniss Jr. of Rockville, Md., who appeared for the plaintiffs, said the two groups were unrelated.

The writ was based on Article 32 of the City Ordinance Code, and particularly Section 22, which reads:

"It is hereby made the duty of the Board of School Commissioners * * * to organize separate schools for colored children and to establish as many schools for the education of the colored children * * * as may * * * be necessary."

Mr. Furniss argued that the School Board had no right to disregard this section, pending specific decrees by the Supreme Court implementing its historic opinion of last May.

On strictly legal grounds, and with only indirect references to the specific nature of the case, a similar position was taken by George Washington Williams, appearing as a friend of the court.

In initiating integration as of Sept. 1, Mr. Williams asserted, the school board had engaged in "jumping the gun."

Defending the School Board, Thomas N. Biddison, city solicitor, declared that "there is no higher authority than the Supreme Court."

In his formal demurrer to the writ, Mr. Biddison wrote:

"We believe that the broad question has been decided—that is, segregated public schools are unconstitutional. If a city such as Baltimore can work out the mechanics of desegregation, it certainly cannot be forced to await a specific directive from the Supreme Court to carry out a policy which the Court has held is constitutional. * * *"

Judge Cullen, in his decision, said the Supreme Court had "decisively and clearly ruled on the issue, by rejecting the old doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities.

"This court finds," he continued, "the Board of School Commissioners have exercised their discretion legally and in accordance with a final and enforceable holding and decision of the Cupreme Court of the United States * * *."

Mr. Furness said he would take the case to the Maryland Court of Appeals.

On attendance, Dr. Fischer, superintendent of schools, reported "It is up appreciably in all of them, and most of them are very near normal attendance."

Individual checks at schools in sensitive areas confirmed this general picture. At Southern High School, where there were outbreaks on Friday, 902 out of 1,787 pupils came to school. Yesterday only 503 had appeared.

At Southern, the principal, John H. Schwatka, announced that beginning tomorrow, absence without legitimate excuse would be classed as truancy, with suspension or expulsion to follow any prolonged absence.

Baltimore Attendance Up

By MILTON BRACKER

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 6—Attendance in this city's 170 public schools was back to [illegible] per cent of normal today, the Office of the superintendent of schools reported.

The most dramatic improvement was recorded at Southern High School, scene of serious disorders on the segregation issue last Friday. On Monday, 503 pupils had reported for classes at Southern. Yesterday the figure rose to 902. Today, it was 1,543 out of an enrollment of 1,777.

Tension still persisted in some spots, however, notably in Southwest Baltimore around elementary School No. 134. There, although morning attendance rose from yesterday's 189 to 414, it fell off again during the afternoon to 387.

GENERAL

6 Arrested in Baltimore Protest Over Integration

Compiled From Press Service Reports

Demonstrations against integration of white and Negro classes in Baltimore public schools Friday capped a series of protests over the country.

A crowd of adults and teenagers, estimated at 400 to 1,000 persons, shouted angry threats at Negro students leaving Southern High School in Baltimore.

Police hustled the Negro students out of Southern High School two or three at a time into prowl cars and took them home.

PUNCHED IN FACE

Lois Thompson, 14-year-old Negro, was punched in the face as a crowd milled around three of them. Jack Zimmerman, 24-year-old unemployed shipyard worker from 28 blocks away, was fined $100 on a charge of hitting the youth.

Police arrested a total of six persons, including one Negro.

A young woman physical education teacher rescued another Negro boy and girl after they had been surrounded by the demonstrators. She dove into the crowd, took the two youngsters in her car and sped off with them.

Police had smothered an earlier threat of violence at Southern High School, one of six schools in which picketing, boycotts and protests spread Friday. There are only 36 Negroes among the 1,780 enrolled at Southern.

URGES CALMNESS

Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro issued a public statement saying the situation has become "a matter of serious concern." He pleaded against any inflammatory action and asked everyone to be calm.

School Supt. John Fischer went into conference with legal advisers to study possible action to end the boycotts, which cut sharply into attendance at certain schools.

About 75 per cent of the pupils at a Baltimore elementary school were out of class to protest the admission of 12 Negro children into a kindergarten class.

The school board stuck by its announced intention of keeping schools open, however, with Negroes and whites assigned to study together at 52 of 190 buildings.

Attendance was cut sharply at three schools as parents came to take their children home. Many explained that they did not insist on segregation, but feared that their youngsters would be hurt.

Meanwhile, at Milford, Del., school buses crowded with white pupils returning to classes signaled the end of a spreading boycott protesting admission of Negro pupils to Milford High School.

Eleven Negro high school students remained at home, their educational future uncertain. They had attended the formerly all-white school under a school board decision to comply with the U.S. Supreme Court ban on racial segregation.

The Negro students were barred Thursday when a newly formed board reversed the previous decision in the wake of protest meetings, burning of crosses and the refusal of many white students to attend classes.

At East St. Louis, Ill., a group protesting increased enrollment of Negroes at the Centerville grade school interrupted a district school board meeting and demanded the board's resignation.

Some 200 persons were in the group headed by Paul Chitty, a filling station operator who acted as spokesman. After the group entered the board meeting, Chitty called on various persons to speak.

Members of the board later declined to comment except to say they would meet next Monday with a 10-member committee appointed by Chitty to discuss the situation.

Maryland Candidates Agree on Integration Methods

Candidates in Maryland's forthcoming gubernatorial election may have their differences, but on the subject of integration they seem to speak with a single voice.

This was made clear last week when H. C. (Curly) Byrd, Democratic standard bearer, called for "home rule" in desegregating the schools of Maryland. His view is similar to that of the administration of Republican Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin, which already has revealed the stand it will take in arguments before the Supreme Court on December 6.

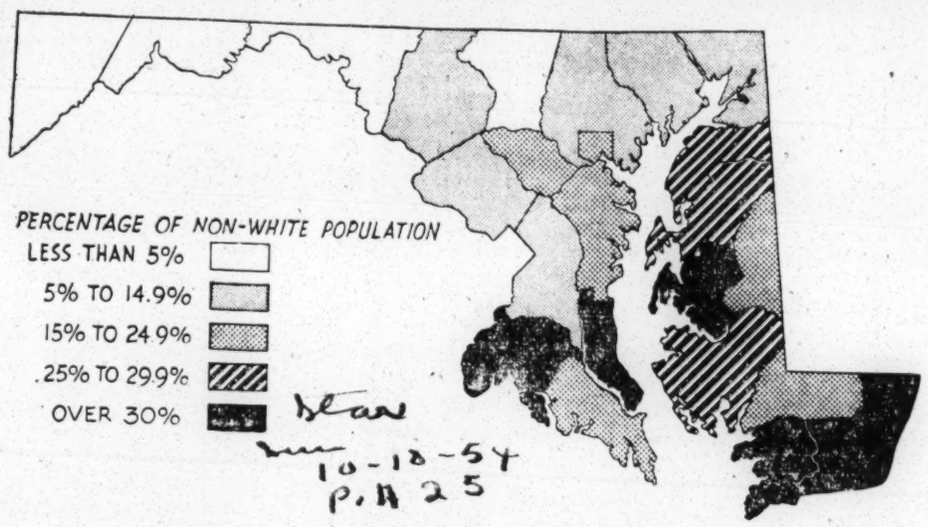
Maryland's legal officers are prepared to tell the court that desegregation should be left up to county school boards, and should be placed in effect gradually.

Dr. Byrd's statement on the subject last week included these words:

"It is apparent . . . that conditions not only differ in the various communities, but the thinking of our people on this subject likewise differs in various communities. . . .

"I would rely on the school boards of each county to operate such programs in their counties that will best meet the needs of all their citizens."

The accompanying map illustrates a point often made by advocates of local and gradual adjustment in Maryland. It shows the distribution of non-white population in the State. The largest proportion of Negroes is in Calvert County, where 41.7 per cent of the population is colored. In Garrett County, at the other extreme, the Census Bureau lists 23,249 whites and 10 non-whites, but Supt. R. Bowen Hardesty of the Garrett County schools said last week he knew of no non-white adults in the county. There has never been a colored child of school age in Garrett County in his memory, Mr. Hardesty added.



Md. P-TAs to Meet On Segregation Ruling

LOTHIAN, Md., Sept. 13 (AP). The Southern High School Parent-Teacher Association will be host to approximately 30 other Southern Maryland P-T A groups Wednesday night to discuss effect of the Supreme Court ruling banning segregation in schools.

The stated purpose of the meeting is "to formalize the organization of the Maryland P-TA Council for separate schools."

ut leaders in the movement would not say today that they are trying to circumvent the Supreme Court decision.

What we are interested in is maintaining local police in the conduct of the school system," said Comdr. J. M. Court, who handled publication for the meeting.

He said this takes into account the number of teachers to be hired for a school and their race as well as the possible integration or continued segregation of white and Negro students and the school facilities which are available.

Groups from Calvert, Prince Georges and Charles County are expected to join those of Anne Arundel in the meeting in the high school here at 7:30 p. m.

Enforcement Agencies Are Breaking Down

Ratcliffe Says High Courts Must Take Stern Action to Curb Rabble-Rousers Promoting Violence in Border States

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE
(Courier News Editor)

BALTIMORE, Md.—Flareups and violence in three border states last week over desegregation in public schools made it clear that stern action by high courts must be taken to curb hoodlums and rabble-rousers who are repeatedly ignoring local police officers.

The violent attempt by white adults and students to break up the already mixed schools in Baltimore resulted in attacks on a Negro pupil and Negro man who were being guarded by police.

Violence in Baltimore broke out almost four weeks after Negro and white pupils had been attending schools together.

SIX PERSONS were arrested and four of them fined, one offender being ordered to pay $100, after 400 teen-agers and adults threatened three Negro pupils coming away from Southern High School in Baltimore.

The Baltimore flare-up started originally over a dozen Negro children attending a kindergarten with fifty white children. Parents, mostly mothers, paraded in front the school with crudely lettered signs.

The flare-up spread to five other schools, with violence taking place at Southern High. One mother, with an infant in her arms, was among the hundreds of marchers protesting the end of racial segregation at Southern High. Most of the rabble-rousers were white pupils.

JACK ZIMMERMAN, 24, was fined $100 for hitting a 14-year-old Negro boy in the mouth. Police were escorting Leon Thompson from the school when Zimmerman is said to have stepped from between parked cars and socked Leon.

Police also arrested a Negro man, John Walker, and fined him $25 on a disorderly conduct charge. Other Negroes and whites reported they were attacked in various sections of the city.

A white teacher snatched one Negro pupil from the hands of white mobsters.

Following a special meeting, Baltimore's Police Commissioner said "We will not permit disorder. All children will be allowed to enter school and leave school peacefully and unmolested."

MAYOR D'ALESANDRO called for cool heads and calm consideration.

Governor McKeldin, seeking re-election, was on a barnstorming campaign tour when informed of the violence and declined to comment.

Walker was being searched by police when the hoodlums attacked him.

No Disorder Balto. Police Pledge

BALTIMORE

"We will not permit disorder," Police Commissioner Beverly Ober stated here Friday night in the wake of noisy demonstrations and some disorder which broke out after two days of picketing by white parents against integrated schools.

Colonel Ober met with State and city officials and school authorities after a noisy anti-integration demonstration at Southern High School resulted in the arrest of six persons.

The Police Commissioner's statement follows:

"We in the Police Department are hopeful that the citizens will be orderly, but we are prepared to act immediately on any overt act.

"We will not permit disorder.

"All children will be allowed to enter school and leave school peacefully and unmolested."

WALTER Sondheim, president of the school board; Dr. John F. Fischer, school superintendent; W. Giles Parker, assistant attorney general; Thomas N. Biddison, city solicitor, and Saul Harris, assistant State's attorney, all attended the meeting with Colonel Ober.

It was Mr. Biddison's ruling last May, following the Supreme Court's decision, which prompted the Baltimore Board of School Commissioners to vote to integrate the public schools here this fall.

A statement from Mayor D'Alesandro was also issued Friday night calling for "cool heads and calm consideration."

BALTIMORE'S integration of the schools had gone along smoothly since Sept. 15, the day schools opened.

No signs of unrest or any incidents appeared until Thursday when a group of mothers, no doubt prompted by publicity given the Milford, Delaware situation, began to picket School No. 34, a kindergarten, primary and elementary school.

On Friday, however, a large majority of the white pupils at Southern High School remained out of their classes and began agitating outside the school.

— o O o —

A NOISY anti-integration demonstration involving over 2,000 persons broke out around the high school where 39 colored children are enrolled in a student body of 1,788.

One 14-year-old colored pupil was assaulted and six persons were arrested before police were able to disperse the shouting and jeering mob that gathered in the streets about the school at Warren Ave. and William St., to demand the expulsion of colored pupils.

Four of the persons arrested, including one colored man, were later fined in Southern police court. Another 29-year-old colored man was held for investigation and a 14-year-old white boy was released without any charge being placed against him.

— o O o —

THE HEAVIEST fine of $100 was drawn by Jack Zimmerman, 24, white, of the 300 block Poppleton St., an unemployed seaman. He was convicted of striking Leon Thompson, 14, of the 900 block Sharp St., colored, as the pupil was leaving the school escorted by two policemen.

In imposing the fine, Magistrate Simon Schonfield warned the stocky, ruddy faced Zimmerman and the noisy white spectators who followed him to the courtroom from the school:

"It is hard to believe that a situation like this could happen

BALTIMORE BOILS—Almost 400 children stayed away from elementary school No. 34 in Southwest Baltimore last week as a group of parents picketed the building in protest to the enrollment of Negro students. in Baltimore. I am going to see that it doesn't happen again and I fine you $100."

— o O o —

LOUD CRIES of complaints came from the white spectators but they were quickly silenced by the magistrate's promise to clear the courtroom at the next outbreak.

An ironic note to this first incident of violence attending the integration of schools in the city, was added by the fact that at the same time Thompson was testifying against his attacker, his brother, Melvin Thompson, 17, was playing football with the Southern team against McDonogh.

Southern has a colored player on its team.

While the Southern demonstration was the most violent in the city, there were reports of other anti-integration sentiment at 5 other schools.

The first anti-integration came on Thursday at school No. 34, Washington and Carey Sts., where there are 12 colored

— o O o —

WOMEN CARRYING signs asking for the removal of colored children, began to picket the school early Thursday, as only 169 pupils reported for classes.

Late Thursday rumors began to seep through the city that other schools would be the scene of similar demonstrations and by Friday morning the stage had been set for what followed.

In addition to Southern, and No. 34, pickets appeared at:

Schools No. 22, Hamburg and Scott Sts.; No. 72 at Hanover and Lee Sts.; No. 48, Hollins and Fulton Ave.

— o O o —

ALL OF THE schools are located in South Baltimore, long regarded as the section of the city with the deepest rooted racial prejudice.

First indication that a disturbance was brewing at Southern came early Friday when 500 white Southern students failed to answer the morning bell and stood outside the school shouting for other students to join them.

At least two of the colored women on the custodial staff of the school reported that they had been assaulted by groups of whites while on their way to work at Southern. None of the injuries was serious.

— o O o —

AS THE DAY moved on, more and more students listened to the cries of the mob and left school. Signs saying "Keep Southern White" and "Negroes Are Okay In Their Place But Not At Southern" began to appear.

By noon only 900 students were in school and by mid-afternoon there were only 400. The exodus of pupils came as a suprise to the teachers and John H. Schwatka, principal, who all reported that the colored students had been accepted by the white students at Southern and there had been no complaints up until Friday.

As the students left the school they were joined by angry faced adults who shouted and jeered louder than the pupils.

— o O o —

INSIDE THE school tension held sway as the mob outside grew louder and bolder. One colored girl inside the school was afraid to take a shower after her gymnasium period until a white student took her by the hand and promised to see that no harm came to her.

Another bright note to the ugly situation came when the football team surrounded the colored player on their team, Melvin Thompson, and escorted him through the mob to a bus which took them to McDonogh for a scheduled game.

Thompson, a guard, played in the game Southern lost 34-0.

— o O o —

A SQUAD of police from the Southern District, under the command of Capt. Frank Deems and Lt. Frank Baccala hurried to the school where they escorted the colored pupils through the mob.

The attack on the Thompson boy came as the police were escorting him away from the school. In Lt. Baccala's own words, this is what happened:

"There were approximately 2,000 people around the school when we took the boy out. As we were walking down the street Zimmerman (the white man) came up from nowhere and hit Thompson without any provocation."

In his own defense, Zimmerman tried to convince the Southern Police Court magistrate that the boy had called him a vile name, but this was termed "untrue" by police who stated that Thompson said nothing to Zimmerman.

— o O o —

AS POLICE TRIED to silence the mob about the school, rumors began to fly thick and fast. One said that a white girl had been knifed and killed by a colored student, and another said a white girl had been criminally assaulted.

There was no truth to these rumors but the mob didn't care. They believed them and they were out for blood. The only thing that stopped them was the presence of police who made it evident that they were there to protect the colored students and prevent violence.

The angry white spectators didn't like this, but there was nothing they could do and slowly and bitterly they began to move away from the school still voicing threats against the colored pupils.

THESE PEOPLE were not a crowd. They were a mob. They shouted and they cursed and there was violence in the air that could have exploded at any moment, except for the coolness of police.

In the mob were children barely able to walk, students with their books still in their arms, women pushing baby carriages and some showing signs of pregnancy, hard faced men and those who showed the ravages of liquor.

These were the people who made up the mob whose animal like cries could be heard in the office of the principal, who was almost in tears as he expressed his shame at the action of these people.

"We have never had trouble at Southern before. The colored students were treated fine until this happened. I can't explain it but I am ashamed of them," Principal John Schwatka said.

"I called the police because I did not want any of the colored boys and girls to get hurt. They are fine students and Americans. Why should these people do this to them."

— o O o —

THE AIR OF shame at the action of the mob hung over the school like a cloud. "These people should get down on their knees and pray" said one of the teachers. "This is not America this is madness" said another, and so it went.

What started this outbreak? The causes are not complicated, according to the people who have an intimate knowledge of the makeup of the people in South Baltimore.

First there was the disturbance in the Milford area and the wide publicity it received. Like other fads, the gold fish eating craze-the panty raids - the Milford incident came to Baltimore.

Prompted by vicious rumors that had not a grain of truth in them, fanned by agitators who seized the chance to be leaders, the anti - integration feeling began to spread, informed sources say.

Before the children knew what was happening they had been caught up in the excitement. The same children who had sat in class with colored students now asked that they be thrown out of school.

Mothers worried about the safety of their children, took them out of schools, people with nothing to do gathered about the schools, and the situation grew worse until it finally emptied into the ugly incident at Southern.

Other persons fined in the disturbance were:

Phillip Bestpich, 43, of the 400 block Saunder St., $25 and costs for disorderly conduct.

John Vernon, 1300 block S. Hanover St., $25 and cost for disorderly conduct.

John Walker, colored, 19, 600 block W. Cross St., $25 and costs for disorderly conduct.

Baltimore School With Most Negroes Has No Difficulties

By MILTON BRACKER
Special to The New York Times and The Courier-Journal

Baltimore, Oct. 8.—Integrated classes of white and Negro pupils began in the public schools here a month ago. And the elementary school with by far the highest percentage of Negro children has maintained a perfect negative record in terms of the disturbances which have affected 25 of the city's 170 public schools since last Thursday.

As Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of public instruction, put it, "There has not been one peep of trouble at No. 74."

No. 74 is also known as the Oliver Cromwell School. It is an old red-brick building in northeast Baltimore. It is in a quiet neighborhood made up largely of old "row-houses," and until 1940, was characterized by a high percentage of home owners.

Since the war, and the breakdown of segregated housing, there has been a steady increase of Negro families in the section. Baltimore as a whole has a population of nearly 1,000,000, of whom about 23 per cent are Negroes. When school started September 7, nearly 40 per cent of No. 74's enrollment was Negro.

But while picketing and student disorders materialized at one school with only 12 Negro pupils, and another with only 37, there has been nothing of the kind at No. 74.

It has been suggested that the mere "balance" of the population in the area has tended to neutralize conflict. But in the opinion of nearly everyone except Miss Elizabeth Storm, principal of the school, most of the credit goes to Miss Storm, at No. 74 for 12 years.

Miss Storm was born in Meridian, Miss., and went to school in New Orleans and Virginia. She combs her near-white hair straight back.

The key to Miss Storm's policy on the race question in her school seems to be that people were the most important element in it, and that "living a situation is more important than talking about it."

So beginning last spring, when the Supreme Court decision indicated that there would be a large Negro registration, Miss Storm said that she and her staff of 19 made a "great effort, but a very quiet effort," to lay the groundwork for orderly integration.

"We simply lived with our people," she went on. "We talked and we tried to explain things."

All summer long, parents of both races called on Miss Storm. As recently as yesterday, two sixth-grade girls came in with uneasy questions. The principal asked if they would read Wednesday's paper. It had the text of Superior Court Judge James K. Cullen's decision approving the local policy of desegregation without waiting for Supreme Court decrees.

"They hadn't read it," she smiled. "I had the clipping here, and we talked about it. I told them there was the basic thing—that our country had ruled so. We read some more, where it said, "The court has spoken..."

And the process of "living" with both children and parents has continued. Miss Storm acknowledged to one mother that "it's rough on everybody concerned." The woman and her friends "all went away feeling better."

Miss Storm summed up in a calm, level voice. She had a final point to make:

"I saw a white mother and a colored mother talking as if they had a common interest," she said. "Years, months, even weeks ago, on the broad steps of School No. 74 that could not have happened."

not going to give up our charter. We can get it in another state but we're not going to give it up."

Bowles and Joseph W. Danes, national vice president and Delaware president of the organization, announced that a meeting would be held at the airport in Harrington, Del., at 2:30 Sunday afternoon.

BOTH SAID Bowles would attend. Bowles said he would first try to arrange a "conference" with Delaware authorities regarding the warrant for his arrest. He said he wanted to face it "in Delaware, and nowhere else—I don't want to be extradited."

It apparently was his idea to give himself up and to seek to arrange immediate bail, which might enable him to appear at the Harrington meeting, anyway.

Bowles left the raceway here by car, headed presumably for Washington.

He had arrived about 2:30, hatless, and wearing a dark blue suit. Within 60 seconds, he was called aside in an aisle between open tiers of seats by two agents on the staff of L. A. Chamberlin, director of internal revenue for the Baltimore district. They served the subpoena.

Baltimore 'Practically Normal'

BALTIMORE, Oct. 7—Public school attendance here was described as "practically normal" today by Dr. John H. Fischer, Superintendent of Public Instruction. No incidents involving parents who opposed de-segregation were reported.

Baltimore has 170 public schools and at no time have more than twenty-five of them been affected by disorder growing out of the segregation issue.

The police continued to patrol certain key schools in strength. The greatest tension appeared to continue in the area around elementary school No. 34, in southwest Baltimore.

It was here a week ago today that the first picketing by proponents of segregation began. A day later, the trouble spread to Southern High School, where a teacher had to drive her car through a hostile crowd to get two Negro pupils to safety. There were three arrests.

Miss Clara M. Crockett, principal of School 34, reported that attendance continued to rise. It was now back to about 80 per cent of normal. She spoke patiently to anti-desegregation parents who called on her.

School 34 has an enrollment of 554 children for the morning session and 550 for the afternoon. It has twelve Negro children, all in kindergarten.

Baltimore Students Told To Return to Schools

By the Associated Press.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 6.—Their position further strengthened by firm police action and circuit court action, school officials today ordered students who have been absent "without sufficient reason" to return to class this morning "without fail."

Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of schools, issued the ultimatum to students late yesterday.

"There has been sufficient time now for all to realize that illegal absence from school is not an acceptable way to express opinions on public questions . . ." he said.

He called attention to the school attendance law that "pupils over 16 years of age who are repeatedly truant (shall) be permanetly dropped from the schools."

Earlier Judge James K. Cullen of Baltimore's supreme bench reused to order the Board of School Commissioners to restore segregation which it abolished with the opening of school September 7.

The Maryland Petition Committee and the National Association for the Advancement of White People had sought such a court order.

"This Court finds the Board of School Commissioners has exercised its authority legally and in accordance with a final and enforceable holding and decision of the Supreme Court of the United States," Judge Cullen said.

McKeldin and Byrd Voice Sentiments on School Segregation

The two contenders in Maryland's gubernatorial campaign made statements on the school segregation problem yesterday.

Republican Gov. McKeldin made a fleeting but significant reference to it in a Prince Frederick speech last night.

And his Democratic opponent, Dr. H. C. Byrd, released a lengthy statement in which he advocated letting each Maryland county handle school segregation in its own way.

Dr. Byrd's recommendation was similar to the position taken by Republican Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins. Mr. Rollins, who was presumably speaking for the McKeldin administration, said recently he would recommend to the Supreme Court that the start of integration be left to the discretion of local school authorities.

Cites Long-Time Policy.

Dr. Byrd noted in his statement that it has "long been the policy of the State of Maryland to maintain separate but equal facilities for white and colored children in the schools" and it has been one of the duties of the State government to "promote good will and progress among all of our citizens, regardless of race or religion."

"It is apparent, however, that conditions not only differ in the various communities but the thinking of our people on the subject likewise differs in various communities," Dr. Byrd added.

"It therefore seems to me to be unwise to take such drastic steps as to end immediately an educational plan that has worked with increasing benefits to all concerned for many years, and particularly unwise to take such steps where there is strong and sincere opposition to such a change."

Up to School Boards.

The former University of Maryland president said he is convinced "on group in any county is more conversant with the ramifications of this problem than the School Boards of each county."

"All problems involving public education should be handled, as far as legally possible," he said, "on a local basis by the School Boards of each county. Here is another example where the principle of home rule can be wisely employed."

Dr. Byrd's statement was a clarification of a remark he made Monday on his native Eastern Shore. He drew shouts and applause then when he said:

"You will want members of the School Board appointed who will be able to deal and act in accordance with the age-old customs and traditions that have been part of our way of life."

Charges Double-Talk.

Gov. McKeldin, speaking to a Republican rally of about 125 persons, most of them colored, in the Calvert County courthouse, charged that Dr. Byrd "says one thing on the Eastern Shore and another thing in Baltimore."

"He talks out of both sides of his mouth at the same time," the Governor added.

Gov. McKeldin has made no public statement in this campaign detailing his stand on school segregation. His public utterances in the past, however, have urged racial tolerance and he has often referred to his appointment of Jews and Negroes to high positions in the State government.

Segregation Disturbances Increasing at Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1 (AP)—A crowd of about 400 white adults and teenagers shouted angry threats at Negro pupils leaving Southern High School today as demonstrations against combined white and Negro classes in Baltimore public schools gained momentum.

Police hustled the Negro pupils out of Southern High two or three at a time into prowl cars and took them home.

The crowd milled after three of them.

Leon Thompson, 14 - year - old Negro, was punched in the face.

Fined For Assault.

Jack Zimmerman, 24 - year - old unemployed shipyard worker from 28 blocks away, was fined $100 on an assault charge for hitting the lad.

Three other white men were fined $25 for disorderly conduct.

A young woman physical education teacher rescued a Negro boy and girl after they had been surrounded by demonstrators. She drove into the crowd, took the two youngsters into her car, and sped off with them.

The crowd tried to upset the cruiser in which Zimmerman and the Thompson boy were taken to a police station.

Police had squelched an earlier threat of violence at Southern High, one of six schools to which picketing, boycotts and protests spread today. There are only 36 Negroes among the 1,780 enrolled at Southern.

Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro issued a public statement saying the situation had become "a matter of serious concern." He pleaded against any inflammatory action and asked everyone to be calm.

The school board stuck by its announced intention of keeping schools open, with Negroes and whites assigned to study together at 35 of the 190 buildings.

Attendance was cut sharply at three schools as parents came to take their children home. Many explained they did not insist on segregation but feared their youngsters would be hurt.

A very few of the 581 pupils showed up today at school No. 34, where pickets made their first appearance yesterday. Integrated classes had been in operation almost four weeks without a sign of friction between white and Negro pupils.

Schools affected are in one of the poorer residential sections of the city, running heavily to day laborers, factory workers, and domestic servants. Occupancy of the tightly packed row houses sometimes shifts from white to Negro in the middle of a block.

Pupils Kept From School In Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Sept. 30 (AP).—A school racial problem erupted here today nearly a month after classes had started with white and Negro pupils mingling peacefully.

The dispute was over a dozen Negro children, aged 4 and 5 attending kindergarten with 50 other white children.

About 12 women pickets, accompanied by two men, marched in front of the school this afternoon with crudely lettered signs protesting integration.

Principal Clara Crockett said enrollment at Elementary School 34 was 558. She said only 168 children attended morning classes, and parents came after 35 of these before noon.

There were only 111 children in the school this afternoon. All six Negro children attended. Five of six enrolled for the morning session attended. The sixth was ill.

Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of schools, visited the scene today and remarked: "It looks like some of the germs have drifted down from Delaware."

Dr. Fischer's reference was to southern Delaware, where some schools are being boycotted as a protest against integration of white and Negro pupils.

One of the men, followed by the other pickets, said the group had no leader and had simply gathered to "express the sentiments of the people who live around here."

He predicted the movement would spread in Baltimore and would "close every school in the city."

Several parents in the predominantly white neighborhood reported to the principal that

BALTIMORE, Sept. 30.—Parents picketed an elementary school in southwest Baltimore today protesting the attendance of 12 Negro children in the kindergarten class.

Dr. John Fischer, superintendent of schools, said only about 50 percent of the children were attending classes at the No. 34 school.

Police maintained order.

Women carried home-made signs reading:

"We want equal but segregated schools."

Other signs read: "We want our rights! We voted for the school loans—why this?"

The picketing was the first such disturbance in Baltimore. Schools opened this fall on an integrated basis in accordance with a ruling by the city solicitor's office.

About 582 children are enrolled in the school. School principal Clara Crockett said the only Negroes are the 12 kindergarten tots, 4 and 5 years old.

NEGROES THREATENED AT BALTIMORE SCHOOL

Police Have To Take Pupils Home In Prowl Cars

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1.—(AP)—A crowd of about 400 white adults and teenagers shouted angry threats at Negro pupils leaving Southern High School Friday as demonstrations against combined white and Negro classes in Baltimore public schools gained momentum.

Police hustled the Negro pupils out of Southern High two or three at a time into prowl cars and took them home.

The crowd milled after three of them. Leon Thompson, 14-year-old Negro, was punched in the face. Jack Zimmerman, 24-year-old unemployed shipyard worker from 28 blocks away, was fined $100 on an assault charge for hitting the lad.

Three other white men were fined $25 for disorderly conduct.

A young woman physical education teacher rescued a Negro boy and girl after they had been surrounded by demonstrators. She drove into the crowd, took the two youngsters into her car, and sped off with them.

The crowd tried to upset the cruiser in which Zimmerman and the Thompson boy were taken to a police station.

Police had squelched and earlier threat of violence at Southern High, one of six schools to which picketing, boycotts and protests spread Friday. There are only 36 Negroes among the 1,780 enrolled at Southern.

Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro issued a public statement saying the situation had become "a matter of serious concern." He pleaded against any inflammatory action and asked everyone to be calm.

Turner Has Plan

Integration Is Issue in Shore Race

CENTERVILLE, Md., Oct. 1 (AP).—The school segregation issue flared today into the campaign for Maryland's Eastern Shore seat in Congress.

State Sen. Edward Turner the Democratic candidate launched a plan to keep segregation in the schools.

Rep. Edward T. Miller, his Republican opponent, said he was "shocked and indignant that Senator Turner has seen fit to lower the level of the campaign by injecting the racial issue."

Miller accused Turner of an "appeal to emotional prejudices in an irresponsible and unprincipaled effort to secure votes."

"Turner proposed a "local option" plan which he said would circumvent the supreme court's opinion of last May 17 that separate schools are illegal.

Miller said he had "no quarrel with determination of the integration problem at the local level," but, he objected:

"It was the Republican Attorney General of Maryland who enunciated this policy, in contrast to the course followed by the Democratic Administration in Baltimore.

"I am in favor of equal educational facilities for Negroes but separate facilities," Turner declared.

"I am unalterably opposed to the Supreme Court's decision. I do not agree with the line of thinking contained in the Supreme Court's decision.

"I feel the people of this section of Maryland are not ready to accept the complex changes which will attend the breaking down of segregation in our public schools.

Turner proposed Maryland's General Assembly should enact laws by which the public schools would operate specifically under the state's broad police powers for the preservation of health, welfare and safety.

A companion law then would vest in local boards of education "the right to determine as a fact whether people's health, welfare and safety would be in danger by integration in the public schools."

11 Negroes Taken Off School Rolls

Picketing in Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Sept. 30 — The first Baltimore picketing against intersegregation broke ou today at an elementary school with twelve Negro children among almost 600 pupils. About 500 pupils stayed away or left the school. The pickets said they planned to demonstrate tomorrow at more schools.

Today's picketing was generally orderly but a policewoman assigned to try to talk the pickets into leaving was shoved and, in the excitement, a woman collapsed and was hospitalized. No arrests were made.

BRIEF RIOT FLARES IN BALTIMORE

BY EDWARD FREEMAN

BALTIMORE — (INS) — More than 400 white students rioted at a Baltimore High School, attacking two Negro boys and attempting to upset a police cruiser.

The disturbance resulted when several police and a white minister attempted to escort three Negro boys and one Negro girl from the Southern High School.

White students, who have been picketing in protest against an end to segregation in Baltimore public schools, attacked two of the Negro youths, beating them over the head, slapping them and hurling curses at the quarte

The police finally rescued the two boys and arrested one white student. They drove away to a police station with the three in a police car, but not before the milling white students almost overturned the vehicle.

At last reports, the other two Negro students had not been molested. It was not known whether there were any injuries.

Baltimore Parents Protest Desegregation

By The Associated Press

The fencing between advocates and opponents of segregation centered in the border states yesterday.

A Delaware board of education voted to remove 11 Negroes from a previously all-white institution and a Baltimore school was picketed by irate white parents.

A newly elected School Board at Milford, Del., moved to return to segregation in Milford High School and remove Negroes "in the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole."

There was immediate speculation that some of the 11 Negro students may try to return to classes at the high school today, despite the board's ruling. They were admitted when the fall semester opened.

Milford's School Board members resigned a week ago when the State Board of Education said that in admitting Negroes they had acted without receiving prior approval from the State. The new board was sworn in yesterday.

In a statement, the board said that the future school assignment and necessary transportation of the Negro students "is the responsibility of the State Board of Education."

The Milford board appealed to parents to send their children to school this morning. About two thirds of the high school's 1,500 white students have been staying away from classes. The school was closed for a week because of fears of violence.

Wagner P. Jackson, president of the Wilmington chapter of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People, denounced the board's action as a "shameful degrading spectacle of our duly constituted authority ignominiously surrendering to the illegal actions of a lawless mob."

Attendance in seven south Delaware schools, also in the Milford School District, was reported by State education officials as "pretty badly affected."

Dr. George R. Miller, State education commissioner, said all the schools are open but noted that fewer students have been reporting each day.

WHITE PICKETS AT BALTIMORE yesterday protested against school integration nearly a month after classes started with white and Negro pupils mingling peacefully. Watching across the street from pickets at School No. 34 are Negro parents and children.

In Baltimore, parents protested the admission of 12 Negroes to a kindergarten class. Picketing the school, women carried signs calling for segregation.

Although segregation is being continued in Maryland at large, Baltimore began racial integration in the schools in accordance with a ruling by the City solicitor's office.

The women picketing the elementary school, which has an enrollment of 558, said there are plans to spread the protest to at least four other schools.

Principal Clara Crockett said only 168 children attended morning classes and parents came after 35 of these before noon.

Georgia Democrats Thursday hurled criticism at both the United States Supreme Court and President Eisenhower and then gave the state party organization's full support for the prevention of school integration.

The party delegates in convention at Macon endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment that would clear the way for "private schools" to replace public schools in Georgia.

Lieutenant Governor Marvin Griffin, who takes office as Governor in January, called the Supreme Court's ruling against public-school segregation an "unconstitutional usurpation of legislative power from Congress."

Delegates adopted a resolution denouncing Eisenhower for appointing Earl Warren as Chief Justice of the United States.

Negroes Booed, Punched At Baltimore Schools

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1 (AP).—A crowd of about 400 white adults and teen-agers shouted angry insults at Negro pupils leaving Southern High School today as demonstrations against combined white and Negro classes in Baltimore public schools flared for the fourth day.

Fifty-four Negro pupils were escorted from the school by a minister and a third was driven through the crowd by a teacher. Two or three prowl cars moved into the area.

One of the Negro students, Leon Thompson, fourteen, was punched in the face. Jack Zimmerman, a twenty-four-year-old unemployed shipyard worker, was fined $100 on an assault charge for hitting the boy. Three other white men were fined $25 for disorderly conduct.

Woman Rescues

A young woman physical education teacher rescued a Negro boy and girl after they had been surrounded by demonstrators. She drove her into the crowd, took the two youngsters in, and sped off with them.

The crowd tried to upset the police car in which Zimmerman and young Thompson were taken to a police station.

Police had squelched an earlier threat of violence at Southern High, one of six schools to which picketing, boycotts and protests spread today. There are thirty-six Negroes among the 1,780 enrolled at Southern.

A disturbance broke out at Southern when ten Negro pupils left the building under police escort at the request of their parents. The nine girls and a boy remained on a sidewalk across from the school and about 200 young white demonstrators jeered at them.

At one point the whites began moving menacingly toward the Negroes, who retreated down the street to the next corner, where police stepped between the two groups and sent them off in opposite directions.

Touch Off Disturbance

Two young men and a woman touched off another demonstration at School No. 22 at the southwest edge of the downtown business district. At School No. 34, picketing continued today and attendance appeared to be about the same as yesterday, when only 23 per cent of the youngsters were in classes.

The other demonstrations were at Southern High annex; School No. 48 at Hollins and Fulton Streets, and School No. 55, in the northeast part of the city.

Meanwhile, school officials have reaffirmed their position that schools would remain open. The Board of School Commissioners met late yesterday and unanimously reaffirmed their policy of integration.

Normal at Milford, Del.

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 1 (AP).—Attendance returned to normal today at Milford High School as triumphant segregation forces hailed the defeat of an attempt to send eleven Negro students to the all-white school.

For four days this week attendance at the school—with ten of the Negro pupils in classes—had dropped to only about one-third of normal. Today, school officials reported it was over 80 per cent at youngsters crammed aboard the fourteen buses taking them to school.

Dr. George R. Miller, state superintendent of public instruction, disclosed that the eleven Negro pupils have not yet been assigned to any school. He added that the executive board of the State Board of Education would meet in the next few days "to consider this problem and the entire situation."

Edmund F. Steiner, the New Milford School Board president, said he expected the Negro students to go to an all-Negro high school at Dover, eighteen miles away, next week.

As the four-day integration attempt ended, Police Chief S. G. Powell told reporters that a police patrol car had found a cross burning in a vacant lot across from the all-Negro Benjamin Banneker elementary school late last night.

Leon Thompson, 14-year-old Negro boy, was punched in the face.

Police arrested a man who identified himself as Jack Zimmerman, 24, and gave an address two dozen blocks away.

One other Negro boy was escorted from the school by a minister and a third was driven through the crowd by a teacher.

Two other white men were arrested.

The crowd tried to upset the cruiser in which Zimmerman and the Thompson boy were taken to a police station.

Police had squelched an earlier threat of violence at Southern High, one of six schools to which picketing, boycotts and protests spread today. There are only 36 Negroes among the 1,780 enrolled at Southern.

Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro issued a public statement saying the situation had become "a matter of serious concern." He pleaded against any inflammatory action and asked everyone to be calm.

The school board stuck by its announced intention of keeping schools open, with Negroes and whites assigned to study together at 52 of the 190 buildings.

Attendance was cut sharply at three schools as parents came to take their children home. Many explained they did not insist on segregation but feared their youngsters would be hurt.

4 Arrested in Row At Baltimore School

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1 (AP).—Police arrested four persons outside Southern High School here today when a crowd threatened to overturn a police cruiser.

The incident started when a white man hit a Negro pupil emerging from school. The man was arrested immediately. The crowd pushed forward as he was being hustled into the cruiser.

All those arrested were adults. None were identified immediately.

Picketing and protests against school integration also occurred at five other Baltimore schools during the day as school officials reaffirmed their position that schools would remain open.

The Board of School Commissioners, in a meeting late yesterday, reaffirmed their position that schools would remain open. The Commissioners called the picketing "behavior that serves only to frighten children," and announced that despite the demonstration, all city public schools will remain open.

"The Department of Education and the Police Department give their assurance," the Commissioners asserted, "that parents need not have an concern about sending their children to school."

Police narrowly averted violence when classes were dismissed this afternoon at Southern High School.

After some scuffling, they arrested three white persons and a Negro, all adults.

Demonstrating at Southern High started just before school opening this morning, with about 500 white pupils milling in the streets.

Some of the teachers came out and snatched from the youngsters crude placards which said: "Negroes Not Allowed" and "On Strike."

Police in four squad cars and a patrol wagon broke up the demonstration and told the youngsters either to go home or go to school.

The 39 Negroes attending Southern walked into the building in a group. There were no audible threats against them.

A disturbance broke out at Southern when 10 Negro pupils left the building under police escort at the request of their parents.

The nine girls and a boy remained on a sidewalk across from the school and about 200 young white demonstrators jeered at them.

At one point, the whites began moving menacingly toward the Negroes.

The 10 Negro students retreated down the street to the next corner, where police stepped between the two groups and sent them off in opposite directions.

At Least 500 Absent

When classes got under way, it appeared at least 500 of the 1788 students were absent.

Two young men and a woman touched off another demonstration at Public School No. 22 at the southwest edge of the downtown business district.

The woman said she had participated in a demonstration yesterday at chool No. 34, scene of the first disturbance since the Baltimore schools started fall classes with white and Negro pupils integrated four weeks ago.

At School No. 34, picketing continued today and attendance appeared to be about the same as yesterday, when only 23 percent of the youngsters were in classes.

Demonstrations Against Integration Break Out

Mob Of 400 Adults, Teen-Agers Threaten Admission Of Negroes To Baltimore Schools

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1 (AP)—A mob of about 400 whites, adults and teen-agers, threatened three Negro pupils coming away from Southern High School today in spreading demonstrations against mingling of whites and Negroes in Baltimore's public schools.

Leon Thompson, 14-year-old Negro boy, was punched in the face. Police arrested a man who identified himself as Jack Zimmerman, 24.

One other Negro boy was escorted from the school by a minister and a third was driven through the crowd by a teacher.

Two other white men were arrested.

The crowd tried to upset the cruiser in which Zimmerman and the Thompson boy were taken to a police station.

Police had squelched an earlier threat of violence at Southern High, one of six schools to which picketing, boycotts and protests spread today. There are only 36 Negroes among the 1780 enrolled at Southern.

Situation 'Serious'

Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro issued a public statement saying the situation had become "a matter of serious concern." He pleaded against any inflammatory action and asked everyone to be calm.

The school board stuck by its announced intention of keeping schools open, with Negroes and whites assigned to study together at 52 of the 190 buildings.

Attendance was cut sharply at three schools as parents came to take their children home. Many explained they did not insist on segregation but feared their youngsters would be hurt.

Very few of the 581 pupils showed up today at School No. 34, where pickets made their first appearance yesterday. Integrated classes had been in operation almost four weeks without a sign of friction between white and Negro pupils.

In Poorer Sections

Schools affected are in one of the poorer residential sections of the city, running heavily to day laborers, factory workers, and domestic servants. Occupancy of the tightly-packed row houses sometimes shifts from white to Negro in the middle of a block.

The 36 Negroes enrolled at Southern High went into the building in a body after the initial demonstration there this morning.

Integration Disorders In Baltimore Result In Arrest of Six

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE, Oct. 2.—Police and school officials looked today to the two-day week end to ease the tension that mounted between Negroes and whites in densely populated South Baltimore yesterday.

A 14-year-old Negro student was punched in the nose by a white man and six persons were arrested during a demonstration by about 400 white adults and teenagers shouting opposition to integrated classes at Southern High School.

Southern, where only 36 Negroes are enrolled among 1,780, was one of six schools at which picketing, boycotts and protests developed. It was the only scene of violence.

About 50 policemen detailed to the area moved in groups of two or three, dispersing large gatherings of Negroes or whites as they formed.

Sit on Front Steps.

It was the only reported incident of the night. Many residents of the rowhouse neighborhood where whites and Negroes live next to each other on some streets, spent most of the evening sitting on their front steps.

Of the six arrested during the demonstration at Southern High, four were fined.

Jack Zimmerman, 24, an unemployed shipyard worker who lives more than two miles from the school, was fined $100 and costs on charges of assaulting Leon Thompson, the Negro boy who was being escorted by police from the school.

Three Fined $25.

Three others, two whites and a Negro, were fined $25 each on charges of disorderly conduct resulting from the demonstration.

School officials said all schools would remain open with Negroes and whites assigned to study together at 52 of the 190 buildings throughout the city. Baltimore's public schools have an enrollment of 140,957, including 85,626 whites and 55,331 Negroes.

Until Thursday, when pickets showed up at a school which had 12 Negro kindergarten pupils, classes had been integrated without incident since public schools opened here September 7. Yesterday the demonstrations spread to five other schools.

Wilkins praises NAACP for school case decision

Afro-American p. 5
Sat. 10-16-54
Baltimore, Md.

CLEVELAND — "I believe that Many of us hoped for victory but few of us hoped or anticipated the victory achieved by NAACP lawyers and the Department of Justice before the U.S. Supreme Court against segregation in education was a victory for all Americans everywhere."

That statement was made by J. Ernest Wilkins, assistant secretary of labor, as he addressed a mass meeting during the 42nd annual membership campaign of the Cleveland branch of the NAACP here Tuesday.

"Within the past few weeks," he added, "thousands of boys and girls, colored and white, have been going to school together for the first time.

— o O o —

"THIS FACT is often lost sight of in the headlines that are made by a few young scatterbrains and their elders.

"What they are opposing is not integration. What they are opposing is the whole tradition of law and order, the whole concept of human rights on which their security is founded."

Again turning to the long struggle of the NAACP, he declared:

"I am not sure of the exact point at which it occurred, but I am sure that at some place or time there must have been a decision among early NAACP leaders — a decision which was of tremendous importance to not only America but the world as a whole.

— o O o —

"IT WAS A DECISION to build on faith in America, faith in the process of law, faith in the inherent decency and justice of our fellow citizens.

"The lawyers for the NAACP, when they argued before the Supreme Court, did not come hat in hand asking for favors. They asked for simple justice.

"They argued about the meaning of the Constitution, on the law, and they relied upon the intelligence and wisdom of the Supreme Court to achieve a victory for justice that could be won no other way.

"Their faith, your faith, the faith of America was justified.

8 Parents Are Fined In Penllyn School Row

For refusing to send their children to an all-Negro school after they were refused admission to a school predominantly white, four sets of Penllyn parents were fined $1 each last night on charges of violating the compulsory school attendance law.

Defendants at the hearings before Magistrate Robert Hulshouer, of Upper Gwynedd Township, were four sets of parents who last week filed a mandamus action in the Montgomery County Court at Norristown, seeking fully equal educational facilities for their children in the schools of Lower Gwynedd Township.

HEARING IS TRANSFERRED

The hearing last night was transferred from the lower township when the magistrate there disqualified himself as a relative of a school board member.

The defendants, who immediately appealed their fines to the county court, were Mr. and Mrs. Thadeus W. Smith, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Queenan; Mr. and Mrs. George E. Robinson, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Stewart, all of Penllyn.

Violence Threat Closes Two Schools

By The Associated Press

Telephoned threats of violence led to the closing of two public schools again Tuesday at Milford, Del., possible court action loomed at Hillsboro, Ohio, and a strike of white students continued at Madison, W. Va.

Elsewhere in the South the segregation situation continued calm, with no incidents reported.

At Milford, Dr. Raymond C. Cobbs, school superintendent, ordered the schools closed after reporting telephoned threats of violence if Negroes were allowed to attend classes in the previously all-white high school.

Delaware Gov. J. Caleb Boggs declined comment. A scheduled parade featureing the Milford high school band was canceled.

School doors were shut yesterday after the school board learned of a protest march planned by anti - integrationists. Plans to reopen them were abandoned shortly after 8 a.m. today.

Dr. Cobbs said in a statement: "Members of the Board of Education since making an earlier announcement have received numerous calls threatening violence in case any negro children attend school. In the interest of the safety of all the children the board hereby serves notice that the schools are closed until further notice."

Five policemen guarded the school and tension was reported mounting in the southeastern Delaware community.

Harry E. Mayhew, one of the four members of the school board, resigned, but did not discuss the reasons for his action. There was no immediate decision as to whether 11 Negro pupils would be allowed to take up their high school studies.

School board president Dean Kimmell said that in addition to the telephone calls, a delegation of citizens opposed to integration came to his home, about midnight Monday night and told him that some of their number had "gotten out of hand and there might be violence."

Kimmell said the school board members were not threatened at any time, but that the delegation indicated violence might take place if Negro pupils tried to enter the school.

At Hillsboro, a small southwestern Ohio city, Negroes planned to go to court in an effort to get their children into previously all-white schoolrooms.

Backed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, Negroes expected to file an injunction in U.S. District Court in Cincinnati, the court whose jurisdiction includes the area where the schools are located.

Hillsboro officials said, however, that there was no school segregation in their city of 5,000. The city has about 1,200 Negroes and officials said 67 Negroes were enrolled in elementary schools. Some Negro children remained away from school Tuesday.

At Madison, W. Va., Boone County School Supt. Clarence Tamplin reported a strike of white students was continuing and that the Board of Education had made "no definite decision" on school segregation.

Some 15 to 20 students went on strike at Sherman high school at Seth, W. Va., yesterday in protest against admitting three Negroes. There are about 700 students in the school.

In the District of Columbia school officials took another step toward integration by permitting elementary pupils, now attending schools within old segregated boundaries, to transfer to schools serving new nonracial ones in which they live. New pupils this year already had been enrolled according to new interracial boundaries.

School officials did not estimate the expected number of transfers. There was speculation that thousands might try to make a shift, including many Negro children who would seek to enter formerly all-white schools.

West Virginia School Chief Says 'Hands Off' As Integration Proceeds

Despite Isolated Strikes, School Mixing Progresses

CHARLESTON, W. Va. — (INS) — West Virginia's school chief Tuesday indicated he would maintain a hands-off attitude on school integration as local boards of education tried various plans to meet the U. S. Supreme Court's decision to outlaw segregation.

Superintendent of free schools W. W. Trent made his announcement as Greenbrier County decided to end its integration attempt and send Negro students back to all-Negro schools.

The State superintendent said: "Those boards of education that are attempting to integrate gradually are taking advantage of the time prior to the issuance of a decree when integration may become compulsory. At the present time boards of education are free to act. I shall take no action."

Greenbrier's experiment in integration ended Monday night after a day-long meeting of the school board. County Superintendent D. D. Harrah ordered white and Negro pupils back to separate schools and indicated no new attempt to bring them together would be made this year.

The county's decision came after white pupils in White Sulphur Springs paraded the streets carrying placards which read: "No Negroes wanted in our schools." Classes were called off to transfer the some 40 Negro pupils who had enrolled in county schools which had previously been "all-white" back to their former schools.

Another boycott is taking place at Marion County's Annabelle School. About 70 mothers of white students are protesting the admission of about 12 Negroes. The parents failed to show up on their own lines, but their children remained out of school. Meanwhile, the remaining 108 pupils at the school, including the Negroes, continued classes.

Taylor's hands-off statement emphasizes that integration is up to the state's 55 local school districts for the present.

About 36 of the districts have Negro students. Several of them have already opened the doors of all their schools to Negroes. A total of nine Negroes are enrolled this term in three Wheeling high schools and 41 Negro students who formerly rode about 15 miles to Wheeling from Brooke County now have been absorbed in Brooke's own system.

Pawpaw, in Morgan County, tarnsferred nine students from Negro schools at other points to its own school and about the same holds true in neighboring Pendleton County.

OTHER COUNTIES

Most counties, however, have decided not to change their policies until they get directives from the Supreme Court.

The Knawha County Board had announced it intended to get rid of segregation but that it would wait for the Supreme Court's directives expected later this winter. Superintendent Virgil L. Flinn said later, however, that he hoped to get intergation started this year, including integration of the school bus system.

No Negroes showed up at the "white" schools of the county and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sent a delegation to the school board for "clarification."

NAACP spokesman Willard Brown said he was personaly dissatisfied with the stand taken by the board but that further action would not be taken now.

Meanwhile, at the college level segregation apparently has ended at both West Virginia State College — formerly an all-Negro school — and at the University of West Virginia.

West Virginia State, enrollment 850, now has an estimated 100 white students and four of them reportedly are good prospects for the "Negro" school's football team. The University of West Virginia, which has had Negroes in its graduate school since the '30s, reports that it now has Negroes registered in its undergraduate school, but cannot give an estimate of the number — none of the registration forms include any reference to race.

West Virginia School Closed

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Sept. 27 (UP)—Parents protesting integration of white and Negro pupils closed the Annabelle grade school at near-by Four States today. They met the principal and six teachers at the door and told them not to enter.

Principal Lloyd Seccuro and the teachers, who had arrived by bus, returned home. No pupils showed up for classes this morning.

The Marion county board of education immediately called a special meeting, and Superintendent J. J! Straight announced: "The board will seek relief in the courts."

Parents had previously picketed the school in protest to the integration of thirteen Negro pupils. Many of them had kept their children out since school started about three weeks ago.

Virginia Public School Conference Urges Quick Student-Teacher Action

Beckley, W. Va., — Public school desegregation "as soon as possible" and "not later than September, 1955" was called for here by delegates to the tenth annual conference of the West Virginia Conference of NAACP Branches.

A resolution on schools adopted by the assemblage further urged that teachers as well as students be included in integration action to comply with the Supreme Court decision which held segregated public schools to be unconstitutional.

Commenting on the school strike in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., which resulted from school integration there, the delegates said in a statement:

"We deplore the un-American conduct of the protesting group of parents and students against integration in Greenbrier county schools and commended Negro parents for the manner in which they handled the difficult situation.

Within Rights

"Negro students were within their rights to register at white high schools and it is unfortunate that the board of education rescinded its order."

Conference delegates heard J. W. Robinson, assistant supervisor of instruction in the state education department, report that full integration has taken place in 12 West Virginia counties and partial integration carried out in another 13 counties.

Dr. William J. L. Wallace, president of West Virginia State College, delivered the keynote address at the two-day meeting, which closed on Sept. 19 with an address by Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington, D. C., bureau.

Participants in a panel discussion on NAACP community action program and legal action included Willard L. Brown, Charleston, chairman of the Association's state legal redress committee, and Oliver W. Hill, Richmond, member of the national legal committee of the NAACP. Gloster B. Current, director of branches for Association, served as moderator.

No Unusual Incidents

"There were no unusual incidents on opening day in the counties that have integrated or partially integrated." Mr. Robinson asserted.

White Mothers Obey Court, Send Children to School with Negroes

FAIRMONT, W. Va. —(UP) —White mothers, who for two straight days refused to allow teachers to enter the Annabelle grade school at nearby Four States, obeyed a court order Wednesday and sent their children to classes with 18 Negroes.

Sheriff Chilton Campbell and a deputy waited at the school to see that the injunction against the strike at the mining community's school was enforced.

The school reopening was orderly, although for the last two days angry mothers had warned there would be "trouble" if classes were held.

Principal Lloyd Securro said "about 95 per cent" of the normal enrollment of 171 attended.

Some women accompanied their children to the school but a spokesman said "they didn't have anything to say about the situation and apparently have decided to abide by the court's order."

A total of 53 persons was named in an injunction issued by Circuit Judge J. Harper Meredith, who termed the mothers' action "a rebellion against the state."

The defendants included parents who allegedly have been keeping their children home from school, or who have been attempting to prohibit the integration of White and Negro pupils by threatened violence.

Mr. Securro told the board most of those who blocked his way yesterday morning were women.

West Virginia School Closed, Warning Heeded

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—About 16 persons protesting the end of segregation forced Annabelle Elementary School at nearby Four States to close yesterday by warning the principal and teachers there would be "trouble" if they entered the school.

Principal Lloyd H. Securro and the five teachers went home.

The Marion County Board of Education met a short time later in special session. Supt. J. J. Straight said the board decided to "seek relief in the courts" against those persons protesting integration. He did not elaborate.

Colored Teachers, As Well As Students, Merit Integration, Say W. Virginians

Beckley, W. Va., Sept. 23—Public school desegregation "as soon as possible" and "not later than September, 1955" was called for here by delegates to the tenth annual conference of the West Virginia Conference of N. A. A. C. P. Branches.

A resolution on school adopted by the assemblage further urged that teachers as well as students be included in integration action to comply with the Supreme Court Decision which held segregation public schools to be unconstitutional.

Commenting on the school strike in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., which resulted from school integration there, the delegates said in a statement:

"We deplore the un-American conduct of the protesting group of parents and students against integration in Greenbrier county schools and commend Negro parents for the manner in which they handled the difficult situation.

"Negro students were within their rights to register at white high schools and it is unfortunate that the board of education rescinded its order."

Conference delegates heard J. W. Robinson, assistant supervisor of instruction in the state education department, report that full integration has token place in 12 West Virginia counties and partial integration carried out in another 13 counties.

"There were no unusual incidents on opening day in the counties that have integrated or partially integrated," Mr. Robinson asserted.

Dr. William J. L. Wallace, president of West Virginia State College, delivered the keynote address at the two-day meeting, which closed on September 19 with an address by Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington, D. C. bureau.

Participants in a panel discussion on NAACP community action program and legal action included Willard L. Brown, Charleston, chairman of the Association's state legal redress committee, and Oliver E. Hill, Richmond, member of the national legal committee of the NAACP, Gloster B. Current, director of branches for the Association, served as modrator.

T. G. Nutter of East Charleston was reelected president of the State Conference of NAACP Branches. The Rev. J. Mitchell and Mrs. Memphis T. Garrison, both of Huntington, were re-elected secretary and treasurer, respectively.

No More Uprisings

Segregation in W. Va. Education Is as Dead as the Dodo Bird

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 10-16-54

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

FOUR STATES, W. Va.—Segregation in education here is as dead as a dodo bird.

While it's difficult to predict the vagaries of people, it can be accurately reported that the residents of this back country mining community are in no mood to engineer any more uprisings to keep Negro children from attending schools that were heretofore for whites only.

"We're ashamed," one mother told the Courier. "I told them (the leaders) that they were licked before they ever got started. I don't know what happened," she said. "I guess we got to following the wrong leaders."

Another mother said, "We're all sorry about the whole thing . . . I just can't understand how it all got started . . . We live together, the men work together and our children play together before and after school. Why not let them go to the same school?"

AFTER TALKING to one mother after another, you're convinced that there will be no more flare-ups here over integrating white and Negro school children.

The mothers convince you that they arrived at their decision after a reshuffle of the issues involved.

Then you visit the nationally publicized Annabelle School, a twenty-year-old, sand-colored two-story brick structure. Nailed to the front door where no one could possibly miss seeing was an injunction issued by Circuit Court Judge J. Harper M. Meredith. The order cited fifty-three defts and restricted them from further interfering with the operation of the school.

The jurist stated before issuing the decrees that he felt that the sheriff or the prosecuting attorney should have issued warrants against "this bunch of rebellious citizens," but declared, "I'll open the schools if nobody else can."

AT BEST, a miner's life is a rugged existence and he is keenly aware of the disadvantages of making enemies unnecessarily.

Efforts to get the residents of this turbulent mining village to talk were fruitless until they were promised and convinced that they would not be quoted by name.

There are fifteen Negro families living and working together with whites in Four States.

We wanted to know their reaction to the opposition stirred up against their children going to the white school. The answer was a crisp, one-word description: "Determined."

One miner said, "We were told to stay out of the fuss and to let the white folks fight it out. We did this after we were assured that the judge was on our side, but we got ready, just the same."

We asked what kind of preparation they made, and they replied, "We armed ourselves."

AT THE SCHOOL, Principal Lloyd H. Securro told us, "We don't expect any trouble from the children. Children are just children all over the world.

"Come on, look at them yourself," he invited. There were Negro children in every class but one and all were apparently as happy as any children we have ever seen in a classroom.

We asked Mr. Securro if he had any idea why the mothers in his particular community had assumed such a biased attitude. He said, "It's beyond me. I just can't understand it."

"The queerest thing about the whole incident," he pointed out "is the fact that just five miles from here, at the Farmington High School, there are twenty Negro students and they never had a minute's trouble."

Down in front of the general store, Negro and white children were boarding the same school bus as though they had always traveled together.

Picket line. Afro-American melts when judge acts

Balt. Md. Sat. 10-9-54

- Jail threat induces mind change
- Baltimore officials stand firm

FAIRMOUNT, W. Va. — The picket line around the Four States School here melted suddenly, Tuesday, when a Circuit Court judge told picketing mothers he would throw so many of them in jail "their feet would be sticking out of the window."

The judge's statement came as he issued an injunction forbidding picketing of the school by white mothers to prevent the attendance of 13 colored pupils.

— o O o —

THE COMMUNITY, along with Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D.C., is typical of those where a policy of firmness on the part of the officials concerned has led to school integration being worked out in a forthright manner.

The Marion County Board of Education had gone to court to seek the injunction after the mothers threw a line around the Four States School and refused to permit its teachers to enter the school for two days.

CIRCUIT JUDGE J. Harper Meridth called the action of the picketing mothers a rebellion against the government.

He ordered the 53 parents named in the injunction to cease "interfering with, or obstructing the entering or leaving of the school grounds and building" and from "assaulting, coercing or threatening any pupil, principal, teacher or other agent" of the school board.

"It cannot continue" Judge Meredit said. "If necessary I'll fill the jail until their feet are sticking out the windows"

Eighteen parents had showed up at the school, Monday, and told the teachers there would be trouble if they went to school

Tuesday, the parents met the school bus containing the teachers and followed them to school. There a picket line barried their entrance. The teachers went home.

A few hours later Judge Meredith issued his injunction and a copy was nailed on the door of the school. The picket line melted.

— o O o —

THERE ARE 799 colored pupils and 13,193 whites in this county — the third in which the attempts at integrating students have resulted in demonstrations.

On Sept. 13 about 300 of the 475 high school pupils in Greenbrier County, in the southmost section of the state, went on strike Parents held a mass meeting; and the school board rescinded its plans for integration.

The following week, two disturbances broke out in Boone County over partial integration, but the school board decided to maintain the status quo while investigating legal aspects of the case.

Prosecuting Attorney Harrison B. Conaway said he sent state troopers to Four States Tuesday, but only as a precaution. There was no violence of any kind.

— o O o —

THE CHAIRMAN said the school board decided to "seek relief in the courts" after a two-hour special meeting yesterday.

The injunction was handed down by Judge Meredith shortly before noon and it went on the schoolhouse door at 3:10 p.m.

The order noted that the board "is now suffering irreparable loss, injury and damage and that the public interest is being adversely affected. . ."

It was understood that the school principal would be back at 8:30 a.m. the next day to open school.

Integrated Schools Picketed in Two West Virginia Areas

By the Associated Press

Parents are picketing unsegregated schools in two West Virginia counties and there have been moves to set up "citizens' councils" to enforce segregation in Mississippi.

"The white people in certain counties are organizing to protect themselves," a Mississippi legislators said yesterday. "Practically every county in the State has organized or is organizing," he added.

Mississippians soon will be voting on a constitutional amendment which could lead to abolition of the public school system. One legislator said the "citizens' councils" might aid passage of the amendmment.

A member of one of the councils, refusing to be quoted by name, declared: "We want the people assured that there is responsible leadership which will and can handle local segregation problems. If that is recognized, there will be no cause for any hot-headed bunch to start a Ku Klux Klan. If we fail, though, the temper of the public may produce something like the Klan."

Bill Passed in Mississippi

The Mississippi legislature passed a bill yesterday designed to guard against Negro suits forcing admission to the University of Mississippi Medical School. The legislators recently abolished out-of-State medical scholarships to Mississippi students. New scholarships are to be given to the University of Mississippi school, now under construction.

Fearing that Negroes might try to force admission to the school because no other facility is made available to them, the legislators voted yesterday to continue scholarships for Mississippi Negro students to attend Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tenn., a Negro institution.

At the same time the Mississippi House passed on a second reading the constitutional amendment which would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools The amendment is virtually assured of passage. It must be passed on a third reading and, after almost certain Senate approval, would be submitted to the voters in a December 21 referendum.

In two West Virginia counties yesterday parents protested the racial integration of school children.

Picket Line at Rupert.

A picket line was set up at the combined high and elementary school at Rupert in Greenbrier County, where 12 Negroes have been attending classes since the school opened Tuesday. Mothers of some white students in Marion County turned out to protest the admission of 13 Negro students.

Superintendent J. J. Straight of the Marion schools said many of the parents kept their children away from school.

As in many other West Virginia counties, the Board of Education in Marion County ended segregation after the Supreme Court held it to be unconstitutional.

In Greenbrier County, however, the Board of Education gave students their choice of attending white or Negro schools, without action on the question of segregation itself.

Four Negroes are enrolled in Rupert High School and eight in grade school. Rupert Principal E. V. Core said about 20 cars filled with adults drove to the school ground yesterday morning and told the children arriving for school to return home.

Some children did return home, Mr. Core said, but others stayed. The pickets did not try to prevent the Negroes from entering the school, he added.

Georgia Move Planned.

Georgia's new Governor-designate, a protege of Gov. Herman Talmadge, declared yesterday he will campaign for passage of the Talmadge-sponsored "private school" amendment, similar to Mississippi's measure.

Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, nominated Wednesday in a landslide, said he will plug for the amendment as "insurance" to help preserve school segregation. Behind the plan is a proposal to convert public schools to "private" schools if necessary to maintain segregation.

The superintendent of Little Rock, Ark., told a group of Negroes Thursday that "honest studies" of integration will be completed in 30 to 60 days.

Virgil T. Blossom said he will be glad to talk to Negro leaders about the school system's plans after the studies are finished. The Little Rock School Board earlier had been asked by Negroes not to follow a "wait and see" policy of integration but to go ahead and map plans to end segregation immediately.

WHITES 'REVOLT,' END INTEGRATION

School Aides Reverse Ruling in West Virginia County—700 Vote to Oust Negroes

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 14 (UP)—Negro students were banned from white schools by Greenbrier County school officials today after 700 white residents voted to remove bodily any Negroes who attended classes.

Negro parents then voted to keep their children home until "equal school facilities" were provided by the Board of Education, which gave up last night an attempt to end segregation.

Half a dozen schools throughout the county where Negro students enrolled for the first time Sept. 7 were closed until noon today to allow the Negroes to get their books and other equipment.

Twenty-five Negroes who enrolled at White Sulphur Springs High School were ordered to reenroll at Bolling Negro High School at Lewisburg, nine miles from here. Negro pupils of elementary school age were to report to the nearest grade school.

Sheriff James J. Dean, two deputies, two state policemen and two local policemen waited at the school as a few Negro students entered to remove their books. A number of white students and parents congregated near the high school, but principal R. J. Nichols said the situation was "quiet."

At a meeting on the athletic field last night, 700 persons voted to remove bodily any Negroes who tried to attend class today.

Mr. Nichols said "it was our feeling it would be better not to have white students in this morning."

Rescinds Orders

The Board of Education, at an emergency meeting, rescinded earlier directives allowing Negroes to enroll at schools closest to their homes. The school board said its action was based on the fact that "crowded conditions" existed in white schools while the Negro schools were "adequately staffed and supplied to accommodate the needs of Negro students."

In addition to the Negroes who enrolled at the high school, about fifteen others had registered at Rupert and Creighton High Schools and a few elementary schools.

of retaining segregation.

The resolution passed by the House last week, now needs only two routine readings for final adoption. It then will go before the voters for ratification in a special election Dec. 21.

The resolution provides that the Legislature can abolish public schools state-wide by two-thirds vote or permit local option by a simple majority.

Senator Willis Matthews of Magee, chairman of the Constitution Committee, said the abolition proposal was only a safeguard of "last resort." He said the state would try several other means of endorsing segregation first, including organizations of white people to put "great economic strain on the Negro race" to keep segregation.

Whites, Mr. Matthews said, should dismiss Negro employes and merchants and bankers should refuse credit if attempts were made at integration as decreed by the Supreme Court. Under this economic pressure, he said, "I believe the Negro would be humble."

Citizens councils already are being organized throughout the state to enforce segregation, and economic pressure is one of the methods proposed for use.

Rezoning Plan Worked Out

HILLSBORO, Ohio, Sept. 14 (UP)—A school rezoning plan worked out by the Board of Education promised today to ease the segregation issue in this community.

The plan puts about 90 per cent of the Negro elementary pupils in town in the Lincoln School District. Lincoln had been used entirely for Negro children prior to this year.

The remaining 10 per cent in the lower grades will attend Washington and Webster Schools, previously used entirely for white pupils. No white children will be assigned to Lincoln school.

The local board had voted to desegregate its schools even before the United States Supreme Court ruled last spring that segregation was illegal. The board had a two-year expansion and integration program in mind, but learned elements of the Negro population did not want to wait that long.

Arkansas City Ends Curbs

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Sept. 14 (AP)—Whites and Negroes attended classes together without incident here today. The racial bars at Fayetteville High School were dropped last Friday when five Negro girls enrolled in the sophomore class. A Negro boy and another girl enrolled as juniors with the opening of class work today.

A small school district at Charleston, Ark., east of Fort Smith, admitted Negroes to its previously all-white schools on Aug. 23.

However, Fayetteville is the first city of any size in the old Confederate South to abandon racial segregation in schools. The step stirred little interest among the public here.

There was no organized opposition to the decision of the school board to integrate the system. School Superintendent Wayne White explained that, "we don't have a large Negro population, and thus the city doesn't have the 'Negro problem' as it is envisioned in other southern cities."

Only about 400 of Fayetteville's 20,000 residents are Negroes. The total enrollment in the combined elementary and junior high school operated here for Negroes is sixty-four pupils.

W. Va. Test Fails to End School Bias

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 14 (UP).—Negro students were banned from white schools by Greenbrier County school officials today after 700 white residents voted to remove bodily any Negroes who attended classes.

Negro parents then voted to keep their children home until "equal school facilities" are provided by the Board of Education, which gave up last night an attempt to end segregation.

Half a dozen schools throughout the county where Negro students enrolled for the first time Sept. 7 were closed until noon today to allow the Negroes to get their books and other equipment.

Told to Re-enroll

Twenty-five Negroes who enrolled at White Sulphur Springs High School were ordered to reenroll at Bolling Negro High School at Lewisburg, nine miles from here. Negro pupils of elementary school age were to report to the nearest grade school.

Sheriff James J. Dean, two deputies, two state policemen and two local policemen waited at the school as a few Negro students entered to remove their books. A number of white students and parents congregated near the high school, but principal R. J. Nichols said the situation was "quiet."

Hoodlums Blamed In Racial Flare-up

School Resumes Segregation, But Negroes May Shun Old High

By PHIL HARSHAM
Courier-Journal Staff Writer

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Sept. 14.—One of the South's first attempts to gradually implement the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling for public schools fizzled out here this afternoon.

But hoodlums, not students, were generally blamed.

A majority of students at White Sulphur Springs High School, where a Kentuckian, Robert J. Nickell, is principal, resumed classes on a segregated basis.

May Not Obey

The school's 25 Negro students, who until yesterday had attended nonsegregated classes without incident, were told by the Greenbrier County School Board to return to their former classrooms in the County-seat town of Lewisburg, 10 miles away.

There was no indication, however, that the Negroes would obey. Negro students said they had no intention of returning to Lewisburg's Bolling High School, which they attended last year. Their parents backed them up.

Negro parents, meeting this morning at the Rodjune colored grade school, took the position that their children would attend White Sulphur Springs High and White Sulphur Springs graded schools with white children or not attend school at all.

N.A.A.C.P. Urges Compliance

At a meeting tonight, however, two representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People advised the parents to send their children back to Lewisburg so they would not be deprived of schooling entirely.

The N.A.A.C.P. representatives were T. G. Nutter, Charleston, president of the West Virginia N.A.A.C.P., and Willard A. Brown, head of the Charleston chapter. They said they came to White Sulphur Springs at the request of Walter White, National N.A.A.C.P. president.

Advise Against Suit

Nutter and Brown told the gathering at the Negro Baptist Church that they didn't think it proper to file a suit in the controversy in view of pending Supreme Court hearings on the desegregation ruling.

White Sulphur Springs has no high school for Negroes. It has the one colored elementary school, where 53 children are now enrolled. Negroes insist that Lewisburg's Bolling High School does not have facilities nearly equal to those at the high school here.

"We may have to stay out of school a couple of years," said one Negro student, "but it'll be worth it to win this fight."

Had Seemed Peaceful

A seemingly peaceful atmosphere had hung over this scenic mountain-resort town of 3,000 until yesterday. White Sulphur Springs High opened last Wednesday and the 25 Negro students took their seats beside white students with no apparent conflict.

The two races continued to attend classes through Friday. The school staged its first football game of the season Friday night with a few Negro players sitting on the bench.

Report They Were Mobbed

Two Negro players, Ardolph "Jingles" Logwood and Lankston Rose, both 17-year-old sophomores who transferred here from Bolling High, walked home together after the game.

They said they were "mobbed" on the street by "about 25 white boys" who beat and cursed them and told them to stay away from White Sulphur Springs High.

Most townspeople and students interviewed verified their story in essence, but said the "mob" consisted of not more than 10 white boys.

Constable Howard Long said he investigated the fracas and could find no evidence that the two Negro youths were beaten. "There was just a lot of talk," Long said.

Both factions, white and Negro, said the alleged attackers, with the exception of one, were "town hoodlums and had nothing to do with the school."

The hoodlums bragged about their exploit to high-school students, both factions agreed, and fanned resentment, which erupted into an open demonstration yesterday morning.

The high school was surrounded early yesterday with student pickets carrying anti-Negro placards.

Principal Nickell, formerly superintendent of Greenup County, Kentucky, schools, said about 300 of his 443 students stayed away from classes.

A noisy parade was organized and filed through downtown streets. Some angry parents joined in. Other parents, fearing violence, kept their children at home.

Negroes Stay at Desks

Negro students entered the school and remained at their desks.

"We didn't say a word to them," said young Logwood. "We just ignored them. That hurts them more."

Delegations of parents prevailed upon County Schools Superintendent D. D. Harrah in Lewisburg to end the integration attempt.

The County School Board, an elected body, went into a conference that lasted until 10 last night.

About 800 white citizens of White Sulphur Springs met meanwhile on the high-school football field and, according to reports from men who attended, decided to "drag them (the Negro students) out bodily if the School Board won't give in."

Fears Mob Tactics

The School Board, fearing mob tactics, did give in.

It issued this statement upon adjourning its meeting:

"Recognizing the crowded conditions existing in several of the schools in Greenbrier County and further recognizing that the Bolling High School and other Negro schools as operated during the school term of 1953-54 are adequately staffed and supplied to accommodate the needs of the Negro students during the school term of 1954-55, the Board of Education hereby directs all principals to transfer all tentative enrollments of Negro students to Bolling High School or to their closest Negro elementary school.

"The above policy shall be effective immediately and the above directive rescinds and voids all previous actions of the Board of Education in relation to desegregation."

Both Negroes and whites interviewed, including some school officials, told The Courier-Journal that no Greenbrier County school is so crowded it cannot accept a share of the county's few Negro students.

Superintendent Harrah could not be reached today. He told reporters yesterday that "the protests are strictly over segregation" and that he had no further comment.

Racial relations in general here are described as good by both white and Negro leaders.

A majority of the town's estimated 700 Negroes, as well as a large portion of the white population, are employed at the Greenbrier, the swank resort hotel owned by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway.

Blames Rashness of Youth

Principal Nickell said the demonstration at White Sulphur Springs High could probably be attributed to some extent to the rashness of youth.

"Some students would strike against Christmas," he said, "if somebody suggested it."

Nickell, a native of South Portsmouth, Ky., is a graduate of Morehead State College and the University of Kentucky. He also studied embalming in Louisville and practiced briefly with the McDaniel Funeral Home there. He came here 12 years ago.

Negro parents, at their meeting this morning, said they were opposed to sending the children to the Negro high school at Lewisburg because:

1. The curriculum is too limited, offering no commercial subjects or foreign languages required by colleges.
2. Bus transportation to the school is so slow it leaves students no time for work at home.
3. Its shop classes teach only manual labor—"how to break rocks and dig ditches."

The parents also want a Negro on the County School Board, they said.

The Negro high school, the only one in the county, had an enrollment of about 140 last year, but enrollment this year slipped to 20.

Demonstrations against integration occurred Wednesday at Rupert, where 14 Negro students are enrolled in the combined elementary and high school. Rupert is about 26 miles from here on U.S. 60. Principal E. V. Core said parents carried anti-Negro signs and picketed the school, but there was no strike there among the 923 students.

Classes Return

Desegregation was to be tried "tentatively" in West Virginia on something of a local-option basis. County school boards were told to set up their own schedules and methods for it. No demonstrations against desegregation have been reported elsewhere.

Students at both the elementary and high schools here returned to classes at 1 p.m. today. Classes were not held this morning, so that Negro students might come to the school for

Segregation: 3—The Legal fight—

South is divided: Four states defy court ruling, four lower bars, nine take wait-and-see stand

BY BEM PRICE, Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25—Four Southern states still flaunt the banner of white supremacy before the U. S. Supreme Court.

They simply say they are going to do their best to maintain their way of life, no matter what the court orders them to do toward ending racial segregation in their schools.

But though the politicians in Georgia, South Carolina, Louisiana and Mississippi are raising Rebel yells, one hard fact stands out:

The South generally is giving calm study to the prospect of ending racial discrimination in the public schools.

Most of the states have adopted a let's-wait-and-see attitude on impending orders by the court on how desegregation should be carried out.

The court held last May 17 that segregation in public schools on the basis of color was unconstitutional. It asked the interested states to return next month with advice on how best to end the 90-year-old practice.

THE COURT RULING directly affected 17 states and the District of Columbia. Each had compulsory segregation laws.

Nine states have indicated they will wait for the court order before doing anything. Four others and the District of Columbia show varying signs of letting down the bars.

The four defiant states are among those in the South with the heaviest Negro population and the most outspoken politicians on the race question.

The Legislature of Mississippi and Georgia have recently voted to amend the states' constitutions so that the public schools could be given or leased to private operators. The theory is that the court can't regulate admission to "private" schools and hence segregation could be maintained. The amendments still must be submitted to the people of the two states.

South Carolina voters approved such a "private school" law last year.

Louisiana has plans to invoke its police powers to maintain the "good morals and general welfare" of its people by keeping white and Negro students apart in the grade schools.

WHILE THESE states have attracted much attention, a state-by-state survey by the Associated Press and the Southern Education Reporting Service indicates the majority are setting to work on a solution.

SERS was set up in Nashville, Tenn., recently with funds from the Ford Foundation to present factual reports on developments in the Southern education field. It is headed by C. A. McKnight, on leave as editor of The Charlotte (N.C.) News.

As a noisemaker on the segregation issue, few states can match Georgia.

Gov. Herman Talmadge has used the Negro as a stump-speaking point of departure for waving the white supremacy banner ever since he has been in politics. Before him his father, the late Gov. Eugene Talmadge, employed the same tactics.

The governor has said Georgia would resist integration to the last.

DURING THE recent campaign for Talmadge's job (he cannot succeed himself), the eight male candidates tried to outshout one another on segregation, each claiming he was best fitted to maintain it.

Some candidates promised to work for amendments to the U. S. Constitution abolishing the Supreme Court or giving the states the exclusive right to regulate school systems.

Another would move all Negroes out of Georgia.

Still another would give all pupils a choice of attending separate or integrated schools. Any student electing the integrated way would be given a psychiatric examination.

While some of the oratory was patently absurd, the fact remains that Georgia has acted to maintain segregated schools. Aside from approving the "private school" amendments, the general assembly has voted to cut off all financial aid to any school admitting members of the opposite race.

WHILE GEORGIA has made most of the fuss, a statewide secret organization known as "Citizens Council" was growing up in Mississippi's 82 counties.

A spokesman for the group—a state legislator—said the councils were composed "of freedom loving Mississippians who believe in separation of the races with liberty for both."

The purpose, he said, is to "anticipate moves by agitators and devise legal means for any problem that may arise." The spokesman added the council will recommend "application of economic pressure to trouble makers," that is, deprive them of jobs.

Annual membership dues in the councils costs $5. Part of the announced aims of the organizations are to maintain white primary elections and to mobilize public opinion against segregation.

While the spokesman denied the councils had any resemblance to the Ku Klux Klan or advocated physical violence, the "secret council" setup bears a strong likeness to a vigilante group.

IN ATLANTA a well known lawyer, who declined quotation by name, said he believed on the basis of the newspaper stories that the councils might run afoul of those sections of Title 18, U. S. Code, which make it illegal to deprive a person of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

The Mississippi Legislature's proposals, along with those enacted in Louisiana, also would permit local school superintendents to assign each individual student to a specific school. They could be assigned on the basis of race.

Lawyers in the South have pointed out two other ways to maintain segregation:

1. School districts could be rigged to assign Negro and white students to certain schools.

2. Where there are now two separate schools, white and Negro, a third could be created which would be integrated. It would be up to the student to select which he would attend.

IN VIEW OF the broadness of the Supreme Court decision, can attempts at evasion stand in federal courts?

John T. Fey, dean of the School of Law at George Washington University here, points out that various Southern states had laws excluding Negroes from voting in primaries. The Supreme Court found that since the primaries were the real elections Negroes could not be barred.

Eventually, there were actions in some states to abolish all laws pertaining to the conduct of primaries. The party became a "private club," but in a Texas case Negroes were excluded from a primary on the "private club" theory and the local party organization was hauled into court. The court said the Negroes should be allowed to participate.

FEY, SPEAKING before the school law conference at Duke University, pointed out various other means of attack on the evasions proposed.

Even if there is no discernable state aid to privately organized public schools, he said, they may be attacked on the theory of performance of a state function.

If state money is used to support private schools, he added, the attack may be directed at the unconstitutional use of public funds, and the creation of private schools could be attacked in suits based on impairment of teacher tenure contracts.

Fey concluded:

"There can be no permanent forestalling of integration in view of the existing decisions. The findings are clear—only the methods and timing are uncertain."

GOV. HUGH WHITE of Mississippi has said he would have no hesitation in invoking police powers to maintain separate schools.

In four Southern states you hear Rebel yells again, this time over the Supreme Court's desegregation order. But in a majority of states, calm study is being given to ending discrimination. This third and final article on an Associated Press segregation survey outlines the legal aspects of the problem.

While the legal wheels are in motion to maintain segregation, White has appealed to the Negroes, who make up about 50 per cent of the state's population, to consider "voluntary" segregation.

He called a meeting shortly after the court decision and presented his plan. Ninety Negro leaders were present. Only one favored it.

Since that meeting, at which White proposed a $115 million building program to wipe out white-Negro school building inequalities, other Negro leaders have cautioned patience.

"There is no problem in Mississippi," said President J. D. Boyd of Utica Institute, a Negro school, "quite as urgent as that of providing adequate buildings for rural Negro children."

Such construction, said Boyd, "would settle 95 per cent of our problems."

BOTH HOUSES of the Louisiana Legislature have passed resolutions condemning the court for a "usurping of power."

The Legislature passed three bills. They invoked police powers to maintain segregation, provided that the State Board of Education should not approve any integrated school and gave school superintendents the right to specify which school a child could attend.

South Carolina removed its section of the constitution making a public school system mandatory last year at the urging of Gov. James F. Byrnes.

Byrnes said this would leave the Legislature free to cope with whatever order the court hands down to end segregation.

FOUR STATES and the District of Columbia, meanwhile, have been moving toward implementation of the court's opinion even though no order has been handed down.

In Baltimore, Md., integration in the public school system, which is independent of the state, is proceeding on all levels this year. The state as a whole is waiting the court order before integrating, but has indicated it will abide by the directions.

Delaware's Gov. J. Caleb Boggs asked the State Board of Education to proceed toward integration, and already nine school districts have carried it out. Wilmington, the capital and largest city, is integrating on the grammar school level. All are moving toward integration in 1955-56.

In West Virginia, Gov. William C. Marland and State School Supt. W. W. Trent gave the counties permission to integrate if they wanted to this year. Six counties have done so. The two with the largest Negro populations are delaying until next year.

IT WAS IN WEST Virginia's Barbour County that the nation's first trouble with integration was encountered. White parents at a mass meeting objected to the move this year so violently police were called. The Barbour County Board of Education subsequently called off the integration move and plans to act next year. One school which opened with integration was forced by white pressure to segregate again.

Missouri is another state with a local option system of ending segregation.

St. Louis and Kansas City between them account for two thirds of the state's Negro school population—43,327 children. Both are beginning integration programs this year, to be completed by next year.

THE DISTRICT of Columbia has 106,000 public school students, some 61 per cent of them Negro. All evening schools for adults have been integrated, 1900 Negro children have been transferred to previously all-white schools. The integration program in the district is to be completed by 1955.

Oklahoma probably is in the most peculiar position of all. While it has maintained separate schools, it has a long history of racial tolerance.

The situation is mostly financial instead of social. The question is not whether to merge the two school systems but how to get it done. Two entirely different tax structures support the white and Negro school systems. School leaders plan to continue segregation this year in order to work out a plan to merge the two school budgets.

NOTHING HAS BEEN said or done in Alabama or Virginia which would close the door on a gradual compliance with whatever decision is submitted by the court.

Tennessee and Kentucky have said they would abide by the court order. In fact, Tennessee is proposing to the court a program of gradual integration on the grammar school level.

The door to compliance with whatever the court decides has been left open in Florida, Texas, North Carolina and Arkansas.

In Texas, the 21-member elected board of education has urged that "the effort to seek satisfactory solution may be accorded, intelligent, sober and dispassionate support."

Florida and North Carolina have set up study committees, primarily to assess the problems involved and not to seek ways of avoiding a decision..

IN ARKANSAS, Education Commissioner Arch W. Ford has said the state would wait and see what the court decides. He said the state board would do nothing to force integration and that he believes the whole problem must be worked out on the local level.

One Arkansas town, Fayetteville, integrated nine Negro students into its white high school this year, though maintaining segregation on the junior high and grammar school level.

The move on the high school level was prompted at least in part by the fact that the town has no Negro high school, and the schools in other areas to which the students had been sent in the past refused to accept them again this year.

Fred Taylor reporting—

Proposal wouldn't abolish public schools, but does provide 'out'

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

The Boutwell committee plan for state constitutional changes to meet the U. S. Supreme Court decision ruling out segregation in the classroom is not intended to abolish public schools.

Neither is it a proposal for any changes in our educational system."

What the plan would do is give parents freedom of choice to send their children to:

All-white schools.

All-Negro schools.

Or to mixed schools.

This was emphasized Saturday in an explanatory statement issued for the six-man legislative interim committee studying the segregation question by its chairman, Jefferson State Sen. Albert Boutwell. This is the first public disclosure by the committee of its recommendations.

TAYLOR

HOWEVER, it was pointed out that the plan does permit the abolition of the state's compulsory public school system. The Alabama Constitution historically has made it mandatory that the state maintain separate schools for white and Negro students.

The Boutwell committee plan outline, which has been presented to Gov. Gordon Persons with the request that he call a special session of the Legislature, definitely is not the committee's final report to the Legislature.

Chairman Boutwell made this clear in his explanatory statement which follows in full:

"An outline of certain proposed changes in the state's constitution and laws dealing with education, which the committee will include in its report to the Legislature, was submitted to the governor for his consideration and suggestions.

"The plan is not intended to be complete or final, but is the first step toward the solution of the problem of how to provide for education in Alabama in a manner suitable and acceptable to its citizens and adapted to local conditions.

"The principal aim of the plan is to provide flexibility and discretionary power in the Legislature, to enable it to deal currently with the changing needs and conditions in education.

"It is not a proposal for immediate or revolutionary changes in our educational system.

"IT IS NOT a plan to abolish public schools. It does, however, recognize the obvious fact that conditions might arise in a particular county or locality, as a result of the Supreme Court's decision, which would make it necessary, in the interest of all concerned, to promote education at one or more levels by some means other than the operation of public schools.

"It would permit public assistance to pupils without necessarily involving public operation of schools, where that course is compelled by unacceptable pressures.

"THE PLAN provides:

"1. Amendments to various sections of the (state) constitution so as to permit the state to discontinue public schools wherever necessary to avoid friction or disorder, and to allow the state and its subdivisions to devote public money to the aid of private education when adequate public facilities are lacking or inadequate, or public operation involves the adoption of coerced policies.

"2. A system permitted a degree of individual choice of the kind of school which parents in any area may desire. If, for any reason, the system of parental choice does not result in an acceptable or workable solution, then the public schools involved may be discontinued and the education of the pupils concerned aided or provided for by individual public assistance.

"The committee's plans would not require the abolition of public schools, but contemplates that particular public schools might be discontinued, if their operation should be found to involve a substantial threat to the maintenance of good will, peace and order.

"The committee is proceeding on the assumption that there are no groups or classes in Alabama who wish to create conditions of tension or disorder, and that the education of our citizens can be peaceably promoted in ways consistent with the basic principle of freedom of choice."

Persons studies plan

GOV. PERSONS, who declared abolition of segregation in the classroom is "unthinkable" when he undertook months ago to prepare Alabama for just such a decision as handed down by the Supreme Court, has refused to be hurried into calling a special session.

He doesn't want to see the public school system abolished—something he is convinced almost inevitably would happen. Permission for such abolition, of course, would be necessary if the Boutwell committee plan was carried out.

Those close to the governor say he feels any legislation would be premature before the high court renders its final ruling in the segregation cases.

This apparently will not be forthcoming for several months, as the tribunal announced during the week it would not hear arguments until Dec. 6 on how to carry out its decision against racial segregation in the public schools. These arguments could extend over several days or weeks.

Gov.-Nominate James E. Folsom, whose inauguration for a second term is set for Jan. 17, is likewise opposed to abolishing the public school system.

Gov. Persons said the Boutwell committee plan recommendations are being "given careful consideration not only by me but by a number of capable lawyers throughout Alabama."

Must decide soon

EARLIER THE GOVERNOR commented: "I have said many times that if I thought a special session of the Legislature would benefit the state, I would not hesitate to call one. I will convene the Legislature only if I feel that genuine good can come from it."

Whatever decision Gov. Persons makes, he is expected to make soon. Members of the present Legislature go out of office Nov. 2—date of the general election—when incoming lawmakers for the next four years will be formally chosen.

It is not likely that Gov. Persons, whose term runs until Jan. 17, would call a special session of the incoming Legislature. Certainly he would not be expected to do this, unless requested to do so by the incoming chief executive.

A special group of the State Bar Assn. has worked with the Boutwell committee in drafting the plan outlined to Gov. Persons.

Serving with Sen. Boutwell on the legislative committee are State Sens. J. Miller Bonner, Wilcox, and Herbert Byars, Hale, and State Reps. Jack Gallalee, Mobile; Ira Pruitt, Sumter, and Bob Kendall, Conecuh.

Members of the bar group working with the legislators are Joseph F. Johnston and J. Kirkman Jackson, both of Birmingham; Mobile's Gessner T. McCorvey, former State Democratic Executive Committee chairman, and former State Sen. Norman Harris, Decatur.

New School Setup Could Come Quickly

Start By Next Year Up To Legislature

BY MARTIN WALDRON

The Boutwell plan to set up a new, two-way school system in Alabama to avoid non-segregation, could be put into effect by the beginning of the next school year.

"It all depends on what the Legislature does," said Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, one of six authors of the plan.

The plan would provide three kids of schools for Alabama—all white, all Negro and some mixed schools.

Parents could choose which they would send their children to.

Lawyers from all sections of the state yesterday were studying the full report made by the Boutwell Committee to determine if i is legal.

Designed to circumvent a decision by the U. S. Supreme Court that school segregation is unconstitutional, the plan was evolved after a year of study by six state lawmakers and four special attorneys.

The plan was sent to Gov. Gordon Persons two weeks ago with a request that he call a special session of the Legislature to deal with it.

But Persons refused to be hurried.

He sent copies of the plan to differtn lawyers over the state, asking their opinion of it.

The plan recommended to the governor does not deal with the state-supported colleges, but Senator Boutwell said his committee had "given considerable study toward a solution of the problems in the colleges."

Among state-supported colleges are the University of Alabama, Auburn, Alabama College and all the state teachers' colleges.

The Alabama school plan is decidely different from the Georgia, South Carolina and Louisiana plans where all public schools would be abolished and private schools set up instead.

Parents of white children who do not want them to go to school with Negroes could send them to all-white private schools supported by the state.

It would work the same way for Negroes wh do not want their children to go to school with whites.

Those parents of both races who prefer non-segregated schools could send them to public schools, also supported by the state.

Senator Boutwell said he was not at liberty to reveal the details of the plan he and the other lawmakers worked out.

"We agreed that I would be spokesman but that I would not make any statements before we had another meeting of the committee," Boutwell said.

Some of the details of the plan were released in Montgomery yesterday.

Setting up of the new school system in Alabama would require a special constitutional amendment, and the elimination of several other constitutional provisions which set up the state's public school system.

One of the changes to the state constitution would read:

"Nothing in this constitution shall be construed as creating or recognizing any right to education or training at public expense."

Apparently, this section was written in hopes of getting around part of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision.

That decision said in part:

"Education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. It is doubtful that any child uay reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education.

"Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which uust be made available to all on equal terms."

The key to whether Alabama's plan would be ruled constitutional probably lies in the phrase; 'where the state has undertaken to provide it.'

Austin Meadows of Huntsville, the newly-nominated state school superintendent, said he had not yet read the Boutwell report.

"I had better wait to see the full report before making any comment on it," he said. "However, I will state that I am going to work with the governor and the Legislature in an effort to work out the best thing for all the people."

Meadows ran for his office on a platform which included continued segregation in the public schools.

Those who worked with Boutwell on the school report were State Sens. J. Miller Bonner of Camden and Herbert Byars of Greensboro and State Reps. Ira Pruett of Livingston, Robert Kendall of Evergreen and Jack Gallalee of Mobile.

This committee was appointed by the lieutenant governor and the speaker of the House of Representatives last September just before the last Legislature adjourned.

The Alabama Bar Assn. later appointed four lawyers to work with the committee.

These men were Joe F. Johnston, Birmingham; Gesner T. McCorvey, Mobile; Kirkman Jackson, Birmingham, and Norman Harris, Decatur.

Folsom Convinced Segregation Can Be Preserved Voluntarily

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

Incoming Gov. James E. Folsom, so his friends say, is convinced school segregation can be preserved on a "voluntary" basis by "co-operation rather than coercion."

Instead of drastic action such as the recently adopted legislative committee report recommending abolition of the public schools, Folsom reportedly prefers a "wait and hope" attitude, risking nothing that might invite immediate extension of the Supreme Court ruling to Alabama.

From the remarks he made Thursday in Jackson, Miss., it seems definite that he will oppose the state-subsidized private school plan suggested by the Senate-House committee headed by Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County.

Without his support in the new Legislature, it's problematical whether the Boutwell program could get through.

School Building Program

Folsom has all but committed himself, on the other hand, to a multi-million-dollar building program for Negro schools, but some of his close advisers doubt that he is willing to go as far as incoming State School Supt. Austin R. Meadows has proposed.

Dr. Meadows wants a 150-million-dollar bond issue to put Negro schools as far as possible on a par with the admittedly superior white classrooms.

The Democratic nominee for superintendent, who served a previous term during Folsom's first administration, has expressed hope that the segregation problem can be "worked out" on the local level if the Negroes are given adequate school facilities.

He has pointed out repeatedly that Alabama is at the bottom of the states in building facilities per pupil, and that tends to pull the state down on the overall ratio in all comparative brackets.

Folsom, in the words of one legislative lieutenant, has taken a less direct approach, epitomized by his comment in Jackson that "we'd love to be included out of the segregation controversy."

Since the Supreme Court decision doesn't apply directly to Alabama since this state isn't involved in the actual litigation, the Folsom spokesman said the nominee is reluctant to take any action that might bring an earlier showdown.

So he may wait it out, the spokesman continued, hoping that a policy of co-operation might lessent the pressure.

Road Building Program

Meanwhile, there is another real and practical consideration, the administration lieutenant pointed out—roadbuilding.

The incoming governor has already spoken for a vast new program of what he calls mailbox routes, and many financial experts figure a bond issue as the logical approach. Some administration sources mention 100 million as a likely amount.

If the voters were asked to approve a 150 million-dollar school program and 100 million for new roads at the same time, the spokesman expressed concern that one or both might be defeated.

Consequently, since the new administration is pitching hard for a road program and treading along a cautious path on segregation, it may well develop that Folsom will take care of his own legislative promises first and defer vote later thought to the school issue.

At any rate, his expected special session soon after he takes office next Jan. 17 likely will include a call for a roadbuilding program as well as the controversial constitutional convention.

State School Revision Asked By Legislators

Lawyers from the four corners of Alabama are studying a new segregation program aimed at replacing public schools with state-subsidized private classes and letting parents decide whether children attend mixed schools.

Details of a series of constitutional amendments recommended recently by a special legislative committee and a similar study group from the Alabama Bar Association were disclosed today by a source close to the legislature.

Sen. Albert Boutwell, chairman of the legislative committee, had announced only that a new segregation plan had been submitted to Gov. Gordon Persons but said details would be withheld.

The governor said he asked attorneys from all sections of the state to study the recommendations before he takes any action. Some members of the legislative committee have appealed to Persons for a special session to consider the segregation problem, but chances appear slight during the remaining three and a half months of the present administration.

Other Changes Asked

Along with abolishing the state's compulsory public school system, the suggested amendments would authorize the legislature to designate school officials and employes as judicial officers to protect them against lawsuit, and to require the state to defend them against court action.

The key amendment would rewrite Section 256 of the state constitution, which contains the historic requirements for a state-supported public school system segregated by race.

If approved by the legislature and ratified by the voters, the amendment would empower the legislature to establish non-state operated private schools financed through "the grant or loan of public funds and the lease, sale or donation of real or personal property."

Broad Authority

The legislature would have authority to "require or impose conditions or procedures deemed necessary to the preservation of peace and order."

Although it would commit the state to a policy of fostering and promoting education, the proposed amendment adds clearly:

'Nothing in this constitution shall be construed as creating or recognizing any right to education or training at public expense."

Parents and guardians, in order to "avoid confusion and disorder," would be given a free choice to send their children to "schools provided for their own race" if they so choose.

Other suggested constitutional changes would eliminate all reference to "public schools" in reference to tax money for education.

Negroes Could Vote

Negroes as well as white voters would be eligible to vote on the amendments if submitted by the legislature, but Negroes normally cast only a comparatively small vote in Alabama.

In another racial development today, the Brewton school board disclosed receipt of a demand from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for immediate action to admit Negroes to white schools in the south Alabama city.

The petition, signed by 19 Negro parents and an NAACP attorney, was similar to a letter received earlier by the city-county school board at Montgomery, where 23 Negroes tried in vain to enter a white school three weeks ago.

Like the Montgomery board, school officials at Brewton took no immediate action on the request.

State, County Pressing Hunt For Dallas School Arsonists

By JOE AZBELL
Advertiser City Editor

SELMA, Ala., Sept. 30—Two Negro schools have been burned by an arsonist in a small community about 10 miles from here in the last nine days.

Investigations are being pressed by the state fire marshal's office and the Dallas county sheriff's department to determine who is the arsonist.

Because the fires were started in the middle of the night, clues are few and far between.

In Selma there are some divided opinions on the matter. Some believe the fire was started by a Negro but others say they don't know why or who started the blaze.

"It's a big mystery why anyone would want to set fire to these schools. The big question is who would stand to gain. And the obvious answer is no one," one prominent Selma man said.

Owned By Negroes

The schools, Central School and Sister Springs School, were ordinary country schoolhouses of frame construction. They were owned by the Negro residents—mostly small farmers and tenant farmers—of the two communities and not by a governmental body.

Only the Central School was insured and the amount of the policy was $1,000, according to State Deputy Fire Marshal Tom Hall.

But he said this insurance policy was taken out by the Central School Community and not by individuals.

While law enforcement officials are attempting to capture the arsonist before he sets fire to any more buildings, some 200 Negro children are feeling the blunt end of his fire setting activity.

Burned out of their school buildings, the parents of the school children had to find other quarters in which the children could attend school.

There is no equipment left—not a single blackboard, no crayons, no wastebaskets, no seasts. The only item of school equipment available from the county and state are schoolbooks.

The parents and teachers of both communities have held two parleys in the last week.

At the Sister Springs School, the parents sent the school trustees to the Dallas county education officials but Principal Wilma Mae Fountain said the trustees reported the officials said they could do nothing until this school term ends.

So the parents and teachers went to the members of a church located across the street from the charred ashes of the school and received permission to hold school in the church.

Last year there were 70 students in the school but only 35 showed up for classes in the rickety old church where pews serve as seats for three full classes. Paper has been tacked to the walls for blackboards and there is considerable commotion when classes are being conducted.

Classes In Farm House

At the Central School, classes started Wednesday in a farm house where two Advertiser representatives almost had an accident when they stepped on some weak planks in the floor of one of the houses and it almost caved in.

In this community, the parents and teachers are in the dark on plans of the Dallas County education officials, Principal Arthur Bettis said.

"We have about 150 students and we are trying to hold on somehow. The parents and teachers rented this old house which is all we could find for $25 a month. I don't know who is going to pay the rent yet," Bettis said.

"We had no equipment so we took planks and put them on bricks and made seats. I'm actually afraid for the safety of these children. This old house isn't safe. The floor slides down in one room, there are no windows, no heat, no lighting. I din't know what we will do if it rains or gets cold," he added.

Bettis said the attitude of the parents and teachers was that the person who set the fire to the school house had committed a crime of the "most deplorable nature" and "no mercy should be shown."

Hardship On Children

When he set the fire, he brought all of this hardship on these children, he declared. "Look for yourself—how can you expect to conduct an orderly class in these conditions—no school could be in worse shape, but if you quit school now, you will never get this children interested and it would be hard to catch up."

Rotten lumber was hanging from an old store building in which two classes were being conducted and the rickety porch was so weak the entire house quivered when two people stood on it.

Inside the old store building, the students were seated on planks and the end of a pasteboard box was nailed to the wall for a blackboard.

Some On The Floor

In the farmhouse a few feet away, the students were trying to keep it clean and get rid of the dust. Elementary school students were lined up around the wall on an old plank and listening to the teacher. Some were sitting on the floor.

"We pray something can be done for these children," one teacher exclaimed, "I may get in trouble talking about it, but it is these children I'm thinking about. We must have some help."

"I don't know who set the fires. The people of this community certainly are against whoever did it. But you can't teach children what they need to learn in these conditions."

Peaceful For Many Years

"The Negroes in this community have lived here peacefully for many years and we want to go on that way. We have tried to do right and we want to keep on doing that way. It was a shock to all of us when these fires broke out," she said.

The Central School was a rambling six room building and the Sister Springs School was a five-room structure. The Sister Springs School burned Sept. 20th.

Deputy Fire Marshall Hall said he found no evidence to bear out reports the building was deliberately burned because of dissatisfaction with Negro school facilities in Dallas county.

Tried To Rouse Negroes

James Williamson, a salesman who was in the vicinity of Central School when the fire broke out early Monday said he tried to rouse some Negro residents in the community to help put out the fire but none would answer the alarm.

In the Central School area, the Negroes said they would have tried "with everything in us" to put out the fire if "we had known about it."

Only one Negro, Etta Martin who lives near the school, said Williamson knocked on her door. "But I was scared because it was a white man and it was about 1 o'clock in the morning and nobody out here with any sense at all is going to answer their door at that time of night."

Williamson said he saw an automobile near the school and that he did not know the tag number. He said he thought its occupants "looked like Negroes but I couldn't be sure."

No Plans Worked Out

Baxter Collins, superintendent of education for Dallas county, said no plans have been worked out by the county board of education on what to do about the two schools.

Dallas county residents said the board is trying to do all it can under the circumstances to meet the needs which are being thrust upon it.

Persons Urged To Order Session On Segregation

Gov. Gordon Persons was urged yesterday to call a special session of the legislature to act on the recommendations made recently by the special legislative committee on segregation.

The legislative council, a group of 12 members of the House and Senate headed by Lt. Gov. James B. Allen, met here yesterday and passed a resolution recommending the special session.

The resolution did not make any mention of the merits of the committee's report. It merely urged the current Legislature to be given the opportunity to take some action regarding this plan.

Should Gov. Persons act upon this recommendation, he would have to call the Legislature within the next 30 days, as the terms of office of all members of the House and Senate expire the day after the general election of Nov. 2.

Not Available

Persons was not available for comment on the council's resolution as he was out of town.

The motion for the resolution was made by Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon county. Members of the council present at the meeting were Lt. Gov. Allen, Sens. E. W. Skidmore and H. B. Larkins; Rep. Edward Morgan, G. L. Oakley, Charles Adams, W. L. Martin Jr. and Engelhardt.

The committee on segregation, headed by state Sen. Albert Boutwell has recommended an amendment be passed which would enable the Legislature to take necessary action "to cope with the incidents as they arise."

This authority of the Legislature would extend even to the abolishment of the public school system in Alabama if necessary.

Reward Asked In Arson Arrest

Gov. Gordon Persons was asked yesterday to offer a reward for the arrest of the person or persons who set fire to two Negro schools in Dallas county during the last 10 days.

Probate Judge George Quarles of Selma made the request yesterday, pointing out state fire marshals had definitely ascertained the blazes were the result of arsonists.

Vernon Merritt, executive secretary to Persons, said no action would be taken on the request until attorneys for the state determined if such a reward could be legally offered by the state.

Abernethy claims segregation in schools can be maintained

REFORM, Ala., Sept. 30—(AP)—Alabama can maintain its segregated schools in spite of the U. S. Supreme Court ruling against separate schools for whites and Negroes, says the Republican candidate for governor.

"I believe that it can be done by proper use of districting authority and by exercise of the police power of the state and the local community," Tom Abernethy said here yesterday. The Talladega editor continues his statewide speaking tour at Greensboro today.

"I AM UNABLE to understand why the present state government does not call a special session of the Legislature for study of these and other avenues," Abernethy declared.

The Republican candidate criticized the Democratic nominee, former Gov. James E. Folsom, for a statement in which Folsom referred to some Negro schools in Alabama as "outhouses and barn."

Abernethy said Folsom provided ammunition for those who are trying "to force complete racial amalgamation."

Folsom, interviewed in Jackson, Miss., also said there would be dangers in turning state public schools over to private individuals, one of the steps urged to maintain segregation.

six-room building was set on fire early Monday morning, and a three-room school about six miles southeast of Selma was burned Sept. 19.

JAMES WILLIAMSON, who lives about 10 miles south of here, told Sheriff W. C. McCain he discovered the latest fire while driving home from work at Montgomery.

The fire had just started, he said, and he had tried to rouse Negro families living nearby but none would respond.

Williamson reported he saw an automobile drive away from the school.

He was quoted by the deputy fire marshal as saying the occuponts "looked like" Negroes, but that he could not be sure."

Fires which leveled two Negro schools said deliberately set

SELMA, Ala., Sept. 29—(AP)—Arson has been determined as the cause of fires which destroyed two Negro schools near here recently, State Deputy Fire Marshal Tom Hall said yesterday.

The fires were touched off by a person or persons unknown, he added, but no evidence has been found to bear out reports the buildings were deliberately burned because of dissatisfaction with Negro school facilities in Dallas County.

He said the Central School, a

Negroes Want Recognition As First-Class Citizens

To the Editor:

An article entitled: "Soul-Searching in the South, Segregation: The Religious Picture," by Dr. Benjamin Mays appeared in your issue of Sept. 19. This article was quite a challenge for the entire country. I highly congratulate the writer for the stand he has taken in behalf of equality and justice for all races and religious groups.

Certainly, every major religious group in the region should accept the ruling of the Supreme Court that "segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional," therefore, un-American. White church leaders should take the lead in promoting Christianity in their race through the practices of extending justice and equality to all races and creeds. Segregation is un-Christian.

I wish the white race could realize that the American Negroes are not desirous of social equality, but they are desirous of equal opportunities to earn their own livelihood. We are not desiring intimacy with the white race, nor are we seeking social companionship. We are seeking to be recognized as first class citizens. There are intelligent, efficient, and qualified Negroes in our race for our companionship and association.

Negroes are entitled to the same educational and governmental opportunities as any other race. The greater the number of educated Negroes there are in our country, the better place it will be to live.

Negroes have helped America to become a great commercial nation. The Southern white people accumulated great wealth by holding Negroes as slaves for many years. It is brutal to even think of depressing a race, consisting of human beings, who are made of flesh and blood as those in any other race. The color of the skin should not make any difference. If the Negro can measure up to the same standard and qualifications as other races for developing civilization, why keep him down? He is entitled to liberty, justice, and the abundant life of freedom and equality of all mankind.

Perhaps the white race will finally learn that we, as Negroes, are saying very definitely today: "After we labor, allow us to sit down upon our own land, and eat in peace the vegetation that our own land has produced. Let us drink from our own gushing streams. Let us build our homes on our green hills and rolling plains. Give us the assurance that our children will have their rightful places in the world. Allow all of the people to share proportionately in the essential things of life. Find a way where all of the normal people will assume their economic burdens of life."

All races should proclaim the gospel of freedom, because it allows all people to develop, if they desire. If freedom is a blessing, share it with all. If it is a human virtue, fear not its growth in the hearts and lives of others. We should all work for world freedom and the emancipation of every person. If it is good for the rich, it is good for the poor. If it is good for management, it is good for labor. If it is good for North America, it is good for South America. If it is good for Europe, it is good for Australia, Asia, Africa and the isles of the sea. If we are to be respected as a world power, we must cleanse our system from racial prejudices, hatred and greed.

We are warned that the truth shall make us free. Today, Negroes are seeking to recognize the truth and worth of every individual, and his developed ability to make a contribution to the American way of life.

5 Ala. cities file petitions

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (ANP)—The Alabama branch NAACP indicated recently that it intends to continue its fight for desegregation in the state's public schools. Five cities have filed desegration petitions through the NAACP against school boards of education.

They are Fairfield, Brewton, Montgomery (state capitol) Roanoke and Anniston. Fair- a larger colored population than white. Meanwhile W. C. Patton, president of the Alabama NAACP who made the announcement, said he expects two other branches to file petitions.

Dr. L. Frazer Banks, superintendent of public schools, threw some light on the subject in a speech before the Birmingham Protestant Ministers' association. He said:

o o o

MOST OF THE cities of fairly good size have the same kind of situation we do. White elementary schools are located near the center of population of white residential areas, and colored elementary schools are near the center of population in colored centers.

"Making separate school districts for each individual school should not make any great shift in school enrollment where there is enough room for all of the children."

In another section, two other organizations are reported working with the NAACP in the matter. They are the Southern Regional council with headquarters in Atlanta: and the Southern Conference Educational fund. The latter has headquarters in New Orleans.

Not Enough Time On Segregation, Governor Asserts

Post-Herald p. 1
Birmingham, Ala.
10-13-54

MONTGOMERY, Oct. 12 (AP)—Gov. Gordon Persons said today he has no intention of calling the present legislature into special session to deal with the school segregation problem.

In a letter to State Rep. Wallace D. Malone of Houston County the governor said he didn't feel there is sufficient time for the present legislature to do the job justice.

Noting that terms of the present members of the legislature expire the day after the general election which falls on Nov. 2, the governor said:

"In other words, it is just three weeks before the members of the present legislature go out of office. It is, therefore, manifestly unfair to expect the present legislature to adopt a workable plan in less than three weeks."

Had Urged Call

Rep. Malone passed along results of a poll he had made showing 85 members of the legislature in favor of a special session as soon as possible. He urged the governor to call the lawmakers into session.

At a news confeence after releasing the text of the letter, Gov. Persons said he would feel no hesitancy at calling a special session "on a day's notice" if convinced that a "workable plan" had been worked out.

And he said he didn't mean to infer that the Boutwell Committee report released several weeks ago was not workable.

Gov. Persons said the committee's recommendations for certain changes in the State Constitution are now being studied by some of Alabama's most able lawyers and they haven't had time to pass judgement on the report.

Immediate Steps Urged

The Legislature's special segration study committee, headed by Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson, recommended that immediate steps be taken to revise the State Constitution.

This group proposes to knock out any reference in the state's school law to a mandatory public school system with separate facilities for whites and Negroes.

Boutwell says this would free the Legislature to take appropriate action to deal with the problem brought on by the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated public schools.

Gov. Persons wrote Malone that he has given careful consideration to the problem posed by the Supreme Court decision on segregation and added:

"You know that many plans have been submitted and all have been greatfully considered and studied. Nevertheless, there is, as yet, no general agreement as to the proper method of solving this problem.

"As a matter of fact, you yourself left with me a proposed amendment to our constitution which in itself was different from that submitted by the special legislative committee."

Takes Issue

The governor took issue with one point in Malone's letter in which the legislator said he felt the present Legislature could "handle the situation a lot better than the next Legislature."

"In the first place," said Gov. Persons, "many able members of the present Legislature have been re-elected by their home folks to again represent them for the next four years.

"In fact, there will be 62 members of the new Legislature who have either been re-elected or who have servd in previous Legislatures. The other members are fresh from the people. They know what the people want and it is unfair for you to insinuate that the new members and the returning members are less interested in solving the problem of segregation than yourself.

"For these reasons, I do not propose to call the present Legislature into special session."

Gov. Persons pointed out that it took 10 months for the Boutwell committee to work out its report and he felt in a matter as complex as this the Legislature should have longer than three weeks to consider it.

...h Abernethy Campaign—

Negro School Bid Laid To Monopoly Politics

GREENVILLE, Sept. 8 (U.P.)—Tom Abernethy charged today that monopoly politics was responsible for current attempts to enroll Negro students in Alabama's white schools. He called for a two-party system to preserve racial segregation.

The GOP gubernatorial candidate said, "We have with our monopoly system of politics looked the gun that is jammed down our throats now."

The objectives of the Legislature, Abernethy said, should be to strengthen state laws against racial mixing and to make it clear that Alabama's state government stands behind segregation.

Abernethy criticized Aubrey Williams Jr., one of the former administrators of the New Deal National Youth Administration, for leading 29 Negro children who attempted to register at a white school in Montgomery.

He said Williams did not speak for a majority of Alabama citizens, "white or black."

"The invasion of that Montgomery school by Aubrey Williams Jr. was, like the U. S. Supreme Court decision against segregation, a direct and positive result of our refusal to be politically free," the Republican candidate said.

"The policies for which Aubrey Williams Jr. stands today have been the policies of the National Democratic Party for more than 20 years. They are repugnant to us all. Yet we have let ourselves be deluded into endorsing them under the name of party loyalty.

"There still is time to rectify the situation," Abernethy said. "It can be done only through the establishment of the two-party system; only by voting free and clean and Southern in Alabama on November 2."

Abernethy, who will oppose Democratic Nominee James E. Folsom in the general election, speaks tomorrow at Luverne and Andaluxia. Friday, he will be at Hartford and Dothan.

Governor Asked To Call Special Session

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 8.—(AP)—A constitutional change to end or alter Alabama's public school system has been recommended by Gov. Gordon Persons, who group of legislators and lawyers, State Senator Albert Boutwell said Wednesday.

The proposal recommends the Governor call a special session of the legislature which would be asked to abolish that section of the state constitution requiring the state to support public schools.

Mr. Boutwell is chairman of a special legislative committee studying the Supreme Court's segregation ruling.

He told the Birmingham Rotary Club the committee "has arrived at what we believe to be a basically sound formula" of maintaining segregation.

The state lawmaker said "if our constitutional provisions for a public school system were removed, it would give the Legislature enough flexibility to meet the situation as it might arise."

Another possibility is to do away partially with the system and give "considerable authority to local school boards" to handle needs of various sections of the state, he added.

...n race for governor—

GOP's Tom Abernathy vows to keep segregation

CAMDEN, Ala., Aug. 27—A vow to preserve racial segregation in Alabama was made by Tom Abernethy, Republican candidate for governor.

"We must face together the problem created by the Supreme Court decision of last May to eliminate racial segregation in our schools, he said.

"We know that was but the first step. It was a decision shamefully of politics and not of law and it was deliberately designed to lay the basis for elimination of all legal racial segregation and to force amalgamation upon us."

HE POINTED OUT THAT the court which rendered the decision was composed of eight Democratic appointees and one Republican appointee.

"But neither major party is now sensitive to the peculiar problems of the South and neither will be, so long as one-party politics prevails.

"That ruling was the final payoff for political cowardice and for our voluntary disfranchisement in national affairs through all these decades.

The question of segregation, he said, must be considered in such a way as to give the lie in advance to those eager for their own false motives to put the "ugly brand of race hatred upon us."

"I SHALL RECOGNIZE without any degree of reservation whatsoever the responsibility of Alabama to all her children, white and black alike.

"Whatever the sacrifices required of us, the doors to opportunity shall be kept open for them.

"But they shall be—today, tomorrow and forever—separate doors."

He declared he believes segregation legally can be maintained through the exercise of the state's police power, through the districting authority of local school boards and municipalities and by other means.

"We'll put the best legal brains in the state to work on the task and somehow, with God's help, we'll find the answer," he concluded.

tinue the fight against vice in Phenix City if elected governor.

Opposes Folsom

Abernethy is opposing the Democratic nominee, ex-Gov. James E. Folsom, in the November general election.

"We must face together the problem created by the Supreme Court decision of last May aimed at doing away with racial segregation in our schools," he said.

"We know that was but the first step. It was a decision shamefully of politics and not of law and it was deliberately designed to lay the basis for elimination of all legal racial segregation and to force amalgamation upon us."

Abernethy said the Supreme Court decision was "pointed directly at the bedroom door and it will get there by and by unless we stand with calm resolution in the way. That's where Alabama must stand."

The publisher complained that neither major political party is now sensitive to the "peculiar problems" of the South and "neither will be so long as one-party politics prevails."

He contended the Supreme Court de-segregation ruling "was the final payoff for political cowardice and for our voluntary disenfranchisement in national affairs through all these decades."

Alabama has strayed from the Democratic fold only once since reconstruction days. That was in 1948 when States Righters put up their own candidates for President and vice president and Alabama gave its electoral votes to them.

In making his vow to fight for segregation, the candidate said:

"And as I preserve it, I shall preserve our schools and hold them together to their appointed and irreplaceable duty.

"I shall recognize without any degree of reservation whatsoever the responsibility of Alabama to all her children, white and black alike.

"Whatever the sacrifices of us, the doors to opportunity shall be kept open for them. But they shall be—today, tomorrow and forever—separate doors."

Abernethy said he believes segregation can be maintained through the exercise of the state's police power, through the districting authority of local school boards and municipalities and by other means which he didn't spell out.

The candidate's schedule calls for speeches tomorrow at Monroeville, Evergreen and Brewton.

Abernethy Hits Court Decision In Segregation

CAMDEN, Ala., Aug. 26 (AP)—Tom Abernethy, first Republican to wage an aggressive campaign for governor of Alabama in years, promised tonight to preserve racial segregation in the state if elected.

Abernethy, a Talladega newspaper publisher and former States Rights elector who bolted the Democratic national ticket in 1948, brought his campaign into the heavily Negro populated black belt section.

He made a similar promise in an earlier speech today at Demopolis. He also pledged to con-

Persons Given Working Over By Abernethy

TUSKEGEE, Oct. 13 (AP)—"Princes of monopoly government who are able to send their children to segregated private schools seem utterly unconcerned with the plight of the millions who will not be able to do so," Tom Abernethy, Republican candidate for governor, said today.

"Refusal to call a special session of the legislature by this administration leaves Alabamians disarmed, helpless and without leadership in their hour of crisis," he

Makes It Worse

"If James Folsom is elected our plight will be worse. His record of association with radical foes of segregation, his suit in 1948 to make States Rights presidential electors vote for Harry Truman and his consistent refusal to take any strong stand in defense of our way of life brand him as not worthy of trust in this vital matter," Abernethy charged.

"The answer is the election November 2 of Tom Abernethy, who will make the calling of a special session on segregation his first order of business" the GOP candidate said in speeches here and at Prattville.

On The Block

Abernethy declared that "the indifference of monopoly to the crisis of the hour has put segregation on the executioner's block, bound and helpless and ready for the axe.

"If we keep drifting with the tide, it is going to be everlastingly too late in a little while," the Talladega weekly newspaper publisher warned.

Alabama Legislative Committee Takes Another Desperate Step

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(ANP)—In the wake of Supreme Court announcement that further arguments on how to carry out its decision against racial segregation in public schools will be heard Dec. 6, a plan to abolish Alabama's compulsory public school system has been recommended by a legislative committee and a group of lawyers.

Persons Silent On Suggestion By Legislators

Committee Urges Alabama Abolish Education System

By BOB INGRAM

Gov. Gordon Persons declined to comment last night whether he would call a special session of the Legislature to abolish Alabama's public schools, but there were indications no such call would be made during the few remaining months of his administration.

The issue came to light yesterday when State Sen. Albert Boutwell told members of a Birmingham civic club the special legislative committee on segregation had recommended to the governor a special session be called to abolish Alabama's public school system.

In an interview at the governor's mansion last night Persons refused to make any predictions concerning the possibility of calling the legislators back to Montgomery.

"All I can say at this time is that I have received the recommendations of the committee," Persons declared, "and as Sen. Boutwell said, the matter is being given careful consideration, not only by me, but by a number of capable lawyers from throughout Alabama."

Had It Several Weeks

"I have had the report for several weeks," he continued, "and I intend to give the attorneys ample time to give it the thorough consideration it deserves."

Persons said he had no idea how long it would take the attorneys to complete their study.

Sen. Boutwell, chairman of the committee which spent almost 10 months in preparing its recommendations, said yesterday the plan recommends the governor call a special session where the legislature would be asked to make a change in the constitution, abolishing the section that requires the state to support public schools.

"We members of the committee feel we have arrived at what we believe to be a basically sound formula of maintaining segregation," Boutwell said.

"If our constitutional provisions for a public school system were removed," the Jefferson county senator said, "it would give the legislature enough flexibility to meet the situation as it might arise."

Another possibility is to do away partially with the system and give "considerable authority to local school boards" to handle needs of various sections of the state, Boutwell said.

Two Recommendations

While Boutwell did not elaborate on the plan submitted to the governor, it was reported from a reliable source that the two chief recommendations were:

1. That the word "public" be stricken from the constitutional school requirements, thus "giving the legislature more latitude." It was conceded this provision could lead to a private school system if the legislature saw fit.

2. That school officials be designated as judicial officers, like county voter registrars are now, in order to make them immune from damage suits.

Boutwell said his committee had made its report with the assistance of a committee from the Alabama Bar Association and on advice from educators. He added the report was not in final form and that it had not been released for publication.

Lengthy Study

Boutwell said rather than take a "go to hell" attitude toward the Supreme Court ruling, the committee had devoted eight to 10 months of study toward a "simple, sensible, rational solution which has a chance to work."

Other members of the committee included Sens. Herbert Byars of Greene and J. Miller Bonner of Wilcox; Reps. Robert Kendall, Conecuh; Jack Gallalee, Mobile and Ira Pruitt, Sumter.

The likelihood of a special session of the legislature appears slim for several reasons, one being the time element.

Unlike the constitutional officers who will leave office on Jan. 17, members of the present Legislature vacate their seats on Nov. 2, the day of the general election.

Folsom Legislature

Therefore any special session after that date would bring together the legislature of the new administration who would be working with outgoing state officials.

Gov. Persons has adopted a "watchful waiting" attitude toward the segregation issue, and has repeatedly refused to make any comment on the issue.

It is apparent he has decided the less noise Alabama makes in this direction, the less attention the state will receive when federal authorities begin the unpleasant task of enforcing the Supreme Court's monumental decision

Two Main Purposes

... summarized the legal purpose of the proposed constitutional amendments as:

"1. To give the Legislature flexibility and freedom of action to deal with problems arising from de-segregation attempts resulting from the Supreme Court's actions.

"2. To give school officials protection by making them judicial officers and furnishing them with legal counsel from the attorney general's office."

Of the three-school plan, the committee said, "considered from the standpoint of the right of free citizens of all races to control their social and personal contacts, relations and environment, the people of Alabama might be willing to concede the right of white and Negro families to send their children to mixed public schools." But, it added, "The arrangement should be acceptable to the community and its taxpayers."

The report said, "Compulsory attendance at a mixed school, inevitably resulting in friction, disorder and bad feeling, is another thing entirely."

No Single Solution

The committee said its main objective "is to assure the recognition by our school authorities of the right of white people, as well as Negro people, to elect to attend schools of their own race; and to make possible the application of tests and standards which must be met before mixed schools can be operated at all for those willing to attend them."

The report said the people of Alabama "will not be coerced" into racial integration. It also pointed out that there is no one solution to the segregation problem but that a combination of solutions is necessary.

The committee recommended amending a section of the State Constitution "so as to eliminate the express prohibition against the operation of mixed schools attended by both races, but at the same time make clear that the state will not undertake to coerce anyone to attend mixed schools against his will and will not be obligated to operate any such mixed schools at all."

Other Proposals

That amendment, one of eight proposed, would eliminate the mandate that the state must provide public schools for those between the ages of 7 and 21.

Another amendment would give the Legislature broad powers in governing the school systems and their financing "so that tax and other revenues can be appropriated to the support and furtherance of education in other ways than by the operation of public schools."

Fairfax Asks Local Option On School Integration

Board Resolution Also Urges State Continue Public Education System

The Board of Fairfax County Supervisors taking its first official notice of the Supreme Court ruling that segregation in public schools is illegal, yesterday urged that "a maximum of local option" be permitted in implementation of integration.

In a resolution approved by six of the seven supervisors with one not voting, the board also urged continuance of the State's system of free public schools. There have been some suggestions that Virginia abandon its public school system as one means of circumventing the court's ruling.

Supervisor C. B. Runyon declined to vote on the resolution, introduced by Ann Wilkins. Runyon said he thought it should be studied further.

The resolution acknowledged the Supreme Court ruling and said the board believes "free public education is one of the cornerstones of our democracy and must be preserved." It also expressed the belief that "conditions which would determine ability to comply with this decision in an orderly manner differ widely in the various localities in the Commonwealth."

It argued that "a maximum of local options should be allowed the various communities in the Commonwealth so as to insure orderly compliance with the Supreme Court's decision."

Amplifying her request for a "maximum of local options," Mrs. Wilkins said she believed local school boards should be given the authority to develop their own formulas for integration in their respective communities.

The board directed that copies of the resolution be sent to Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's Commission on Public Education and to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

The board's action closely followed disclosure that the Woodburn School Parent-Teachers Association had stepped forward as the first school organization in the county to express formal approval of integration.

Dr. Samuel S. Dubin, president of the association, said its membership had approved a resolution accepting integration as "the only law-abiding method at this time." He said a copy would go to Governor Stanley and said the resolution will be submitted to the County Council of Parent-Teachers Associations next Tuesday night with a request for similar action.

According to the resolution, the association recognizes the Supreme Court as the "supreme law of the land." The group, however, contended that the process of integration "would have to proceed at carying speeds throughout the state."

Integration Plan Offered In Alabama

Law Change Would Assign Authority To Avoid Violence

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 21 (AP). — The Interim Legislative Committee on Segregation today recommended changes in Alabama laws to give the legislature power to handle de-segregation attempts and to give school officials judicial powers.

The steps were urged as necessary for the avoidance of "violence, disorder or tension" which might follow de-segregation in Alabama public schools.

The report was mailed to Gov. Gordon Persons, Lieut. Gov. James Allen, candidates for governor and lieutenant governor in the November election, and members of the present and incoming legislatures.

Sen. Albert Boutwell, of Jefferson, committee chairman, termed the report not so drastic as measures adopted or proposed in some southern states.

The Alabama proposals would not abolish the public school system except for possible suspension in localities where unusual tensions exist or arise.

The committee argeed that the people of Alabama will demand:

"(1) Education for all children of the state, and

"(2) No compulsory mixing of races in our schools."

An act to give school boards judicial power, and to have the attorney general's office defend board members in litigation arising from their decisions, would provide a legal basis for local decisions as to which school certain pupils would attend.

Report Says No Big Shift Needed To Ban Integration

BY JANE ALDRIDGE

No revolutionary changes will be needed in the Alabama school system to avoid a mixing of the races in classrooms, believes the special Legislative Interim Committee which has been studying the problem.

Its official report, released today, expresses the unanimous opinion of the six-man committee that there must be no compulsory mingling of races in our schools and also unanimous belief that there is a legal solution to the problem.

The report was mailed simultaneously to Gov. Gordon Persons, Lt. Gov. James Allen, candidates for governor and lieutenant governor in the November election, members of the present and the incoming Legislature and the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House.

It recommends adoption of constitutional amendments to give the Legislature "freedom and flexibility" in dealing with the problem.

And it would give school officials protection by making them "judicial officers" and by furnishing them with legal counsel from the attorney general's office.

Not As Drastic

The report points out that its proposals are not as drastic as those adopted or proposed in some neighboring states.

"The recommendations," it explains, "would give the Legislature power to use itself, or to delegate to local authorities—with which to cope with any problems that may arise.

There is no right under the Constitution of the United States to an education at public expenses," it points out.

The report takes note of the fact that present constitutional provisions "are inflexible in requiring state ownership and operation of public schools as the only method of public promotion of education," and points out this subject, "the entire system and every school in it to the possible impact of the decision of the Supreme Court."

The present provisions, it continues would make impractical the grant of state aid to pupils in private schools in localities where state-operated mixed schools otherwise would be unavoidable.

As a last resort, in communities where the committee proposes that there is threatened discord, power should be delegated by the Legislature to the local school authorities to "discontinue public" schools and instead, grant public aid such as tuition and transportation, directly to the pupils, white and Negro, and enable them to attend private schools where, of course, there would be no compulsory commingling.

Suggests Change

"This could be done without impairment of teachers' tenure, pensions or other rights," the committee believes.

The report also suggests that Section 256 of the State Constitution be amended to eliminate the "express prohibition against operation of mixed schools" but at the same time that it "make clear that the state will not undertake to coerce anyone to attend mixed schools against his will."

Also that the state would not be "obligated to operate any such schools at all."

The amendment would emphasize as the state's basic educational policy the "fostering of education—but only to the extent of the available revenues of the state," and subject to the exercise of "police powers" to assume harmony and good order.

The committee said it believed that within the broad framework of this basic policy the Legislature would be free to provide for public education, or public assistance of pupils in procuring private education "as conditions might justify or require."

But the amendment, the committee makes clear, would not imply abandonment of direct operation of schools by public authority "except in areas where the belligerence of agitators might force consideration of that procedure after every reasonable exercise of discretion and authority to avoid it."

More Authority

The committee recommended changing Sections 137 and 139 of the Constitution to give the Legislature broader authority."

The report also insists on the "freedom of choice" on the part of white parents as well as Negro and declares "the notion that white parents in Alabama could be prosecuted as is now proposed by the governor of Delaware for not compelling attendance of their children in a mixed school would be intolerable or impossible here" .

The committee pointed to the danger of disorder and tension arising over the issue in Alabama and declared "recent outbreaks of violence in border states would be pale reflections of the result of forced mixing in this state. It is imperative that action be taken."

Members of the committee were Sen. Albert Boutwell, chairman; Sen. J. Miller Bonner and Herbert Byars, and House Members Jack C. Gallalee, Robert G. Kendall Jr., and Ira D. Pruitt.

The Alabama Bar Assn. advisory committee which worked with the Interim Committee was headed by Joseph F. Johnston of Birmingham, and included Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile; Kirkman Jackson, Birmingham, and Norman Harris, Decatur.

Negro Parents Split On Ending School Segregation

(Special to the Birmingham World from the Mobile Beacon)

BREWTON — This small South Alabama town remains tense yet without any apparent racial friction as Negro parents split on the matter of ending segregation in the community's public schools.

Considerable attention was focused on this town after a number of Negro parents signed petitions seeking the admission of their children to white schools. This action was initiated by the Brewton Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as part of a general plan to open all schools to all citizens.

When the petition was presented, it now appears that the school board allegedly gave the names of the petitioners to the Brewton Standard, local white weekly which ran a long story giving the names of all signers. Evidently pressure was immediately applied either from a physical or economic source which caused some to withdraw their names and support from the project.

Samson C. Cheatham, youthful NAACP branch president, under whose supervision the petitions had been signed was singled out for a blistering editorial attack by the Mobile Press-Register for allegedly forging the signatures of local persons.

Mr. Cheatham, calmly admitted that he did sign the names of several persons after they had instructed him to do so. He added that other persons actually signed the petition but now appeared afraid to admit it.

The petitions presented to the Escambia County School Board were reportedly signed by Peter A. Hall, prominent Birmingham attorney.

NO HIGH SCHOOL FOR NEGROES

There is no public high school for the community's large Negro population. Negro children are forced to attend the privately owned Southern Normal School, operated by the Dutch Reformed Church Tuition is charged all pupils attending. The Escambia County Training School is located in Atmore, 31 miles away.

One encouraging angle of the local situation is the courage being exhibited by the school children themselves. The members of the senior class of the Southern Normal School, in a letter published by the Brewton Standard, pointed out the fact that there is no high school for Negroes in the City of Brewton and that segregation is unconstitutional and urged both races to keep an open mind on the problem.

CHILDREN'S LETTER

September 27, 1954
Brewton, Alabama

Editor, Brewton Standard
Brewton, Alabama

Dear Editor:

We the undersigned members of a senior class of Brewton, wish to make the following comments concerning the petition and the reaction of the people.

We feel that the people of both races should consider the fact that segregation is unconstitutional and against Christian principles. Until we (both races) are willing to accept this as a reality, race relations will always be one of the major social problems.

In discussing the petition drawn up by the local N. A. C. P., we feel that the city Board of Education should take under consideration that there is no public high school for Negroes in the city of Brewton.

By observation we have concluded that members of both races are dominated by tradition and prejudice; therefore they are unable to see integration as a reality.

For these reason we think that members of both races should think openmindedly on both the Christian and social side before taking any unnecessary actions.

Folsom Target Of Abernethy

REFORM, Ala., Sept. 29 (AP) — Tom Abernethy today accused Gov.-nominate James E. Folsom of providing ammunition for those trying to force "complete racial amalgamation."

The Republican candidate for governor criticized Folsom for saying some Negro schools in Alabama were "outhouses and barns."

"He failed cruelly to recognize the tremendous efforts people of Alabama have made to better educational facilities for all races," the Talladega editor declared.

"A statement such as made by Mr. Folsom in Jackson, Miss., reflects either ignorance of the situation or a willful intent to present the people of Alabama before their foes in a bad light that is wholly undeserved."

Why He Said It

Folsom made the remark in stressing the need of improved schools for Negroes as a means of halting attacks on Alabama's segregated public school system.

The Democratic nominee also warned of dangers in turning Alabama public schools over to private individuals to combat the U.S. Supreme Court integration order. This also brought criticism from Abernethy.

"Contrary to the opinion held by Mr. Folsom," said the Republican candidate, "I believe there is in every Alabama community an overwhelming majority of decent people who could be trusted in this or any other crisis to serve their people with decency and devotion. I am not afraid to trust the people of Alabama."

Abernethy said if he is elected governor segregated schools will be preserved in Alabama.

"I believe that it can be done by proper use of districting, authority and by exercise of the police power of the state and the local community," he asserted.

"I am unable to understand why the present state government does not call a special session of the legislature for study of these and other avenues."

Abernethy spoke here as he continued a statewide speaking tour.

chools big problem—

Jefferson's legislators favor special session on segregation

Members of Jefferson County's legislative delegation favor a special session of the Legislature to devise ways of maintaining segregation in the schools.

But they'd go for such a session only if a "workable" plan is submitted and the meeting of the lawmakers is limited to the segregation question.

State Sen. Albert Boutwell, whose legislative interim committee has submitted a proposal described as "workable," said "our committee has recommended a special session and that's still my position."

Houston County Rep. Wallace Malone, "lame duck" member of the Legislature, reported he had contacted 138 House and Senate members, and that 85 are for a special session. Of these, he said, 65 are House members and 20 are senators. He added that six other members favor a special session if certain qualifications.

GOV. GORDON PERSONS has said the Boutwell committee report is being studied. But he has never said whether he would call an extraordinary session of the lawmakers.

Those close to the governor say he thinks that any legislation on the segregation question would be premature until the U. S. Supreme Court renders a final decision on its ruling last May to do away with racial segregation in the classroom. The governor has made it clear he does not want to see the public school system abolished.

Rep. Larry Dumas, chairman of the outgoing Jefferson delegation, said he would be for a special session "only if a workable plan is ready for consideration and the session would be limited only to consideration of that." He added he doesn't want to go to Montgomery and meet for several weeks.

MEMBERS of the present Legislature go out of office at midnight Nov. 2—date of the general election when a new Legislature will be chosen.

Rep. Paul Meeks, chairman of the incoming Jefferson delegation, said he thought a special session should be limited to the segregation question.

"But I feel that we should have such a special session now and take action so the question could be submitted to the voters for approval or disapproval before the incoming Legislature meets in regular session next May," added

ONE OF THE recommendations contained in the Boutwell report is that a constitutional amendment be submitted to the people to permit abolishing the public school system. It was pointed out this would permit parents to send children to all-white schools, to all-Negro schools or to mixed schools.

Rep. Hugh Kaul, also renominated to serve again in the Legislature, said he favored a special session, if it were limited to consideration of the segregation question.

Outgoing Reps. James B. Morgan and Henry Beatty expressed similar views.

"I would favor a special session only if and when the governor announced a definite plan of action and a majority of House and Senate members agreed to consider only the segregation matter," said Beatty.

Persons Sends Malone Reply To His Petition

Letter Describes Shortage Of Time As Big Objection

By BOB INGRAM

Gov. Gordon Persons yesterday declared emphatically he does not intend to call a special session of the Alabama Legislature to look into the problem of school segregation.

The governor's decision, which came as no surprise, was contained in a letter written to Rep. Wallace Malone of Houston county.

Malone has been the leader of a group which has been clamoring for an extraordinary session of the Legislature. He recently conducted a poll of the members of both houses and later reported to the governor an "overwhelming majority" favored the special session.

Time Element Cited

In declaring he would not call a special session, Gov. Persons volved, pointing out the terms of office of the present members of the Legislature expire on the day following the general election which falls on Nov. 2.

"It is just three weeks before the members of the present legislature go out of office," Persons said. "It is, therefore, manifestly unfair to expect the present legislature to adopt a workable plan in less than three weeks," he added.

In a press conference following release of the letter, Persons said he would feel no hesitancy at calling a special session "on a day's notice" if convinced a "workable plan" had been developed. The governor added he did not mean to infer the report filed by the Boutwell committee several weeks ago was not workable.

He pointed out the Boutwell committee had spent 10 months in making their report and it is now being studied by some of the "most able attorneys in Alabama," but he said they had not had time to pass judgement on it.

In his letter, Persons took issue with a statement made earlier by Malone who had said in a letter to Persons he felt the "present legislature can handle the situation a lot better than the next administration could handle it."

"In the first place," Persons continued, "many able members of the Legislature have been re-elected by their home folks to again represent them for the next four years."

"In fact, there will be 62 members of the new Legislature who have either been re-elected or who have served in previous Legislatures," he said. "The other members are fresh from the people. They know what the people want and it is unfair for you to insinuate the new members and the returning members are less interested in solving the problem of segregation than yourself."

That Ends That

"For these reasons," the letter concluded, "I do not propose to call the present legislature into special session."

Earlier in the letter to the Dothan banker, Persons had said there had been many plans submitted but "nevertheless, there is, as yet, no general agreement as to the proper method of solving this problem."

"As a matter of fact," Persons said, "you, yourself, left with me a proposed amendment to our constitution which in itself was different from that submitted by the special legislative committee."

The special committee, headed by Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson county, recently recommended immediate steps be taken to revise the state constitution.

This committee recommended amendments be passed to knock out any reference in the state's basic law to a mandatory public school system with separate facilities for whites and Negroes. It was also recommended by the committee that a special session be called to study the proposed solution to the school segregation problem.

DISCIPLES APPROVE

NORFOLK, Va. — The Disciples of Christ in Virginia have "commended" the U.S. Supreme Court ruling which made public school segregation unconstitutional.

The Disciples passed a resolution—after two others failed—which said the Virginia Christian Church should "work toward a harmonious solution to the problem that it may work out in a Christian way."

The action came at the denomination's 122nd annual convention here.

IN ABERNETHY BLAST—

Folsom Called 'Friend' Of De-Segregation Move

TUSCALOOSA, Sept. 28 (U.P.)—GOP Gubernatorial Candidate Tom Abernethy said today that James E. Folsom cannot be trusted to preserve racial segregation in Alabama.

Abernethy, Talladega newspaper publisher, said the Democratic's nominee's association with Henry Wallace and Aubrey Williams "is proof enough."

Abernethy accused Wallace and Williams, of Montgomery, of being "two of the nation's most extreme radicals on racial questions."

He recalled, "at the Chicago Democratic National Convention in 1944 Henry Wallace delivered a speech so filled with hatred of the South that it outraged almost all Southerners present. In the face of that, Folsom voted for Wallace for vice president."

Abernethy also recalled, "in 1947 he (Folsom) introduced Wallace for an address delivered at Montgomery."

The GOP nominee said Williams, a chief Roosevelt supporter, was a consistent crusader for an end to segregation and [illegible] of Folsom's principal lieutenants."

Abernethy said Folsom is refusing to take the stand necessary for preservation of racial segregation in Alabama, despite an NAACP move to force admission of Negro children into white schools.

Abernethy repeated his pledge that as governor, he will preserve racial segregation in Alabama "with moderation, with calmness and without one tinge of race hatred or bitterness."

But he added, "this monstrous thing (integration) must not and will not be forced upon us."

ALABAMA GROUP HAS SCHOOL PLAN

Could Be Abolished Where Peace Threatened

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 27 (AP)—The Boutwell committee plan would give Alabama authorities power to discontinue any public school, the operation of which was a threat to "good will, peace and order," its chairman said.

Jefferson County Sen. Albert Boutwell heads the legislative interim committee which submitted recommendations to Gov. Gordon Persons for meeting the US supreme court decision against classroom segregation.

The committee asked the governor to call a special session of the Legislature to consider the proposals. Boutwell said this is not the final committee report.

The committee proposals have been described as giving parents a choice of sending their children to all-white schools, all-Negro schools, or to schools with students of both races.

He explained other features of the recommendations in a statement Saturday.

Would Permit Assistance

Boutwell said the plan would permit "public assistance to pupils without necessarily involving public operations of schools, where that course is compelled by unacceptable pressures."

He added that the plan does permit abolition of the state's compulsory public school system. Historically the state has maintained separate schools for white and Negro students.

"The prinicpal aim of the plan is to provide flexibility and discretionary power in the Legislature," Boutwell said, "to enable it to deal currently with the changing needs and conditions in education.

Permit Individual Choice

"It is not a plan to abolish public schools. It does, however, recognize the obvious fact that conditions might arise in a particular county or locality, as a result of the supreme court's decision, which could make it necessary, in the interest of all concerned, to promote education at one or more levels by some means other than the operation of public schools.

Boutwell said the plan provides constitutional amendments permitting the state to discontinue public schools "wherever necessary to avoid friction or disorder, and to allow the state and its subdivisions to devote public money to the aid of private education when adequate public facilities are lacking or inadequate, or public operation involves the adoption of coerced policies."

The proposed system is planned to permit a degree of individual choice of the kind of school which parents in any area may desire, Boutwell said.

'Peaceful Education'

"If for any reason the system of parental choice does not result in an acceptable or workable solution, then the public shcools involved may be discontinued and the education of the pupils concerned aided or provided for by individual public assistance.

"The committee's plan would not require the abolition of public schools, but contemplates that particular public schools might be discontinued, if their operation should be found to involve a substantial threat to the maintenance of good will, peace and order.

"The committee is proceeding on the assumption that there are no groups or classes in Alabama who wish to create conditions of tension or disorder, and that the education of our citizens can be peacably promoted in ways consistent with the basic principle of freedom of choice."

Petition Is Expected Asking Alabama And Jefferson To De-Segregate Schools

BY MARTIN WALDRON

Requests that Birmingham and Jefferson County school boards de-segregate local schools probably will be made next week by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mrs. Ruby Hurley, regional secretary of the NAACP, said that all other Alabama school systems will get similar requests.

Three school boards—Fairfield Montgomery and Brewton — already have been asked.

The NAACP will ask that the school boards sit down with Negro parents and seek out the best way to integrate whites and Negroes into the same school systems.

If the various school boards refuse to de-segregate, the NAACP will bring suit against them under the U. S. Supreme Court ruling of last Spring.

"But we will not force the issue at this time," said Peter Hall, Negro attorney for the NAACP.

"We are operating on the theory that all school boards will want to obey the law."

Hall said that the NAACP is not "making demands" on the school boards at this time.

of the Supreme Court ruling," he said.

Mrs. Hurley said that most of the requests for de-segregation will be handled on local levels, but will be co-ordinated by the state conference of the NAACP.

Mrs. Hurley said the NAACP has not seen a copy of the Boutwell plan for maintaining segregated schools and did not know whether it would cause a change in NAACP plans.

The Boutwell plan, worked out by six state lawyers, would keep public schools for those who don't object to de-segregation and would provide private schools for those

Alabama groups have 'bold, new plan' for keeping dual schools

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — An Alabama legislative committee and a group of lawyers have now come up with what they call a "bold, new plan" to circumvent the Supreme Court's anti-jim-crow school decision by abolishing the public school system.

The plan would open the way for state-subsidized private schools and strike from the state constitution the historic mandate calling for separate schools for colored and white pupils.

The proposal, in the form of a constitutional amdenment, is the major one of eight proposed changes in Alabama's organic law proposed by the committee and a segregation group of the state bar association to get around the high court ruling.

Governor, Legislators Confer On Segregation

Malone Denies 'Any Petition' On Special Call

Boston Solon Ducks Comment On Number Vowing Action Now

Leaders of the Alabama legislature met with Gov. Gordon Persons for an hour late yesterday afternoon and "discussed everything" of the segregation problem.

Wallace D. Malone of Mobile county and Rep. Sam Engram of Macon county denied reports they had a petition signed by half the state's legislators asking a special session to consider means of preserving segregation in the schools.

Sen. Malone said he had contacted all members of the legislature on the question, but refused to say how many favored the special session.

Merritt's Version

The Associated Press quoted Vernon Merritt, executive secretary to the governor, as saying at Montgomery yesterday that the petition, bearing 75 signatures, had been received by the governor, who had no comment to make on it.

Gov. Persons has said repeatedly he does not intend to call a special session unless he is convinced of constructive action coming out of it.

A segregation study committee created by the 1953 legislature has proposed changes in the state constitution to delete any reference to the requirement the state maintain a public school system with separate schools for white and Negro students.

This would allow the legislature to replace the public school system with private schools leaving it to local authorities to handle the segregation problem as they see fit.

Boutwell Optimistic

Sen. Albert Boutwell of Jefferson county, chairman of the committee, said the proposed constitutional amendments would give the legislature authority to devise a workable program for segregated schools.

The committee also asked Gov. Persons to call a special session to allow immediate action on its recommendations.

Another group of legislators, the Alabama Legislative Council, last week gave its support for an immediate special session to act on the Boutwell committee report.

School Issue Flares Up In Colbert

Group Seeks To Restore Old System

TUSCUMBIA, Sept. 26—A smoldering situation in Colbert County seems about to flare up again.

A petition is being circulated by volunteer workers calling for the return of the educational system to its old form. This would mean the ousting of Commissioner Wade W. Hester and replacing him with J. Troy Bozeman.

When the complete number of signatures has been obtained, the document will be turned over to Sen. Barry L. Cantrell and Rep. Jack Huddleston for possible legislative action. The petition is addressed to them and requests that legislative steps be taken to restore to Colbert County the form of school government similar to that of the other 66 counties of Alabama.

Sometime ago the passage of a legislative act, authored by Sen. A. W. Todd and backed up by Rep. Paul Coburn, abolished the office of superintendent of education and replaced it with a commissioner of education. This threw out of office Mr. Bozeman, elected by the people, and Mr. Hester was subsequently appointed.

Mr. Bozeman, backed by citizens, took the matter to court upon a point of constitutionality. The validity of the law was upheld by Judge Harold Hughston and the Supreme Court backed his decision.

The legislators have issued no statement regarding the recent action.

Folsom says Persons right in not calling Legislature

Gov.-Nominate James E. Folsom declared today he thought Gov. Gordon Persons was "absolutely right" in refusing to call a special session of the present Legislature to consider the school segregation question.

"It's not possible for the Legislature to accomplish anything in three weeks," said Folsom.

Persons, in a letter to Houston County Rep. Wallace Malone, said he had no intention of convening the present legislators because they would not have sufficient time to adopt a workable plan.

Present legislators go out of office the day after the Nov. 2 general election when a new Legislature will be formally chosen. Terms of its members begin Nov. 3.

MALONE, "lame duck" member of the present Legislature, said he had polled senators and representatives and that 85 of them favored a special session to consider ways to meet the U. S. Supreme Court decision knocking out segregation.

Gov. Persons, who said it would be "manifestly unfair to expect the present Legislature to adopt a workable plan in less than three weeks," had declared that abolition of segregation in the classroom is "unthinkable." He emphasized that he would feel no hesitancy at calling a special session "on a day's notice" if he became convinced that a "workable" plan had been drawn up.

A legislative interim committee, headed by Jefferson State Sen. Albert Boutwell, had submitted to the governor a plan described as "workable." A special committee from the State Bar Assn. aided the Boutwell committee in drafting the plan, which included a proposal to submit a constitutional amendment to permit abolition of the state public school system.

Boutwell said this did not mean public schools would be abolished outright, but that the plan's adoption would give parents freedom of choice to send their children to all-white, all-Negro or mixed schools.

Gov. Persons said he did not mean to imply that the Boutwell committee was "unworkable."

MALONE SHARPLY criticized Persons for refusing to call a special session, asserting he was ending his term in "shabby evasion" by not acting to help solve the segregation problem. It was nearly a year ago that the governor, in seeking to prepare Alabamians for just such a decision as handed down by the high court, called for suggestions on how to meet it.

Folsom, in Birmingham to address Alabama Young Democrats, said he was not worried about the possibility of racial violence breaking out in this state during the next four years.

"I WANT to emphasize that Alabama has one of the best records on race relations in the nation," said Folsom. "We're going to build school buildings for both the Ne-

Arkansas Editor Sees Integration Issue In District Courts

By the Associated Press

ATLANTA, Sept. 7.—Harry S. [Ashmore], executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette at Little Rock, said here the United States Supreme Court will permit the segregation cases before it to be settled on local levels.

Ashmore, who addressed the southern co-operative conference on educational administration yesterday, said the University of Southern California "intolerable" [situation] in which district judges could [interpret] the high court's decision as they [saw fit], he added, "is one the Supreme Court will remand the segregation cases back to the district courts.

"Most judges are completely familiar with local situations, [and] could make a decision and could, make it stick. Local school districts have acted in good faith toward a gradual [transition]."

Integration will take longer in some states than others, the editor declared, but the South can live with it if permitted a "gradual transition" in its public schools.

Mr. Ashmore, author of the book, "The Negro And The Schools," spoke at a closed meeting of the educators from 11 Southern States.

Dr. Thurman M. Pierce of George Peabody College, Nashville, Tenn., director of the organization, said the meeting was called to discuss "what's happened in the South today as far as educational trends are concerned."

Speakers on today's concluding program include Richard W. Ervin, attorney general of Florida and Cecil Sims, Nashville attorney and member of the Davison County, Tenn., board of education.

M'CUISTION APPLAUDS JOINT SCHOOL EFFORT

Predicts Easy Segregation If Given Time

LITTLT ROCK, Sept. 22. (AP) —Ed McCuistion, assistant state education commissioner for instructional services, Tuesday said "the end of racial segregation in Arkansas schools will work out better than you think." Mr. McCuistion warned however, that "if we try it out too fast, we may have to give up and start over again."

With better education the primary goal, Mr. McCuistion said, school districts should plan their programs on the basis of what both white and Negro patrons want.

He said demonstration of good will and co-operative planning were encouraging.

Mr. McCuistion, who has talked with more than 3,000 persons at civic club, church and school meetings during the past 90 days, said he had received assurances that the districts will give him data on which to base a brief. He asked the high court last week for additional time to file.

The attorney general said Richard McCulloch Sr. of Forrest City had been assigned by the school districts to assemble data setting forth problems peculiar to the state's eastern counties on the segregation question. East Arkansas has most of the state's Negro population.

Mr. Gentry said East Arkansas school spokesmen want his brief to outline problems and a suggested ordered in a historic ruling in May. Apparently Mr. McCulloch was hired and other decisions made at a meeting Monday night at West Memphis.

He said Mr. McCulloch had informed him he would start work "immediately" on assembling school district information which would be useful in preparing a brief for Arkansas.

ARKANSAS GAINS TIME TO FILE SCHOOL BRIEF

State Attorney General Told Of Nov. 15 Extension

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 22.—Arkansas has been given until Nov. 15 to file a brief with the United States Supreme Court on the school segregation question.

Atty. Gen. Tom Gentry received a wire Tuesday from Supreme Court offices in Washington to that effect. Original deadline set by the court for briefs from the states was Oct. 1.

Mr. Gentry, who was asked last week by the State Board of Education and East Arkansas School Districts to intervene in the case, said the Supreme Court should remand its pending school cases back to the districts involved. He said such action would "give us time to work this thing out with grass roots democracy and it will work out better than you think."

Arkansas Democratic Committee Offers Posts To Negroes

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(ANP)— Negroes in Arkansas are virtually assured of placement on the Democratic State committee within two weeks, a spokesman at the state Democratic convention last week.

The convention adopted a resolution directing the party's state committee to add six persons to its membership. Representatives of the party declared the posts would go to Negroes.

Parents In Ark. File For Integration

LITTLE ROCK,—(ANP) — More than 400 Negro parents in this state filed petitions last week to 14 school boards, asking immediate reorganization of school districts for integration of Negro and white pupils.

The petitions called for the board to "reorganize their schools in accordance with the constitutional principles enunciated by the Supreme Court."

"While filing petitions primarily because of the pupils, the branches do not want it forgotten that the NAACP has made it clear that it expects teacher integration also," said Mrs. L. C. Bates, president, Arkansas State NAACP conference.

Merits and fitness, not race, should be teacher criteria during the integration period, she added.

The petitions expressed a "willingness to meet with school boards and to do what is possible to help a smooth but rapid transition from segregation to integration."

Milford Board Fights Negro Writ

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 18 (AP). — A spokesman for the Milford Board of Education said today the board would seek to stop issuance of the injunction to permit ten Negro pupils to return to the all-white high school.

The spokesman, declining use of his name, said the board would ask Delaware Vice-Chancellor William O. Marvel tomorrow to hold back on the injunction until an appeal can be taken to the Delaware Supreme Court on his ruling that the pupils have the right to attend the school. The board ousted the pupils earlier this month because of a boycott by white pupils.

Mr. Marvel ruled last week that the pupils had the right to attend the school, where 1,562 elementary and high school pupils are enrolled. Tomorrow, he has called for a hearing to receive a request from the Negro pupils' lawyer to issue an order and a writ of injunction to allow the pupils to return to classes.

Meanwhile, the Negro pupils obeyed an order from the State Board of Education and reported for classes at the all-Negro high school at Georgetown, sixteen miles south of here. James Webb, principal of the school, said their enrollment was on a temporary basis.

DELAWARE COURT DEFERS BIAS CRISIS

Grants Stay of Lower Bench Order Until Dec. 13 in School Fight on Negroes

20 RACIAL CASE IS HEARD

State Starts Action to Strip Association for Whites of 10-Month-Old Charter

By MILTON BRACKER
Special to The New York Times.

DOVER, Del., Oct. 22—The Supreme Court of Delaware today in effect deferred for at least eight weeks the crisis over the enrollment of ten Negro students to Milford High School.

In a unanimous decision read by Chief Justice Clarance A. Southerland, the court granted a stay of a lower court order that would have compelled the Milford School Board to re-admit the Negroes at once.

The pupils were dropped from the rolls Sept. 30 as a result of segregationist disturbances. Previously, there had been two full school weeks of integration without incident.

The Supreme Court set Dec. 13 for a hearing on the appeal of the school board against the ruling of Vice Chancellor William Marvel of the Court of Chancery that the Negroes had a "clear legal right" to reinstatement.

In today's decision, handed down after a two-hour re-argument, the court declared:

"It appeared to the Vice Chancellor that the legality of the admission of the instant plaintiffs to the Milford school had been clearly established, and that they therefore had a clear legal right entitling them to immediate relief * * *.

'Questions of Law'

"We are convinced that there are serious questions of law touching the existence of that legal right. This court, we think, should be given sufficient time to examine these questions * * *.

"It is therefore the unanimous opinion of the court that * * * a stay be granted."

The new hearing will come a week after the Supreme Court of the United States opens arguments on the nature of decrees it is to hand down implementing the May 17 decision that doomed segregation in the public schools.

The ten Negroes are temporarily on the rolls of the all-Negro school at Georgetown. Louis L. Redding, attorney for their families, emphasized in court today that this arrangement had been undertaken after strict understanding with the State Board of Education that no legal rights are being waived.

In an entirely separate hearing in Chancery Court here this afternoon the State of Delaware started action to strip the National Association for the Advancement of White People of its charter, granted Dec. 14.

H. Albert Young, Attorney General, declared the group—headed by Bryant W. Bowles—had acted in direct contradiction of its own principles as laid down in the charter. One of these was "to foster, protect and maintain all rights of citizens as guaranteen by the Constitution of the United States of America."

Realty Values Cited

A reference to race relations and real estate in New York City was made during the hearing by Everett Warrington, attorney for the Bowles group. Mr. Warrington cited another of the charter principles, which read:

"* * * to insure stable property values and promote proper relationships among races * * * to protect areas occupied by certain races against encroachment on the part of other races or members of other races, which result in nonstability of real estate in said areas, except to members of one race."

Mr. Warrington commented:

"I lived in New York City for quite a few years and the Negroes lived in Harlem. And I know that if the Negroes came down and lived on Park Avenue, real estate values would certainly drop because all the whites would move out."

Vice Chancellor Marvel gave the organization a week to submit a brief.

Philadelphia Bias Plea

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 22 — The Board of City Trusts asked the Orphans' Court today to dismiss a city petition that seeks to end racial restrictions at Girard College.

In its plea, the board, which administers the 106-year-old school, stood behind a provision in the will of Stephen Girard that only "poor white male orphans between the ages of 6 and 10" be admitted.

Milford Shifts Negro Pupils

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 18.—Ten Negro students barred from Milford High School were taken by bus to an all-Negro school in Georgetown today on the eve of a new move to win them admission to classes with white pupils.

The boys and girls have not attended any classes since last Sept. 30, when they were ousted from the school here after a short and stormy experiment with integration of white and Negro pupils.

All 10th grade pupils, they were admitted to the all-Negro William C. Jason School in Georgetown, 10 miles south of here, where they will remain until the controversy is settled by the courts.

Del. Court Bars Mixing School Before Hearing

DOVER, Del., Oct. 22 (AP)—The Delaware State Supreme Court today granted a stay of a lower court injunction restraining the Milford School Board from barring 10 Negro pupils from the all-white Milford High School.

The stay had been requested by Howard Lynch, counsel for the board, in order to appeal the injunction to the State Supreme Court.

The effect of the stay is to retain the status quo. The ten pupils are currently attending a nearby all-Negro school.

The court gave counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, which had requested the injunction, until Nov. 29 to answer Lynch's briefs due Nov. 15.

The appeal itself will be heard by the high court on Dec. 13.

In its decision, the court stated there are "serious questions of law touching the existence of that legal right (of the Negroes to attend the all-white school) . . . This court should be given sufficient time to examine these questions without disturbing the status quo as it existed upon the filing of the suit."

Referring to the order signed by Vice Chancellor William Marvel on Tuesday, the court said "it appeared to the vice chancellor that the legality of the admission (of the Negroes to the Milford school) . . . had been clearly established and that they therefore had a clear legal right entitling them to immediate relief."

The three-man court said, however, that "from arguments of counsel and such examination of the briefs as we have been able to make during recess . . . we are convinced that there are serious questions of law touching the existence of that legal right."

Lynch argued that the state was "jumping the gun" and advocated waiting until the U. S. Supreme Court suggests how the integration —which the high court itself ordered—should be carried out.

School Case Before Court In Delaware

GEORGETOWN, Del. —(AP)— State Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young asked the Court of Chancery Tuesday to return 11 expelled Negroes to the all-White Milford High School and promised that Delaware will preserve law and order.

Young, in an appeal before Vice Chancellor William Marvel, asserted that a court order readmitting the Negroes "will arm" Delaware officials "with the kind of decree where we can get those people who are trying to destroy our community and destroy our laws."

The attorney general emphasized that he was speaking as the chief legal officer of Delaware in backing the demand for a temporary injunction by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

What's more, Young said, he has the "wholehearted support" of Gov. J. Caleb Boggs and Delaware's two United States senators — Republican John J. Williams and Democrat J. Allen Frear.

Young added that if the court orders the Negroes back to classes in the Milford High School "the governor of the state and our United States senators will "if it becomes necessary" lead these Negro students "by the hand into that school."

Marvel, warning some 200 persons who crowded into the small courtroom that he would tolerate no disturbance, reserved decision. He declined to say when he will act.

The issue of segregation vs. integration has created an atmosphere of tension throughout southern Delaware — and local officials have exprssed fears of violence.

Segregation Issue Spices Delaware Race

By the Associated Press.

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 23.—Delaware's election picture is clouded by the controversy over school integration—though this question is not an open issue between the two major parties.

"It's the only thing people are talking about," one of the candidates said.

Politicians said the fight over public school segregation of Negro and white pupils has practically blotted out all the usual areas of debate between Republicans and Democrats. By agreement, opposing candidates don't discuss it in their campaigning.

10 Negroes Dropped.

Most observers feel the situation probably is hurting the Republicans, solely because the state has a GOP administration. "If we were in office now," a Democrat said, "it would be bouncing on us."

A white high school in Milford is the storm center.

In conformity with a U.S. Supreme Court ruling earlier this year, integration began there Sept. 7 with the admission of 10 Negro students. But pressures began mounting, a new school board was installed, and the 10 were dropped from the rolls.

Chancery Court ruled Oct. 14 that the Negroes have "a clear right" to be reinstated. The Milford school board has appealed this ruling to the Delaware Supreme Court which set a hearing for tomorrow.

All of which is outside the areas where the two parties are contending for a seat in the U.S. Senate and one in the House of Representatives. The candidates:

For the Senate—Sen. J. Allen Frear, Democrat, and Rep. Herbert B. Warburton, Republican. For the House: Mrs. Lillian I. Martin, Republican, chief accountant of the budget commission, and Harris B. McDowell Jr., former Democratic state chairman.

Frear Has Edge.

At this point, election analysts give Sen. Frear an edge in a tight race. They see Mrs. Martin leading McDowell. The GOP state chairman, Clair Killoran, said "if it hadn't been for this segregation fight we would have had a Republican landslide."

Now, however, some Republicans are by no means optimistic. But they are encouraged by the thought that the party has not lost an "off year" election in Delaware in 32 years.

Delaware High Court To Conduct Hearing On Integration Row

By the Associated Press

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 20. —Delaware's explosive segregation dispute, involving the integration of 10 Negro high school students at the previously all-white school at Milford, rested today in the hands of three members of the State's Supreme Court.

An appeal was taken to the State's high court yesterday from Vice Chancellor William Marvel's order granting a temporary injunction to permit attendance by the Negro pupils with the 1,562 white students in the Southern Delaware combined elementary-high school.

Howard E. Lynch, counsel for the Milford School Board, said the State Supreme Court would conduct a hearing Friday morning. If it upholds the injunction, the Negro pupils could return to the Milford school Monday.

However, if the court grants a delay, the issue will then hinge on arguments, for a permanent injunction now pending before the court of chancery.

The injunction was requested last week by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Mr. Marvel then ruled the Negro pupils had a right to attend the Milford school under provisions of a United States Supreme Court ruling, but delayed issuing the temporary injunction until yesterday to allow the Milford board time to file exceptions.

The pupils were integrated at the beginning of the present school term. But segregationists began a boycott of the school, cutting attendance to a third of normal. The Milford board then ousted the Negro pupils.

They then went to an all-Negro high school in Georgetown under orders from the State Board of Education.

Milford Fights School Order

Special to The Inquirer

MILFORD, Del., Oct. 19.—Milford's recently reorganized school board asked the Delaware Supreme Court today to prevent Vice Chancellor William Marvel from enforcing his order directing the readmission of 10 Negro children to the all-white Milford High School, from which they had been barred last month because of their color.

The board's attorney, Howard E. Lynch, said the high court had set Friday at 10:30 A. M. in Dover as the time and place for a hearing on the board's request.

ORDER EFFECTIVE OCT. 22

The chancellor, acting at the request of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and on the basis of an opinion he handed down last week, had directed his order to the school board earlier today, but left the way open for it to appeal, as it did this afternoon.

In any event, the 10 Negro pupils would not return to the Milford school before next Monday. Chancellor Marvel made his order effective at midnight Friday, Oct. 22.

WILL SEEK STAY

Lynch indicated he would appear before a Justice of the State Supreme Court before that deadline to appeal for a stay of the order. The stay, if granted, would remain in force until the three-man Supreme Court heard arguments on the issue.

Marvel issued his order at the request of Louis L. Redding, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP had brought suit against the Milford board on behalf of the 10 Negro children.

The 10 are now attending an all-Negro high school in Georgetown, 16 miles south of Milford. They had attended the Milford school for about 10 days, in a short experiment in integration of white and Negro pupils which ended Sept. 30 amid threats of violence and disorder.

The anti-integration drive had been led by Bryant W. Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, now free in bail on charges of conspiring to violate Delaware's school attendance laws. The State has also moved to revoke the charter of his organization.

ACLU INVESTIGATING

In Philadelphia, officials of the American Civil Liberties Union announced they were investigating proceedings against Bowles to determine whether his civil rights had been infringed.

Alexander H. Frey, professor of law at the University of Pennsylvania and president of the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the ACLU, also said his organization plans to take court action supporting the right of Negro children to attend previously all-white schools in Milford.

"There is no contradiction in our interest in Bowles' rights to freedom of speech and in the children's right to education in an integrated school," Frey said.

RIGHTS ARE UPHELD

"ACLU is bitterly opposed to Bowles' racist views. We have long fought against segregation. However repugnant to us Bowles' opinions and those of his organization may be, we think he has the right to propound these views in accordance with the American tradition of free speech.

"Newspaper reports of Bowles' arrest and of efforts to revoke the NAAWP charter suggest that the Delaware authorities, in their zeal to counteract Bowles' disruptive efforts, may have exceeded their constitutional authority. We are now trying to determine if this is so."

Bowles and his organization were accused by Attorney General H. Albert Young, of Delaware, of inciting to violence in their drive to prevent integration of white and Negro pupils in public schools.

Delaware Bars Re-Entry Of 10 Negro Students

DOVER, Del. — (INS) — The Delaware State Supreme Court Friday barred the immediate re-admission of 10 Negro students to the Milford High School by ordering

Pending the hearings, the Negro students will continue to attend a segregated school in Georgetown, 16 miles north of Milford.

Chief Justice Clarence Southerland, in granting a request for a delay by the Board, set Dec. 13 for the further hearings.

Justice Southerland said:

"We are convinced that there are serious questions touching the existence of their (the students') legal rights. This court, we think, should be given sufficient time to examine these questions without disturbing the status quo ....."

An attorney for the Board had urged postponement of integration hearings in the case. The Milford School Board had been ordered by the State Court of Chancery to re-enroll the students who were ousted from the all-white school following pro-segregation demonstrations.

Delaware High Court Won't Lift School Ban

By FRANK H. WEIR
Inquirer Staff Reporter

DOVER, Del., Oct. 22.—The Delaware Supreme Court today refused to order readmission of 10 Negro pupils to the Milford High School until the U. S. Supreme Court announces its procedure for integration of white and Negro pupils in public school classrooms.

At issue before the court was an appeal of the Milford School Board from a decision of Vice Chancellor William Marvel which would have reopened the doors of the high school to the Negro pupils Monday morning. This week, the 10 children, ordered out of the school after demonstrations by adults and a pupils' boycott, were enrolled in a Georgetown Negro school.

ARGUMENTS DEC. 13

The three-man court announced that arguments in the case would be heard Dec. 13, about a week after the U. S. Supreme Court is expected to start framing its plan for integration.

At the customary court pace, this might mean that the issue would not be resolved until sometime in the spring and that integration, if it is ordered, would not be accomplished until the next school year.

The court said that its delay "neither expresses nor intimates any opinion upon the merits of the case." It added that "we are convinced that there are serious questions of law touching the existence of the legal rights" of the 10 Negro children to attend the Milford school.

CHARTER END ASKED

At the same time Attorney General H. Albert Young was in Chancery Court here making his first move to revoke the charter of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, one of the militant factions in the fight to prevent Negro children from attending school with whites.

Marvel instructed counsel for both sides to submit briefs Oct. 29 and took the case under advisement.

In the Supreme Court action, Louis L. Redding, Wilmington attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, asked the court not to "yield to lawless elements" that would "deprive persons of their Constitutional rights."

Redding informed the court that the transfer was the "result of negotiations between the State Board of Education and myself, with the understanding that by going there the pupils do not waive any of their rights to be admitted to the Milford school."

LEGAL STATUS DENIED

An opposite view was held by Howard Lynch, attorney for the Milford School Board, who said that with the transfer the 10 pupils "have no legal status as pupils of the Milford school."

Lynch declared that the integration "problem," though starting in Milford, had become Statewide and called for a "careful study and a well defined educational plan; as yet, the State Board of Education has not come up with such a plan."

Later, Young, target of the NAAWP, went before Vice Chancellor Marvel in the initial move to bar the group from acting in Delaware.

Bryant W. Bowles, national president of NAAWP, was represented by two attorneys, Everett Warrington and Jack Layton, Jr. Affidavits have been filed by Bowles, Joseph M. Danes, of Hartly, Delaware chapter president, and Mrs. Mildred Sharp, of Lynch Heights, secretary.

Young charges the NAAWP with inciting to violence, conspiring to violate the State school attendance law and promoting racial hatred.

Ousted Milford Pupils Are Sent Back to Negro School Until Controversy Is Over

Melford, Del.—Ten Negro pupils, ousted from Milford's all-white high school, Monday obeyed an order from the Delaware state board of education and reported for classes at the all-Negro high school at Georgetown 16 miles south of here.

The state board Sunday had ordered them to the William C. Jason school and arranged for transportation. James Webb, principal of the school, said their enrollment was only on a temporary basis.

He said they will go there only until the controversy over attending the all-white school here is settled in the courts.

Away From Classes

The pupils have not attended classes since early this month, when their enrollment at the Lakeview Avenue school here was canceled because about 70 per cent of its 1,562 white pupils boycotted the school.

Meanwhile, Vice-chancellor William Marvel will hold a hearing Tuesday in Wilmington on a request by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for an injunction to restrain the Milford school board from keeping the 10 students out of the high school.

Marvel already has ruled that the Negroes have the right to attend the Milford school, but has not issued an injunction.

Instruct Police

Meanwhile, the Milford board asked Mayor Edward C. Evans to instruct police to arrest any persons who assemble in front of the all-white school. Small groups were in front of the school on the days the school was boycotted.

Bryant Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, told a mass meeting of 3,000 persons Sunday at a nearby Harrington airport to "let your conscience be your guide" in deciding whether to keep white children out of school if the Negroes should return to the Milford school.

Integration Tops Delaware Issues

Special to The Inquirer

DOVER, Del., Oct. 30.—Integration of white and Negro pupils in the public schools of Delaware is the chief—and silent—issue of the election campaign in this State.

It is an issue, brought to a head late in the campaign, which accounts for unexpected Democratic optimism and which may cost Republicans their first off-year victory since 1922.

Candidates of both parties have tried to ignore the issue. On the other hand, members of the newly organized Delaware Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of White People have tried to pin down office seekers on their integration views.

FIRE FROM BOTH SIDES

Republican candidates have been under fire from both sides. In the southern counties of Kent and Sussex they have been criticized for the move that was made in Milford to admit Negro pupils to the local high school. The plan has been dropped temporarily.

In the northern county of New Castle, Republicans have been blamed for failing to take a stronger stand against the anti-integrationists in Milford.

BLAME REPUBLICANS

Generally speaking, voters who oppose integration blame the Republican Party for the whole thing, since it was under a Republican national administration that the U. S. Supreme Court last May outlawed segregation of races in public schools.

As a result of the racial issue, Sen. J. Allen Frear, Jr., is conceded a good chance of re-election. When the campaign first started, it was assumed that Frear would be defeated by Rep. Herbert B. Warburton, his Republican opponent.

Integration Foe Jailed

DOVER, Del.—(AP)—Bryant Bowles, head of the National Association for the advancement of White People, was jailed here Wednesday in default of $1,000 property bond on a fugitive from justice warrant from police in Memphis, Tenn.

The warrant, charging him with passing a worthless check on an NAAWP account, was handed to Bowles on completion of a court of common pleas arraignment.

Bowles's friends here were trying to locate Kent county property owners to sign over $1,000 worth of real estate as bond.

The arraignment, before Judge Arlee B. Magee, was on two charges of conspiracy to violate the school laws of Delaware. Bowles pleaded innocent and a hearing was set for 10 a.m. on Nov. 29.

May 17 Edict Wins Test In Delaware

MILFORD, Del. — Vice Chancellor William Marvel ruled last Friday that the 10 Negro children involved in the decision of the Milford school board barring them from attending the high school here have a "clear legal right" to attend the school.

The decision came two days after the hearing in Georgetown, Dela. Louis L. Redding, an attorney for the NAACP which is representing the children said they will probably be in school by the middle of this week.

The Milford school board has a right to file exception to the case but it was expected that it would not contest the decision.

Meanwhile, Bryant Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People told reporters that when the Negro children walk in the white children will walk out.

And at Georgetown, Delaware's two senators steered clear of the state's school segregation dispute last week

Their comments followed a declaration in the Chancery court by Attorney General H. Albert Young that they would lead Negro children into the Milford high school "by the hand, if necessary," should the courts uphold the integration of white and Negro pupils.

Meanwhile, Bryant Bowles, who is out on bond pending trial for inciting a riot, was busy continuing his public meetings haranguing the people to stand firm until the "sweet end."

At a rally at Harrington airport where a reported 5,000 whites gathered, Bowles called for a vote on whether to admit Negroes who could prove their sincerity and their belief in segregation to future meetings on a jim crow basis.

Shame in Delaware

TO the N. Y. Herald Tribune:

We in Delaware are becoming known throughout the United States of America for our spirit of revolt against the law imposing desegregation of the colored peoples.

To our shame, that is the shame of the colored people and the shame of the white people, innocent children of both races are now embroiled in this bitter strife. These children whose very souls are being twisted by this cruelty are the human element which was left out of the controversy.

"The law," said Berdyaev, a great Christian philosopher, "may compel men to be just, but it cannot compel them to be brothers. Pity, mercy, love . . . these are works of grace in freedom, and not works of a compelling law."

Whether segregation or desegregation is right, two factors are now in existence, the one growing from the other. Desegregation is now the law of our land. It rests with both races whether patience and brotherhood will preserve freedom. "All violence," Albert Schweitzer has written, "contains within itself its own limitations."

In these pathetic and angry scenes around our schools, the seeds of hate and fear are being implanted in the hearts of our children. These words will not be mocked, "Whoever causes one of these little ones who believe in me to sin, it would be better for him to have a great millstone fastened round his neck and to be drowned in the depths of the sea."

Let us humbly think of the colored child walking timidly to school, and of the white child bewildered as to his loyalties. To think humbly and with a deep sense of responsibility about these children is the law of reverence for life, as Albert Schweitzer envisioned it within the equatorial jungles of Africa where he is giving his life in reverent service as a doctor to humanity.

Deleware Solons Back Re-Entry Of Negro Pupils

By James L. Hicks

GEORGETOWN, DELAWARE: The Attorney General of Delaware Tuesday begged a Chancery Court Judge to readmit ten collored students to an all white school and declared that if he did so, the Govenor of the State, it's two U. S. Senators and "myself stand ready to take them by the hand and lead them back into the school."

The dramatic plea came from H. Albert Young, Attorney General of the State of Delaware as Chancery Court Judge William Marvel reserved decision on a motion filed by NAACP attorney Louis L. Redding of Wilmington, asking that ten colored students in Milford be readmitted to the all white Lakeview High School there.

Attorney Redding, assisted by NAACP legal counsel, Jack Greenberg, filed the motion on behalf of the children and their parents.

The students were admitted to the school at the start of the Fall term but were dropped from its rolls after anti-integration demonstrations led by the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

Plea Is Surprise

The impassioned plea by the State's Attorney General on behalf of the ten children came as a distinct surprise to the many of the more than 100 persons who crowded the court room hoping to see segregation upheld and another 150 who milled around the courtyard because they could not get in.

It had been supposed in some circles that the Attorney General himself might defend that state in the action filed by Mr. Redding, but even when it was announced that Harold Lynch, a Milford lawyer, would defend the Board, there were few citizens of Delaware, and certainly none among the NAAWP membership, who felt that the Attorney General would take the part of the colored students against the state. But take their part he did and his argument may go a long way toward influencing the decision of Judge Marvel which is expected any day. Mr. Young dramatically appeared in the courtroom and asked to be heard as "a friend of the court."

Then to the consternation of that they might go to school in Dover if they wished to.

NAAWP Head Late To Hearing

Bryant Bowles, head of the NAAWP, showed up at the courthouse Tuesday morning but arrived too late to get a seat inside and had to content himself with sitting outside the court making snide remarks at Attorney General Young who is seeking to have his organizations charter taken from him.

The crowd was orderly and well behaved both in and out of the courtroom though it was obvious that the case was the talk of the town. Eleven state troopers, six Georgetown policemen and several plain clothesmen were on duty to keep order.

Bowles appeared after the Judge reserved decision in the case but was not able to stir up any demonstration. The whole town apparently assumed a "wait and see attitude."

Late Tuesday night, an NAACP spokesman who had met with the parents of the ten children said it is highly possible that all ten students might unconditionally enroll in the Jim Crow high school at Dover next Monday in an attempt to catch up with their school work.

But the spokesman made it plain that if they enroll, they would not waive any of their rights to return to the Milford school if and when they receive a favorable decision on the motion heard Tuesday.

Bryant Bowles and his NAAWP followers he proceeded to entreat the court to issue an injunction forcing the readmission of the ten colored students.

He told Judge Marvel that the ten children had been legally admitted to the Milford school, that the Milford Board had acted within the law in admitting them, and that they had been expelled from school by "mob rule."

After hammering home the point that it was "mob rule" and nothing else which had forced the students from the school, Mr. Young then begged the court to send them back.

Declaring that it was the 'law of the land" which was at stake in the matter, Mr. Young said "Your Honor, if you issue such a decree it will arm the authorities of his state with a weapon with which they can bring the mobs into court.

Then visibly shaken by anger, Mr. Young added "And if it comes to case of preserving law and order, this state will preserve law and order, and if it becomes necessary, the Governor of this state, its two United States Senators and myself will take these children by the hands and lead them into the school."

Cheers Drown boos

There were some boos from one side of the courtroom as he made this last statement but the boos were drowned in cheers as Judge Marvel gavelled for order in he court, Mr. Young's friend of the court pleas came after Harvard-trained Attornry Redding had presented the court with a brilliant and masterful legal argument for readmission of the students.

He then quoted Delaware statutes which showed that the Milford Board had no authority to transfer the students to another school and that the State Board which might have such a right under the statutes had never, in effect, ordered them transferred.

He argued that the State Board had simply made a bus available to the students and said in effect

Mr. Redding argued that Delaware laws give every student under 21 the right to attend free public schools and that May 17th gives every student the right to attend a school which is not segregated.

School Board Defies Court

MILFORD, Del. — Delaware State's Board of Education has decided to defy a ruling of Delaware's Chancery Court by ordering a resumption of segregation at Milford, thus paving the way for a legal battle.

The school board ordered the transfer of ten Negro pupils to the Jason (Colored) High School at Georgetown in defiance of Vice Chancellor William Marvel who had ruled that Negro pupils have a "clear and convincing" legal right to attend the Milford High School.

Dr. George R. Millard, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, explained the transfer order by stating that state laws permit the board to govern "the admission of pupils from the schools of one district to the schools of another district."

THE NAACP had issued a request for an injunction, whereupon Vice Chancellor Marvel ruled, "I find the plaintiffs' legal rights 'clear and convincing,' that they are entitled to mandatory relief and that any inconvenience or distress to the defendants (the Milford School Board) must give way before the much greater injury which would be inflicted on the plaintiffs by denial of their personal and present rights."

Chancellor Marvel cited the Supreme Court's verdict on school segregation in issuing his ruling.

Milford Integration Delay Is Ordered Pending Ruling

By the Associated Press

DOVER, Del., Oct. 23.—The State Supreme Court acted yesterday to prevent any change in the Milford school situation until it has ruled on legal aspects of the problem. It granted a stay of a lower court injunction restraining the Milford School Board from barring 10 Negro pupils from the all-white Milford High School.

The stay had been requested by Howard Lynch, counsel for the board, in order to appeal the injunction to the State Supreme Court.

Retains Status Quo.

The effect of the stay is to retain the status quo. The 10 pupils now are attending a nearby all-Negro school.

The court gave counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which had requested the injunction, until November 29 to answer Mr. Lynch's briefs due November 15.

The appeal itself will be heard by the high court December 13.

In its decision, the court said there are "serious questions of law touching the existence of that legal right (of the Negroes to attend the all-white school). . . . This court should be given sufficient time to examine these questions without disturbing the status quo as it existed upon the filing of the suit."

Referring to the order signed by Vice Chancellor William Marvel on Tuesday, the court said, "It appeared to the vice chancellor that the legality of the admission (of the Negroes to the Milford school) . . . had been clearly established and that they therefore had a clear legal right entitling them to immediate relief."

The three-man court said, however, that "from arguments of counsel and such examination of the briefs as we have been able to make during recess . . . we are convinced that there are serious questions of law touching the existence of that legal right."

Wants to Delay Action.

Mr. Lynch argued that the State was "jumping the gun" and advocated waiting until the United States Supreme Court suggests how the integration—which the High Court itself ordered—should be carried out.

Louis J. Redding, counsel for the NAACP—which originated the injunction request—argued that the Negro pupils had been legally enrolled according to State law and were being deprived of their right and duty to attend the school in the district in which they lived.

The Negroes were ordered out of the all-white Milford High School three weeks after they were enrolled after threats of violence and intimidation forced the school to close temporarily and the original school board to resign.

How Negro Teachers Face Integration Test

WILMINGTON, Del. — (ANP)— Two Negro teachers—one a high school and the other an elementary teacher—last week related their experience in all-white and integrated classrooms.

The school marms represent a group of teachers who are serving as guinea pigs in this and other Southern communities attempting to put into practice last May's Supreme court mandate banning school segregation.

They are Mrs. Daisy Simms, an elementary teacher in the Wilmington school system and Mrs. Grace Water, who teaches high school history and social studies in Morgantown, W. Va.

Both described their experiences under the integrated system to Kenneth O. Gill, staff correspondent for the National Education Association.

Along with seven other Negro teachers, Mrs. Simms was assigned to teach in an all-white class. But the school principal sought to ease the pressure on her by notifying parents of the children before classes began.

Reaction to the move was mixed but generally accepted. One mother explained her resentment this way:

"Frankly, I was shocked at first, but then I calmed down a bit especially after I was assured Mrs. Simms was an excellent teacher."

A few parents even threatened to withdraw their children. However, so far none has dropped out.

Mrs. Water, on the other hand, related how one student tried to make things miserable for her.

"...During one discussion on imports and exports the words tar and pitch came she explained. "Someone asked me what pitch was and a boy who has been trying to make me feel uncomfortable said with particular emphasis. 'It's something black.'

These things never hurt me," she added. "I don't want the kids in my class to be afraid to discuss anything. We talk about race, marriage, integration and even the word n—r."

No color bar in Del. Catholic schools

WILMINGTON, Del. — There are no barriers against creed or color in Catholic schools, according to a notice sent out by the Most Reverend Edmund J. FitzMaurice, Catholic Bishop of Wilmington.

The announcement was part of a solicitation of funds for a new Salesianum High School.

The Bishop's announcements revealed that out of 20,000 children in Wilmington schools, first to 12th grade, approximately 7,700 are being educated in Catholic schools.

It costs the Wilmington taxpayers $237.50 a year, per pupil in the public school system. Salesianum tuition is $80 per year (unchanged in 52 years).

The Bishop's report says the Catholic system of education is the only system of education in the whole world today that is and ever must be completely anti-communistic.

S. senators—and they have expressed it to me—to lead these Negro children by the hand, after a decree of this sort, into that school, they will do so."

Young referred to the Milford high school, from which 11 Negro pupils were barred by a newly appointed school board. The court has subsequently ordered the school to readmit Negroes.

Williams said this was a "defiant statement." He said he joined "every Delawarean in resenting the influence behind the attorney general's remarks.

Delaware Senator Denies Statement Of Atty. General

WILMINGTON, Del. (ANP) —U. S. Sen. John J. Williams (R., Del.) wasted no time last week in publicly expressing resentment at a statement that he is prepared to "lead Negro children by the hand" into a previously all-white high school.

The statements which angered Williams was made by Delaware Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young in chancery court at Georgetown last week.

Young, in an appeal for an injunction to help authorities prosecute persons who picket and stir up trouble in the state's school integration plan, told vice chancellor William Marvel:

"If it becomes necessary for the governor of this state and its U.

Negro Pupils Re-Admitted

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 14 (AP)—Delaware today paved the legal way for the re-admission of ten Negro students to the formerly all-white Milford, Del., High School.

Vice Chancellor William Marvel ruled that the ten Negroes "have a clear legal right" to attend the Milford school, pending a final decision by the Delaware Court of Chancery in a case filed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People on behalf of the ten children and their parents.

There was no immediate reaction to the vice chancellor's ruling by the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, or the organization's president, Bryant Bowles.

Louis L. Redding, attorney for the NAACP, said in Wilmington it would probably be the middle of next week before the children return to the school.

He explained that the defendants in the case — the Milford School Board, the school superintendent and the high school principal—have until Tuesday noon to file arguments or exceptions to the ruling with the chancery.

If none are filed the chancery then would issue an order, effective immediately which would clear the way for the school to readmit the pupils.

Mayor Edward C. Evans of Milford said he understands the school board will meet tomorrow to decide whether to file exceptions to the order. One source close to the school board said he didn't think they would.

Marvel did not specify in his order when the students should return to class.

The NAACP suit was heard in Court of Chancery at Georgetown, Del., last Tuesday. During the hearing, State Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young appeared "as a friend of the court" and made a dramatic appeal for readmission of the ten Negroes.

In his ruling today, Marvel said: "I hold that the plaintiffs have constitutional rights to a non-segregated education vested on their admission to Milford High School rights when the defendants concede but which they wish to withhold for the present. I find the plaintiffs' legal rights clear and convincing."

The suit filed in Chancery Court by the NAACP named as defendants the four members of the Milford School Board, who issued the order removing the ten Negroes from the high school. The four who replaced another school board that walked out because the State of Delaware took over the Milford schools, are Edward F. Steiner, George F. Adams, David B. Greene, and George Robbins.

Also named as defendants in the suit were Raymon C. Cobbs, Milford school district superintendent, and Alexander Glasmire, principal of the Milford High School.

Milford, Del., Rites Honor Sole Korea Hero—A Negro

Milford, Del., Nov. 11 (AP)—This southeastern Delaware community of 5,700 today observed Veterans Day by honoring the memory of its lone fatality of the Korean War—Negro Cpl. William A. Lockewood.

Milford was the scene of a dispute over integration of 11 Negro pupils with white pupils in the Milford High School in September and October. The case is awaiting argument and decision before the State Supreme Court.

Today, Cpl. Lockewood's mother, Mrs. Annabelle Lockewood, sat on the rostrum with City officials and community leaders as Mayor Edward C. Evans rededicated the community's war memorial to include Lockewood's name. The memorial is a stone and cement monument in the cente of the three-block shopping district of downtown Milford.

The 20-year-old Lockewood was graduated from the all-Negro Benjamin Banneker School and went to work as an orderly in Milford's Memorial Hospital. He enlisted in the Army in July, 1950, shortly after the Communists invaded South Korea, and was sent to Korea three months later.

He was reported missing by the Defense Department in February, 1951, and later was reported as a prisoner of war. However, in March, 1952, the Defense Department informed Mrs. Lockewood that her son was dead.

Negro Teachers In Acid Test On Integration

WILMINGTON, Del. (ANP)—Two Negro teachers—one a high school and the other an elementary teacher—last week related their experience in all-white and integrated classrooms.

The women represent a group of teachers who are serving as guinea pigs in this and other Southern communities attempting to put into practice last May's Supreme Court mandate banning school segregation.

They are Mrs. Daisy Simms, an elementary teacher in the Wilmington school system and Mrs. Grace Water, who teaches high school history and social studies in Morgantown, W. Va.

Both described their experiences under the integrated system to Kenneth O. Gil staff correspondent for the National Education Association.

Along with seven other Negro teachers, Mrs. Simms was assigned to teach in an all-white class. But the school principal sought to ease the pressure on her by not notifying parents of the children before classes began.

Reaction to the move was mixed but generally accepted. One mother explained her resentment this way:

"Frankly, I was shocked at first, but then I calmed down a bit especially after I was assured Mrs. Simms was an excellent teacher."

A few parents even threatened to withdraw their children. However, so far none has dropped out.

Mrs. Water, on the other hand, related how one student tried to make things miserable for her.

"...During one discussion on imports and exports the words tar and pitch came up, she explained. "Someone asked me what pitch was and a boy who has been trying to make me feel uncomfortable said with particular emphasis, 'It's something black.

"These things never hurt me," she added. "...I don't want the kids in my class to be afraid to discuss anything. We talk about race, marriage, integration and even the word n- - - -r."

Ervin Seeks Specific Legal Steps

State Educators Laud 'Gradual' Integration

Ronald Miami, Fla P. 9

By BERT COLLIER
Times Staff Writer

Top leaders in education had high praise for the brief filed by Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin in the United States Supreme court suggesting a gradual approach to end school segregation.

Interest was particularly high among attorneys in Ervin's suggestion for specific legal steps to implement the Supreme court's ruling in an orderly and gradual manner.

Mon. 10-4-54

Mrs. C. Durwood Johnson, of Quincy, president of the Florida Congress of Parents and Teachers, said the Ervin brief offered practical answers to the momentous questions raised by the high court.

Miami

"We who believe in the education of all children and promote the welfare of all children in the home, school, church and community must work together to accomplish these objectives," she said, "and must have no part in attempting to circumvent the law."

State School Supt. Thomas D. Bailey said the brief offers "incontrovertible evidence to support the argument that integrated schools in Florida cannot immediately be established."

Florida's brief asks for time to work out the changes, and proposes a legal procedure which already has attracted wide attention.

P. 9

Ervin proposes that Negro students, seeking admission to White schools, should file suits in lower courts. These would allege that the students were denied admission unreasonably, after applying within a reasonable time to the school district in which they lived.

The courts then would order hearings at which, Ervin proposed, this evidence should be considered:

Whether the state school authorities and the legislature [illegible] reasonable time to comply with the segregation ruling.

Good faith on the part of the school authorities in seeking to comply with the ruling. This evidence would include whether or not progress had been made to overcome practical administrative problems raised by integration, such as creation of citizens' committees to promote understanding.

Other evidence Ervin suggests as pertinent would include:

WHAT RECOMMENDATIONS have been made by impartial citizens and educational groups to work out the local situation.

WHAT ADMINISTRATIVE problems remain to be solved which might endanger sound school operation if Negro students are admitted immediately to White schools.

TO WHAT DEGREE there is "sincere opposition and sustained hostility on the part of the public to the granting of the application, so as to give school authorities reasonable grounds to believe that immediate approval of the petitioner's application would cause a disruption of the school system, or create psychological feelings among the children which would seriously interfere with their education.

THOMAS D. BAILEY
... proposal is praised

EVIDENCE that the suit for admission had been filed "in good faith and not for capricious reasons."

In this section of specific suggestion, Ervin said:

"During the process of desegregating schools, it should always be kept in mind that the sole legal purpose of public schools in Florida is to educate.

"The public school system has never been permitted under Florida law to extend its activities into the field of public welfare or related purposes.

"It is not the purpose, or within the legal authority of the Florida public school system to provide a direct means of improving the social, political or economic status of any group or individual except as such improvement may in time result from education itself.

"Public schools are not intended to provide experiments in race relations or to use children as sociological guinea pigs in the solution of problems in many walks of life which adults have not been able to solve by other means."

Segregation Petitions Circulated

Ronald Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— Petitions were being circulated here Tuesday urging maintenance of segregation in public schools.

The petitions will ultimately be presented to Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns asking him to take steps to maintain separate facilities for Whites and Negroes in Florida schools.

One of the persons circulating the petition, who would not identify himself, denied that it was instigated by the Ku Klux Klan. He said he was a Tallahassee businessman and father of two school-age children.

Warns of Uncurbed Violence if Segregation in Schools Is Ended Immediately

P. I.

ASKS 'TACT AND WISDOM'

Strife Flares in Baltimore—Milford, Del., Education Is Back to Normal

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1—Florida asked the Supreme Court today to permit a gradual and discretionary adjustment of its school system to conform to the decision outlawing segregation.

It coupled its plea with a warning that violence might follow immediate and complete integration of white and Negro pupils in that state.

"Time, tact and wisdom" were needed, Florida asserted, if segregated schools were to be ended in that state "in an equitable manner without destroying the school system."

Richard W. Erwin, Florida's Attorney General, filed with the Supreme Court the first brief as amicus curiae, or friend of the court, in response to the high tribunal's invitation when it announced last May that segregation was unconstitutional. Arguments on procedures for enforcing that decree have been set for Dec. 6 and all states that intend to file briefs must submit them by Nov. 15.

[In Baltimore, violence flared over integration as white adults and students tried to attack Negro students. In Milford, Del., education was back to normal after the integration attempt was abandoned.]

Gradual Readjustment

"Many think that our democracy is now face to face with the toughest job in practical government it has ever had to tackle without going to war," Mr. Erwin said. "Some way must be found to protect the constitutional rights of a minority without ignoring the will of the majority.

"We think the only answer is time and the patient efforts of those who value democracy more than their personal longings and private prejudices. We hope that this court will accept this answer."

Specifically, Florida recommended that the Supreme Court permit a gradual readjustment from segregated to integrated schools and that it remand pending cases to courts of first instance to formulate decrees. In setting the cases for reargument on procedure the court had asked advice of the interested states as to whether this method should be followed.

Mr. Erwin said that Florida had maintained a dual school system since 1885 in the belief that "separate-but-equal" schools were permissible under the Constitution. Today the system involves an annual expenditure of $138,895,123 and the welfare of 650,285 children.

"We do not believe," Mr. Erwin said, "that this system, which took over half a century to develop, can be transformed overnight."

Must Revise School Code

Mr. Erwin said that the Florida Legislature would have to revise the state's entire school code, since all administrative procedures were grounded on the segregated system. Simple repeal of procedures, he said, could only create a vacuum.

"The consequent immediate inrush of turbulent ideas into this vacuum without legal guidance or administrative regulation might well cause a tornado which would devastate the entire school system," Mr. Erwin asserted.

Mr. Erwin said he had spent $10,000 in a survey of public opinion in Florida under the supervision of an interracial advisory committee. Some disclosures of the survey were:

¶Three-fourths of the white leaders of the state who were polled disagreed with the Supreme Court's decision.

¶The large majority of the Negroes acclaimed the ruling as being right.

¶Only a small minority of leaders of both races advocated immediate and complete desegregation.

¶A majority of both white and Negro leaders expect serious violence and doubt the ability of peace officers to maintain order if immediate and complete segregation is ordered.

Mr. Erwin said that violence might be expected especially in Dade County, which contains the city of Miami.

The survey also showed, according to Mr. Erwin, that Negro teachers might encounter difficulty in obtaining employment in integrated schools, with resultant economic hardship. Negro pupils also "would find themselves set apart, not only by color but by the quality of their work."

This would not arise, he said, from "an innate racial basis" but from differences in economic and cultural background.

"We most earnestly and sincerely urge the court to permit that degree of latitude necessary to the segregated states and the county school boards therein to bring about an effective general adjustment to integration so as to soften and ameliorate the transition and preserve peace and order in the communities and the schools in the process and that these officials be accorded the discretion to make the transition successfully and effectively in good time and good order," Mr. Erwin pleaded.

Asks for Set of Rules

Although advocating that formulation of decrees be left to the trial courts, Mr. Erwin advised the Supreme Court that it might well give the lower tribunals a set of rules to guide them in deciding suits brought to compel admittance to specific schools.

Under these suggested rules, the application for admission would have to be made well before the beginning of the school term and the applicant would be required to reside in the school district to which he sought admission.

After applications had been refused the courts would be required to hold hearings to determine if the school authorities had acted arbitrarily or in good faith and if the application had been submitted in good faith or for "capricious" reasons.

After this procedure had been followed the courts might grant the petition, dismiss it, or order the school authorities to hold it in abeyance for a reasonable time to allow for further adjustment by the community to an integrated system.

Kansas also filed with the Supreme Court a supplemental brief. It maintained the same position taken in its original brief last term that the Supreme Court should not attempt to formulate specfic decrees to end segregation in that state.

Florida Pleads for More Time To Comply With Desegregation

Brief Requests U.S. High Court To Give State 'Reasonable' Period

By CHARLES HESSER
Staff Writer, The Miami Daily News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., Oct. 2—The United States Supreme Court today was urged to grant a reasonable length of time to end segregation in the public schools. The plea was made in a brief filed with the high tribunal by the State of Florida.

Because of the multitude of problems involved no target date was suggested for desegregation.

When the Supreme Court overturned its 57-year-old doctrine sanctioning separate, but equal facilities for the races, it called for further arguments on how the decision should be carried out and invited the attorneys general of states requiring or permitting segregation to file briefs on this subject as friends of the court.

Of the court's historic May decree outlawing segregation, the Florida brief had this to say:

"There are two ways in which the Brown decision may be viewed by history.

"First, it may be considered as a seismic shock which struck without warning and engulfed a large part of the nation in a tidal wave of hate and inflamed emotions and carried away a public school system which took half a century and billions of dollars to build.

"Second, it may be looked upon as a high goal which this court has fixed for men of good will to strive to attain and which they may attain in due course if rational consideration is given to human frailty and faith is maintained in the slow but sure upward movement of democracy."

FLORIDA

Face 'Toughest Job'

The brief reported that "many think our democracy is now face to face with the toughest job in practical government it has ever had to tackle without going to war. Some way must be found to protect the constitutional rights of a minority without ignoring the will of the majority. We think the only answer is time and the patient efforts of those who value democracy more than their personal longings and private prejudices. . . ."

These conclusions were reached by Florida Attorney Gen. Richard Ervin and his staff following a survey conducted by experts from the University of Florida, Florida State University, University of Miami, Florida A & M University for Negroes and Bethune-Cookman College.

The survey included personal interviews in 12 representative Florida counties and mail questionnaires. Polled were both white and Negro leaders on what they thought would be the effect of the court's ruling in the state.

In addition to requesting an indefinite period to accomplish integration through a gradual transition, Florida asked the Supreme Court to, in effect, direct lower courts to take local factors into considerating when determining cases involving segregation.

"Keeping the control of public education close to the local people is perhaps the strongest tradition in American education," the brief said. "One of the predominant characteristics of American education is the variation in local policies and procedures in terms of unique local conditions. This is in sharp contrast to the highly centralized national systems of education of other countries. . . ."

Ask for More Time

"There is some reason to believe that segregated schools can be ended in Florida in an equitable manner without destroying the school system itself. But there is no reason to believe that this can be accomplished hurriedly or through the legal coercion of school officials who would thus find themselves caught in the impossible dilemma of confronting on the one hand the irresistable force of a judicial edict which must be obeyed and on the other hand the immovable object of public opinion which cannot be altered. The only hope for a solution is for this court to restrain the use of coercive measures where necessary until the hard core of public opinion has softened to the extent that there can be at least some measure of acceptance on the part of a majority of the people."

"This recognition of the need for time and tact and wisdom in bringing about a true realization of the goal set by this court is shared by leaders of both the white and Negro races in Florida."

The brief quoted from a statement made shortly after the May decision by Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, founder of Bethune-Cookman College at Daytona Beach, Fla., who is a recognized leader of the Negro people throughout the nation.

Dr. Bethune said, in part: "Let us give and take, working out together the best possible means we can put into action so that there may be peace and understanding, and, may I say, the spirit of brotherhood. There is much for the Negro to do as well as the white. We must use tact and wisdom."

Noting that a segregated school system has been the law of Florida since 1885, the brief declared it "cannot be changed overnight without completely upsetting established school administrtaive procedure in school planning, transportation, teacher employment, capital outlay, districting, scholastic standards, public health, school discipline as well as many other facets of the tremendously complicated school structure in Florida."

Assuming that the Florida law is rendered nugatory by the Supreme Court decision, the brief went on: "The Florida Legislature must revise the entire school code of Florida to the extent that the present code is predicated upon a dual system of education. . . .

"A simple repeal of the various statutory and administrative procedures now provided for the operation of the school system could only result in the creation of a vacuum in methods of school administration. The consequent immediate inrush of turbulent ideas into this vacuum without legal guidance or administrative regulation might well cause a tornado which would devastate the entire school system."

'Complications' Cited

Since the establishment of the "separate but equal" doctrine, the school system in Florida has grown into a mammoth and intricate system which today involves the annual expenditure of $138,895,123 and the welfare of 650,000 children.

"We do not believe that this system, which took over a half century to develop, can be transformed overnight," the brief asserted.

"The bare mechanical process of enacting legislation requires reasonable time for study by legislative committees, the time depending upon the complexity of the problem, and must conform to the legally established time for convening of the Legislature."

Florida's next legislature does not convene until April, 1955, for a regular 60-day biennial session.

Involved in any reorganization of the state's public school system is a school plant valued at $300,000,000 and a building program now under way in the amount of $100,000,000.

The brief said that "in many instances to integrate immediately in particular schools would mean overcrowding of school facilities resulting in serious administrative problems. . . ."

Overcrowded conditions already prevail in many Florida schools.

During the school year 1953-54 a total of 81 schools in 18 Florida counties were forced to operate double sessions because of the lack of classroom space and trained teachers.

1951 Veto Is Recalled

The brief refused to predict what action the 1955 Legislature may take, but it was pointed out that the 1951 Legislature wrote into its appropriations act a provision that in case of desegregation, no funds would be released to the state universities. This was vetoed by the governor.

With regard to Florida, the brief emphasized again and again that the state should be given ample time to prepare for integration, that it should be accomplished county-by-county, and at the discretion of local leaders because "of variations in community attitudes."

As to the South as a whole, it was concluded that: "If there ever was a condition which needs elasticity in the application of constitutional guaranties to meet it, certainly it is the transition period from the segregated school system to the non-segregated system. . . ."

Recognizing that some objection has been made to gradualism in desegregation, the brief said the advocates of immediate integration "apparently feel that the shock treatment is to be preferred and that if a difficult job has to be done, the quicker it is done, the better.

"In this belief we are positive they are mistaken. Strong opposition already exists in the South to desegregation. It will be intensified in direct proportion to the amount of hasty precipitation and coercion that is applied."

"Already there is springing up in our state opposition organizations, some of which through their literature encourage violence. Burning of crosses and circulation of hate literature are becoming more and more prevalent. But, minimizing these manifestations of defiance are thousands of law-abiding citizens of both races, many influential newspapers and loyal organizations who are trying to meet the situation calmly and patiently. But their attitudes have always been buttressed on the assumption of gradualism and local autonomy. If that assumption is cut from under them by a decree of immediate desegregation or even a decree of a period of short delay which does not permit a large degree of local determination, we frankly doubt whether we can save our public school system."

The brief quoted from several past decisions made by the U.S. Supreme Court and state supreme courts which "recognized the necessity for granting a reasonable time in which to comply with the decree of the court to avoid hardship or injury to public or private interests." But, it was pointed out that 'the present decision requires more consideration of the problem of delay and adjustment than in the earlier case.

Ervin Asks Caution on Integration

Wisdom Required On School Edict, He Says in Brief To Supreme Court

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

Segregation can be ended in Florida's public schools "if time, wisdom and patience are combined with a wide degree of autonomy in the local school districts," Florida Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin said Saturday in a historic brief filed with the United States Supreme court.

But, he asserted, if the court orders immediate integration of White and Negro children:

"We frankly doubt that we can save our public school system."

These were conclusions in the "friend of the court" brief which Ervin offered in behalf of Florida as suggestions for ending segregation.

It was in response to an invitation from the court for advice how to carry out its momentous decision of last May 19 holding segregation unconstitutional.

The ruling may well become one of the great milestones in the development of the American way of life, Ervin told the court.

"There are two ways the decision may be viewed by history," the brief said.

"FIRST, it may be considered as a seismic shock which struck without warning and engulfed a large part of the nation as a tidal wave of hate and inflamed emotions, and carried away a public school system which took half a century and billions of dollars to build, or,

"SECOND, it may be looked upon as a high goal which this court has fixed for men of good will to strive to attain and which they may attain in due course, if rational consideration is given to human frailty and faith is maintained in the slow but sure upward movement of democracy.

"Many think that our democracy is now face to face with the toughest job in practical government it has ever had to tackle without going to war.

"Some way must be found to protect the constitutional rights of a minority without ignoring the will of the majority.

"We think that the only answer is time and patient efforts of those who value democracy more than their personal longings and private prejudices. We hope that this court will accept this answer."

The brief was drawn by Ervin and Ralph E. Odum, assistant attorney general, after months of study of the "practical, psychological, economic and sociological effects" of desegregation upon Florida and all its people.

Included in this study was a "guinea pig" survey of public opinion in key counties, made by trained scientists, which revealed the majority of Floridians polled were opposed to the principle of the Supreme court ruling.

Nevertheless, the brief pointed out, integration may be achieved in Florida in time, by a policy of "gradualism," which it urged the Supreme court to accept in its final ruling and implementing its earlier decision.

The plan, whatever it might be, must be broad enough to cover a wide variety of conditions, and local school authorities must have the power to adapt the plan to the situation in their own communities.

No plan, however sound, will work without the understanding and acceptance by the people immediately affected—the local citizens, the parents and the school children themselves.

The filing of the brief by Florida does not mean, the attorney general pointed out, that this state has become a party to the segregation cases in the Supreme Court.

Legally, the decision of May 19 applies directly only to the four states from which cases were appealed—Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware. Florida, in entering the case as a "friend," retains this sideline status and a free hand to work out its decisions within the framework of the final Supreme court decision.

Ervin's brief merely replies to hypothetical questions raised by the Supreme court. He says specifically:

"The attorney general is not intervening in the cause, nor is he authorized to submit the State of Florida as a direct party to the instant cases.

"Neither can his brief preclude the Florida Legislature or the people of Florida from taking any legislative or constitutional action dealing with the segregation problem."

Ervin's bulky, 242-page brief is a careful legal argument for sufficient time in effecting integration to permit the development of public opinion for its acceptance.

Much time also is needed to solve the intricate legal framework for segregated schools based on a provision in the Florida constitution nearly 70 years old, and customs and a way of life that go back to the state's creation.

There is also a tremendous body of administrative procedure in the school system that must be studied and revised, Ervin points out.

But his principal plea for "gradualism" is that the sweeping change from segregated schools — one of the most momentous social changes in the nation's history—"involves the collective conscience . . . of our White citizens . . ."

Asserts U. S. Supreme Bench Made 'a Great Mistake' in Segregation Ruling

New York N.Y.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Nov. 16 (UP)—The Florida Supreme Corut today criticized the United States Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision as "a great mistake."

Ruling on a county school bond issue, the Florida court said the Federal Supreme Court's desegregation decision would "retard rather than accelerate the removal of the inequalities" between the races in public schools.

Justice Glenn Terrell wrote the court's opinion, in which all but one of the Florida court's members concurred.

11-12-54

"Whether or not the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has a place in the field of public education, is a question of policy determinable by the legislature," Justice Terrell said. "It is not a judicial question as I understand the canons of the interpretation. Likewise, the question of segregation is for the same reason a legislative rather than a judicial question."

The Florida court's views on the segregation ruling were injected into the school bond proceeding in answer to a taxpayer's challenge of the legality of continuing to build separate facilities for whites and Negroes. The $1,750,000 issue for Manatee County contemplates new facilities for both races.

Chief Justice B. K. Roberts and Justices Frank Hobson, E. Harris Drew and Associate Justice John A. H. Murphree agreed with Justice Terrell. Justice Elwyn Thomas concurred in the conclusion only. Justice John E. Mathews dissented.

Justice Terrell noted that the states that practiced segregation had "voluntarily made great strides in removing the injustices and inequalities of segregation."

"When these are removed," he said, "there will be nothing left to quarrel about. The effect of the [United States court decision] will retard rather than accelerate the removal on these inequalities. It will in my judgment inject other stresses that will complicate removal."

Justice Terrell said that what order of enforcement of the segregation ban would emerge from hearings now in progress before the United States court would "be determined by the showing made" by the states involved.

"It is inconceivable," he added, "that the Supreme Court will undertake to settle the question of segregation in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and other states not parties to the case, each of which has its peculiar problems with reference to the matter.

"It is further inconceivable that the Supreme Court would impose conditions on these states that neither Congress nor any of the state legislatures have designed to impose on them, that none of them has asked for or want, that they are violently oppose dto and have deep and decided convictions against."

In his dissent Justice Mathews said that "it is shown that the proceeds [of the bond issue] are to be used for a purpose prohibited by the State Constitution and in violation of the contractual obligations with freeholders" who voted for the bonds.

END OF SEGREGATION CALLED A LONG TASK

Special to The New York Times.

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 30—Thurgood Marshall, general counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, today told the International Union of Electrical Radio and Machine Workers, C.I.O., here, that desegregation is praised by everyone except Soviet Russia and her satellites.

Mr. Marshall, who spearheaded the fight to have the Supreme Court rule on the segregation issue, spoke at the closing session of I. U. E.

"State Governors who object to desegregation are using the same words as Radio Moscow," Mr. Marshall said. "The job ahead is a tough one. There is no shortcut solution to racial bigotry of which is unlawful and unmoral.

Representative Emanuel Celler, Democrat of Brooklyn, told the delegates that if he became chairman of the House of Judiciary Committee in January, he would investigate Charles E. Wilson, Secretary of Defense, in the labor policies of General Motors, General Electric and Westinghouse.

There is no Communist peril in Israel and never will be because of the nation's free trade laws, Moshe Bitan, of the General Confederation of Labor of Israel said.

Fernando Sierra Berdicia, Secretary of Labor for Puerto Rico, declared that runaway shops—those that move from the North to areas where they can find cheaper labor—are no bargains to Puerto Rico

Segregation Surveyed by Rights Group

More than 98 per cent of over 10,000 persons contacted in a Dade county survey favor keeping segregation in Florida public schools, it was announced Tuesday by a school segregation survey committee.

W. H. Hamilton, Jr., committee chairman and president of Florida States Rights Inc., said volunteer workers had obtained 10,496 signatures, of which 10,386 signed in favor of keeping segregation and 110 said they wanted it abolished.

He said the questionaire asked only two questions—"Are you in favor of or against segregation?" Persons over 21 years of age and from all walks of life participated in the survey, which began about three months ago, Hamilton stated.

An estimated 250 Negroes answered the questionnaire, he added.

Results of the survey, obtained with the help of the Dade County Property Owners Association and the Dade county chapters, Junior Order of the United American Mechanics, will be sent to Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin, Acting Charley E. Johns and state representatives.

Hamilton said the school segregation survey committee was formed June 1. Members are Hamilton, Mrs. Roberta Mayo, William Simpson, W. H. Elmer, Hugo Steurnagal, A. C. Bradshaw and Duane Stafford.

30 Percent Of Floridians Want To Keep Bias

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Florida Attorney General Richard Ervin said Monday that about 30 per cent of white leaders in the state are prepared to "actively and violently" oppose efforts to end segregation in public schools.

Ervin drew these conclusions after studying a survey of the issue made by Florida educators.

He said the general feeling was that de-segregation could be achieved only through a gradual process.

The report of the survey noted that "violent disagreement" was voiced by 30 per cent of the white leaders contacted in nine representative counties.

"They would refuse to cooperate with any move to end segregation or actively oppose it," said the report.

OFFICERS NOT CONFIDENT

"While a majority of both white and Negro leaders expect serious violence to occur if de-segregation is attempted," it was added, "there is a widespread lack of confidence in the ability of peace officers to maintain law and order if serious violence does start. This is especially true of the peace officers themselves."

It was claimed that only a small minority of leaders from both the white and Negro races favor "immediate, complete de-segregation."

Ervin plans to use the information in a brief to the U. S. Supreme Court that he hopes will influence the High Tribunal in delaying its edict banning segregation in public schools.

He said:

"Our survey indicates that the equities of the situation favor gradualism in the transition rather than the shock approach of immediate de-segregation."

WANTS "LONG TIME"

He said that the attitudes which fostered segregation were achieved "over a long period of time."

"We believe that only through gradualism and the most conscientious and patient efforts of all concerned can they be removed as psychological and sociological barriers.

"Thus much time is needed with patience and understanding on the part of both races before the problem can be solved," added the attorney general.

And he concluded:

"If the court takes due notice of the implications of the report, no one in Florida need fear that any plan might be made for his community in which he, as a citizen, has not had a right to participate."

The attorney general also expressed the feeling that the survey conducted in Florida "constitutes the greatest effort made by any state to comply with the request of the Supreme Court for information on its segregation problem."

Petition Hits Desegregation

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— The governor's office reported Wednesday it has received a petition from G. E. Stephens of Ocoee bearing 1,287 signatures of persons in favor of continuing racial segregation in the public schools.

The petition also carried 18 names of persons listing themselves as against continuance of segregation. Ocoee is a small town in Orange county 10 miles west of Orlando.

High Court to Open New Term Monday

By Paul W. Yost
Associated Press

The Supreme Court opens a new term Monday, faced with the problem of finding a way to put into effect its decision against racial segregation in public schools.

Chief Justice Warren and his eight associate justices, back from summer vacations, will be confronted with a docket of about 100 cases. But the No. 1 issue for starting the nine-month term will be how to accomplish desegregation.

In an unusual pre-term conference the court reached unanimous agreement that the week of December 6 be set aside for hearing further arguments and reports on the school racial questions.

Both sides in segregation cases from Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia will have one hour each to present follow-up arguments for and against the court's unanimous decision last May 17 that their school segregation practices are unconstitutional.

18 Hours for Debate

In addition, North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Tennessee and Oklahoma have permission to present arguments if they wish, and Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., is expected to argue for an hour. This adds up to a possible 18 hours, or more than four afternoons of legal debate.

The Topeka, Kans., Board of Education—defendant in the Kansas case—has informed the high tribunal there is no need for further court action in its situation because desegregation is advancing "as rapidly as is practicable."

Desegregation also is advancing rapidly in District of Columbia schools. In Delaware strong opposition has developed. Virginia and South Carolina appear to be standing firm in their opposition.

New Appeals Filed

Two new appeals in racial cases filed during the summer ask the Court to strike down on Alabama law banning marriage of Negroes and whites, and to abolish a requirement that Negro lawyers and litigants sit at a special table in the Harris County, Tex., law library.

Another new appeal asks the high tribunal to overturn a decision by the New Jersey Supreme Court that free bibles may not be distributed to children in the state's public schools.

A second round of attack on State "fair trade" laws, and the Federal McGuirea ct which aids them, is made in four cases appealed by retailers in New York City and Newark, N. J. The retailers claim the right to sell items below minimum prices fixed by manufacturers under state "fair trade" laws.

SEGREGATION: WHAT NEXT?

A study of plans to deal with the Supreme Court decision on segregation in the schools, made by this newspaper and published today, suggests that some difficult problems still lie ahead, especially in the Deep South. In Alabama, in Florida, in Georgia, in South Carolina, in Texas, in Louisiana and in Mississippi, there is either a tendency to work for more time or to evade the Court's decision in one way or another. In Mississippi, for example, a vote will be taken on Dec. 21 to ratify or reject a proposed amendment to the State Constitution authorizing the Legislature to abolish the public schools. The purpose would be, of course, to maintain the present system of segregation by what can only be described as a subterfuge.

Most Southern states and most border states continue to operate under the segregation system. In the District of Columbia, which certainly should respect a Supreme Court decision if any area must, integration is continuing, in the words of our reporter, "at a fast clip." Oklahoma is planning to end segregation by the beginning of the 1955 school term. In Kansas, where segregation was permissive, the drive is on to end it in those school systems that still have it.

As in the days following the "unpleasantness" of 1861-65, there are "reconstructed" and "unreconstructed" personalities in this situation. One might put Marvin Griffin, Democratic nominee for Governor of Georgia, in the latter group. Mr. Griffin, attending the Democratic state convention at which he was nominated, and destined to certain success in the fall elections, seems to regard the Supreme Court of the United States as a weak and erring institution. Referring to the Court's decision, Mr. Griffin said that "no true Southerner feels morally bound to recognize the legality of this act of tyranny, support its provisions or obey its unthinkable terms." He said the ruling "should be resisted." He said that the battle against it is "a religious crusade." He was loudly cheered when he condemned President Eisenhower, who appointed Chief Justice Warren, who wrote the decision.

One cannot believe that this outpouring of mid-nineteenth-century oratory in Georgia, or similar rhetoric elsewhere, represents the present state of mind of the majority of the good people of the South. If some wretched Communist should attack the Supreme Court in such terms, one is certain that all these good citizens would have joined in the indignant protest. They would recognize, as loyal Americans must, that we either respect the Court for its undeniable integrity, obey its rulings even when they go against our preferences, or act like rebellious children who don't like to be advised what to do. Yet if we take this attitude toward the Supreme Court, which actually represents all of us, we might as well not have any Supreme Court or any basic law.

It seems to this newspaper that Georgia and other states with large Negro populations will probably find a way to keep in harmony with the Court's decision. What is asked of them is not easy. We can sympathize with both races in this situation. But liberty and justice are never completely easy, never completely simple. Mr. Griffin and his prototypes in Georgia and other states might reflect on this principle as they sit in the privacy of their homes and are through for the moment with making speeches and statements.

Integration Reaction Mixed With 2 Big School Flareups

Desegregation in Border Areas Fails to Stir Up Any Trouble

By JOHN N. POPHAM

New York Times News Service, Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Oct. 2—The complex problem of how to bring about varying measures of racial integration in the public school systems of more than one-third of the country has produced a checkerboard pattern of reaction.

Reports from New York Times correspondents in the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, where dual schools were established by statutory requirements, and the three states where a permissive segregation policy affected certain communities, sketch the picture in the following general terms:

In the 4½ months since the Supreme Court's decision banning public school racial segregation laws, developments have mostly followed the predictions of race relations experts that integration would come first in areas with the low percentages of Negro population.

THERE HAVE BEEN two dramatic flareups in the border states of West Virginia and Delaware in recent days, both resulting in local school officials reversing their stands on integration orders. But the record shows spores in other border areas, some regarded as even stronger in their attachment to Southern customs.

As was expected, the "Old South" has made no significant steps toward school integration, except for two small communities in Arkansas, each with very special conditions.

In the Old South extremists in the pro-segregation ranks, particularly among political leaders, were the principal voices heard and quoted on the issue.

In the Old South the temporary absence of a Supreme Court decree spelling out specific terms for implementing its decision against segregation handicapped those pledged to try to attain some degree of compliance; they could not cite any program with details and with sanction from high levels.

TEN DAYS AGO the Supreme Court set Dec. 6 as the date it would begin hearing arguments on the kind of decrees it should issue to enforce its decision.

The court gave parties to the suits and others wishing to be heard as friends of the court until Nov. 15 to file written briefs and applications to be heard in the debate on the implementation procedures.

The cases on which the Supreme Court made its May 17 decision came from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The court invited the attorney general and all of the other interested states to join these original parties in helping consider the knotty subject of implementation.

IT ALSO INVITED them to counsel the court concerning its equity powers to direct gradual adjustments toward enforcement of the anti-segregation ruling.

Seven states have asked to appear as friends of the court. They are North Carolina, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, Maryland, Oklahoma and Tennessee.

Meanwhile, the political leadership in Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina has moved with almost unbroken ranks in expressing determination to accept no measure of public school integration. These are the Southern states with the heaviest percentages of Negro population.

IN GEORGIA and Mississippi the voters next month will vote on constitutional amendments, overwhelmingly approved by the state legislatures, that will give authority to abolish the public schools as a "last resort" if state officials conclude that the Supreme Court's implementation decree is "unacceptable." South Carolina voters approved similar measures at the polls in 1952.

Louisiana's political leadership has taken a similar hard line. Voters next month will ballot on a statute that, in effect, would allow local school superintendents to assign students to specific schools on the basis of "welfare."

Similar attitudes have been expressed by some political figures in Alabama, but no concrete proposal has been evolved for the voters' consideration.

Other Southern states have adopted more of a wait-and-see policy with study groups of legislators and educational consultants preparing assessments to "guide" future decisions. Leaders in these states have stressed that there are numerous mountain counties with very small populations of Negroes and coastal areas with high Negro populations.

AN IMPORTANT figure in the segregation ranks is Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina. On the day of the Supreme Court decision, Byrnes urged South Carolinians to show "patience and restraint." The following day, President Eisenhower, asked to comment on the court ruling, said he would point to the remarks of Byrnes.

Illustrative of the wait-and-see states is Florida, whose attorney general on Friday filed with the Supreme Court the first of the friend-of-the court briefs

The Florida brief asked for a decree permitting a gradual and discretionary adjustment to the desegregation decision. It said the yardstick for compliance should be "time, tact and wisdom."

In the border and non-Southern states, the picture of successful schoolroom integration is impressive despite the West Virginia and Delaware incidents.

IN DELAWARE, aside from the "failure" of the integration move in Milford, other sections of the state were having successful integration. In Wilmington, some 600 Negroes were attending schools previously all-white, 20 whites were in schools previously all-Negro and of 14 elementary schools, eight were integrated, all without incidents.

In the last two days the pattern of the Milford protests and disturbances spread to several school areas in Baltimore, which had ended public school segregation at the start of the school year and experienced no disruption.

IN BALTIMORE, the desegregation policy was a "voluntary" one, with students permitted to attend the school nearest their homes if they so desired, at present, only a small number of Negroes, about 2.5 per cent of total Negro pupil enrollment, had chosen to go to previously all-white schools. For weeks there had been no trouble.

In West Virginia, aside from a "failure" in Greenbriar County, there was classroom integration without incidents in 25 of the state's 55 counties. Of these counties, 12 had been integrated completely, 13 had partial integration, 18 were awaiting the implementation decrees and 12 had no Negro students.

In the District of Columbia, whose attachments to Southern racial attitudes has always been considered stronger than those of Delaware or West Virginia, school integration was markedly successful even though Negro pupil enrollment exceeds that of whites. An accelerated program was started two weeks ago, putting the city's original desegregation timetable a year ahead of schedule.

IN MISSOURI, large sections of which have always been regarded as strong in Southern sentiments, the school integration was widespread and resulted in no incidents. Negroes were integrated in public schools in 69 Missouri counties. The pattern varied, some integration starting in high schools and some in elementary schools, but all without disturbances.

In the "permissive" states of New Mexico, Arizona and Kansas, the school integration was successful. In New Mexico the three communities with past segregation were now completely integrated. In Arizona there were similar successes in eight or nine communities, with Phoneix as the focal point. In Kansas there was official state commitment to "expedite" integration that was almost completely attained this school year.

AGAINST THIS background of widespread success in integration moves in border and non-Southern areas, most race relations experts were inclined to view the disturbances and "failures" in Delaware and West Virginia as striking exceptions.

Throughout the reports from the areas affected by the school segregation issue, however, the main item appeared to be fairly general recognition that the checkerboard pattern would prevail until the Supreme Court implementation decree defined the methods for compliance.

HIGH COURT RETURNS TO SCHOOL PROBLEM

Celler Asks Brownell For Inquiry Into Milford, Baltimore Fights

By The United Press

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3. — The Supreme Court reconvenes Monday to solve touchy school segregation problems in the face of spreading rebellion against its order mingling white and Negro children in the nation's classrooms.

As the court prepared to open its 165th year, disorder and threats of violence prevailed in Delaware and Maryland in protest of efforts to implement the desegregation ruling of May 17.

Calls For Inquiry

Simultaneously, Representative Emanuel Celler, ranking Democrat of the House Judiciary Committee, called on Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell to investigate "the ... schools Monday to prevent outbursts.

The opening session of the Supreme Court, while impressive, is merely a formality. It is not until the following Monday that the tribunal announces what cases it will consider.

Already on the docket, however, is the crucial segregation ... violence and strikes. Police officials said men will be at all issue.

Refuses To Back Down

Baltimore officials refused to back down on limited integration ... plans in the face of spotted ... Negroes their right to equal education."

Milford school officials, who ... sordid outburst of racialism in Milford, Del., ...

Mr. Celler (D., N. Y.) told Mr. Brownell "violence continues" in Milford and "Maryland's virus has spread to Baltimore." He urged immediate action to block "a nationwide conspiracy to take from ... ended an integration attempt because of a strike of white pupils, ... set a hearing Oct. 12 on a request that 10 Negro pupils be readmitted to a white school.

Racial Protests In Washington May Be Waning

Strikes Continue; Back-To-Class Move Gaining Strength

By The Associated Press

A wave of student strikes in protest against integration of Negro and white pupils spread to nine Washington schools Tuesday while the situation in nearby Baltimore eased after several days of noisy demonstrations.

In the nation's capital school authorities reported more than 2,800 students absent at one time or another from three high schools and six junior highs.

At one time about 100 white boys and girls congregated in front of the Supreme Court building where the historic decision outlawing segregation in the public schools was handed down last May 17. The students left quickly under police orders.

6 People Arrested

Six persons were arrested near Anacostia High where several hundred pupils gathered outside with signs such as "This is America—not Africa." Two men were held on disorderly conduct charges and the others were released.

At day's end school authorities said a back to classes movement seemed to be developing. "I feel that the peak of the disturbance is past," Police Lt. William T. Murphy said at Anacostia high.

The Justice Department said it was "keeping an eye on the all-over situation." The District of Columbia started mixing white and Negro pupils three weeks ago without waiting for the Supreme Court's final order, expected some time next year.

Nixon Position

At Council Bluffs, Iowa, Vice President Richard Nixon said his two daughters, Patricia, 8, and Julie, 6, would remain in Washington public schools regardless of integration.

The girls will "continue to grow up in an atmosphere where they realize . . . we have attempted to provide equal opportunities for all citizens," he said.

The Nixon children attend Horace Mann School in Washington. No Negroes are enrolled there now.

Baltimore Normal

At Baltimore the integration situation apparently was returning to normal following several days of student strikes, picketing and mass protests. Schools over the city reported attendance on the increase. A few pickets appeared at one or two schools but were quickly broken up by police.

Superior Judge James K. Cullen ruled that white and Negro children may continue to go to public schools together.

"The Supreme Court has spoken and we must all. . .abide by it," he said in refusing to order the city school board to restore the segregation it ended Sept. 7. The judge had been asked by two groups to find that the board acted illegally in ending segregation before the Supreme Court made a final decree.

CIO Wants Action

At Washington, the CIO called on Atty. Gen. Brownell to "take firm and fast action" with federal civil rights laws to insure "peaceful integration of the public schools."

The CIO Executive Board adopted a resolution calling on Brownell to intervene in student strikes. Asserting civil rights laws make it unlawful to deprive any citizen of equal protection, the board said Brownell should launch an immediate investigation to determine whether these laws have been violated.

At Dover, Del., nine of 11 Negro pupils turned away last week from Milford's all-white high school failed to report at Dover's all-Negro school.

Temporary Boycott

A school official, who declined use of his name, said he understood the nine were boycotting classes until they learned the result of a court argument next Tuesday on an injunction filed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to allow them to return to Milford.

Meanwhile, copies of a suit to dissolve the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People, one of the leaders in the recent successful fight to prevent integration at Milford, were on their way to the chancery in Georgetown, county seat of Kent County.

Four States Still Flaunt Banner of White Supremacy

By BEM PRICE
Associated Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON—Four Southern states still flaunt the banner of White supremacy before the United States Supreme Court.

They simply say they are going to do their best to maintain their way of life no matter what the court orders them to do toward ending racial segregation in their schools.

But though the politicians in Georgia, South Carolina, Louisiana and Mississippi are raising rebel yells, one hard fact stands out:

The South generally is giving calm study to the prospect of ending racial discrimination in the public schools.

Most of the states have adopted a let's-wait-and-see attitude on impending orders by the court on how desegregation should be carried out.

The court held last May 17 that segregation in public schools on the basis of color was unconstitutional. It asked the interested states to return in December with advice on their best to end the 90-year-old practice.

The court ruling directly affected 17 states and the District of Columbia. Each had compulsory segregation laws.

Nine states have indicated they will wait for the court order before doing anything. Four others and the District of Columbia have shown varying signs of letting down the bars.

THE FOUR defiant states are among those in the South with the heaviest Negro population and the most outspoken politicians on the race question.

The legislature of Mississippi and Georgia have recently voted to amend the states constitutions so that the public schools could be leased to private operators. The theory is that the court can't regulate admission to "private" schools and hence segregation could be maintained. The amendments still must be submitted to the people of the two states.

South Carolina voters approved such a "private school" law last year.

Louisiana has plans to invoke its police powers to maintain the "good morals and general welfare" of its people by keeping White and Negro students apart in the grade schools.

While these states have attracted much attention, a state-by-state survey by the Associated Press and the Southern Education Reporting Service indicates the majority are setting to work on a solution.

SERS was set up in Nashville, Tenn., recently with funds from the Ford Foundation to present factual reports on developments in the Southern education field. It is headed by C. A. McKnight, on leave as editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News.

AS A NOISEMAKER on the segregation issue, few states can match Georgia.

Gov. Herman Talmadge has used the Negro as a stump-speaking point of departure for waving the White supremacy banner ever since he has been in politics. Before him his father, the late Gov. Eugene Talmadge, employed the same tactics.

The red-gallused governor has said Georgia would resist integration to the last.

During the recent campaign for Talmadge's job (he cannot succeed himself), the eight male candidates tried to outshout one another on segregation, each claiming he was best fitted to maintain it.

While Georgia has made most of the fuss, a statewide secret organization known as "citizens council" was growing up in Mississippi's 82 counties.

A spokesman for the group—a state legislator — said the councils were composed "of freedom loving Mississippians who believe in separation of the races with liberty for both."

The purpose, he said, is to "anticipate moves by agitators and devise legal means for any problem that may arise." The spokesman added the council will recommend "application of economic pressure to trouble makers," that is, deprive them of jobs.

Annual membership dues in the councils costs $5. Part of the announced aims of the organizations are to maintain White primary elections and to mobilize public opinion against segregation.

BOTH HOUSES of the Louisiana legislature have passed resolutions condemning the court for a "usurping of power."

The legislature passed three bills. These invoked police powers to maintain segregation, provided that the state board of education should not approve any integrated school and gave school superintendents the right to specify which school a child could attend.

The Mississippi legislature's proposals, along with those enacted in Louisiana, also would permit local school superintendents to assign each individual student to a specific school. They could be assigned on the basis of race.

Lawyers in the South have pointed out two other ways to maintain segregation:

1. School districts could be rigged to assign Negro and White students to certain schools.

2. Where there are now two separate schools, White and Negro, a third could be created which would be integrated. It would be up to the student to select which he would attend.

South's Desegregation Foes Parrot Reds, Speaker Says

Southern governors who object to putting the school desegregation decision of the Supreme court into effect are making the same objections as Radio Moscow, Thurgood Marshall said here Thursday.

Marshall, general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, spearheaded the legal fight which brought about the high court's ruling.

He spoke at the closing session of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers (CIO) in the Di Lido Hotel, Miami Beach.

The desegregation order has been hailed in every country in the world except the Soviet Union, its satellites and in the Union of South Africa, Marshall said.

"We should oppose racial bigotry as Americans because it is unlawful and downright immoral," he said. "There is no short cut, simple solution."

Another speaker, Rep. Emanuel Celler, Brooklyn Democrat, said that if the Democrats rewin control of Congress and he becomes chairman of the House judiciary committee in January, he will investigate Charles E. Wilson, secretary of defense and former president of General Motors Corp.

He will also probe the labor policies of GM, General Electric and Westinghouse, Celler added. He's also out to block what he called efforts by Secretary of Commerce Sinclair Weeks to bring labor unions under anti-trust laws.

Moshe Bitan, an official of Histadrut, Israel's general labor union, said there is no Communist peril in his country. He doesn't expect any, Bitan added, since it will be blocked by "a strong, free trade union movement."

4 Southern States Fight Integration

FOUR STATES still flaunt the banner of white supremacy before the United States Supreme Court.

The theory is that the court can't regulate admission to "private" schools and hence segregation could be maintained. The amendments still must be submitted to the people of the two states.

A legislative committee in Alabama has recommended that the state remove the compulsory school provision from its constitution, as South Carolina did in 1952.

Louisiana has plans to invoke its police powers to maintain the "good morals and general welfare" of its people by keeping white and Negro students apart in the grade school.

While these states have attracted much attention, a state-by-state survey by the Associated Press and the Southern Education Reporting Service (SERS) indicates the majority are setting to work on a solution.

The red-gallused Governor has said Georgia would resist integration to the last. During the recent campaign for Talmadge's job (he cannot succeed himself), the eight male candidates tried to out-shout one another on segregation, each claiming himself best fitted to maintain it.

Some candidates promised to work for amendments to the United States Constitution abolishing the Supreme Court or giving the states exclusive right to regulate school systems.

Another would move all Negroes out of Georgia.

Still another would give all pupils a choice of attending separate or integrated schools. Any student electing the integrated way would be given a psychiatric examination.

Some of the oratory was patently absurd, but the fact remains that Georgia has acted to maintain segregated schools. In addition to approving the "private school" amendments, the Georgia General Assembly has voted to cut off all financial aid to any school admitting members of different races.

WHILE GEORGIA has made most of the fuss, a statewide secret organization known as "Citizens Councils" was growing up in Mississippi's 82 counties.

A spokesman for the group —a state legislator—said the councils were composed "of freedom-loving Mississippians who believe in separation of the races with liberty for both."

The Mississippi Legislature's proposals, like those enacted in Louisiana, also would permit local school superintendents to assign each individual student to a specific school. Pupils could be assigned on the basis of race.

Lawyers in the South have suggested other ways to maintain segregation:

- School districts could be rigged to assign Negro and white students to certain schools.
- Where there are now two separate schools, white and Negro, a third accepting both races could be created. The students could decide which to attend.

IN VIEW OF the broadness of the Supreme Court decision, can attempts at evasion be upheld in Federal courts?

John T. Fey, dean of the School of Law at George Washington University, observes that various Southern States had laws excluding Negroes from voting in primaries. The Supreme Court found that, whereas the primaries were the real, decisive elections in the South, Negroes could not be barred from them.

Eventually, some states acted to abolish all laws pertaining to the conduct of primaries. The political party then became a "private club." But in a Texas case, Negroes were excluded from a primary on the "private club" theory, and the local party organization was haled into court The court said the Negroes should be allowed to participate.

Fey, speaking at a school law conference at Duke University, noted various other means of attack on the evasions proposed.

If there were no discernible state aid to privately operated public schools, he said, the evasions could be attacked from the standpoint of performance of a state function.

If state money were used to support private schools, Fey added, there would be a question of the unconstitutional use of public funds, and the creation of private schools also could result in suits based on impairment of teacher tenure contracts.

Fey concluded:

"There can be no permanent forestalling of integration in view of the existing decisions. The findings are clear—only the methods and timing are uncertain."

GOV. HUGH WHITE of Mississippi has said he would have no hesitation in invoking police powers to maintain separate schools. He appealed to the Negroes, who comprise about 50 percent of the state's population, to consider "voluntary" segregation. He called a meeting soon after the court decision and presented his plan. Ninety Negro leaders were present. Only one favored it.

Since that meeting, at which White proposed a 115-million-dollar building program to correct Negro school building inequalities, other Negro leaders have cautioned patience.

Both houses of the Louisiana Legislature have passed resolutions condemning the court for a "usurping of power."

The Legislature passed three bills. These invoked police powers to maintain segregation, provided that the State Board of Education should not approve any integrated school and gave school superintendents the right to specify which school a child could attend.

South Carolina removed a section of its constitution making a public school system mandatory at the urging of Gov. James F. Byrnes. Byrnes said this would leave the Legislature free to cope with whatever the Supreme Court decided about segregation.

Four states and the District of Columbia, meanwhile, have been moving toward implementation of the court's opinion, even though no order has been handed down.

IN BALTIMORE, integration in the city school system, which is independent of the State of Maryland, is proceeding on all levels this year. The state as a whole is awaiting the court directions before integrating but has indicated it will abide by them.

Delaware's Gov. J. Caleb Boggs asked the State Board of Education to proceed toward integration, and already nine school districts have carried it out. Wilmington, the capital and largest city, is integrating on the grammar school level. All are moving toward integration in 1955-56.

In West Virginia, Gov. William C. Marland and State School Superintendent W. W. Trent gave the counties permission to integrate if they wanted to this year. Six counties have done so. The two with the largest Negro populations are holding off until next year.

In West Virginia's Barbour County, white parents objected so violently to the move this year police were called. The Barbour County Board of Education subsequently called off the integration. One school which opened with integration was forced by white pressure to segregate again.

MISSOURI also adopted a local option system of ending segregation.

St. Louis and Kansas City together account for two thirds of the state's Negro school population—43,327 children. Both are beginning integration programs this year, to be completed by next year. Eight other Missouri communities have begun partial integration.

The District of Columbia has 106,000 public school students, about 61 percent of them Negro. All evening schools for adults have been integrated, and 1900 Negro children have been transferred to previously all-white schools. The integration program in the District is to be completed by 1955.

Oklahoma probably is in the most peculiar position of all. While it has maintained separate schools, it has a long history of racial tolerance. However, two entirely different tax structures support the white and Negro school systems. School leaders plan to continue segregation this year in order to work out a plan to merge the two school budgets.

NOTHING HAS BEEN said or done in Alabama or Virginia which would close the door on a gradual compliance with whatever detailed decision is reached by the court.

Tennessee and Kentucky have said they would abide by the court order. In fact, Tennessee is proposing to the court a program of gradual integration on the grammar school level.

The door to compliance has been left open also in Florida, Texas, North Carolina and Arkansas.

In Texas, the 21-member elected board of education has urged that "the effort to seek a satisfactory solution may be accorded intelligent, sober and dispassionate support."

Florida and North Carolina

have set up study committees, primarily to assess the problems involved rather than to seek ways of avoiding decisions.

In Arkansas, Education Commissioner Arch W. Ford has said the state would wait and see what the court decides. He said the state board would do nothing to force integration and he believes the whole problem must be worked out on the local level.

Segregation Issue Tops Two Elections

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Voters of Georgia and Louisiana decide Nov. 2 whether to take steps to block any federal effort to make them mix White and Negro children in their public schools.

They will vote on state constitutional amendments which, in Georgia, could end the public school system and in Louisiana would invoke the state's police power to continue segregation in public elementary and secondary schools.

The Supreme Court ruled May 17 that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional. But it delayed issuing an order to carry out the ruling until it hears proposals from interested states in December.

Pre-election speculation is that Georgia voters will support a proposed amendement authorizing the state legislature to make grants of state, county or city funds to private citizens for educational purposes, relieving the state of direct educational obligations.

The purpose is to lay the groundwork for eliminating the public school system, if this becomes necessary to avoid integration. South Carolina took a similar step in 1952, voting to eliminate a constitutional requirement for free public schools.

Louisiana is expected to approve a state constitutional amendment providing for separate Negro and White elementary and secondary public schools "in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, better education and the peace and good order in the state, and not because of race."

The idea is that, if the voters approve the plan, the state would be able to claim "police powers," given states under the United States Constitution's 10th Amendment, to offset the Supreme court's anti-segregation ruling undert he 14th Amendment.

The high court has not ruled on any case involving this argument for continuing segregated schools. In 1917 it denied use of the police power to maintain segregation in a property zoning case.

The Louisiana amendment also would empower the legislature to call a special election at any time to decide what to do when and if the Supreme court issues an order to carry out its anti-segregation ruling.

The last Louisiana legislature passed measures denying state funds to any integrated schools, withholding recognition of graduation certificates from such schools, and authorizing parish (county) school superintendents to assign children in advance to public schools. Voter approval of the proposed amendment apparently is necessary to underwrite these measures.

Mississippi, meanwhile, votes on a proposed amendment requiring all applicants for voting registration to be able to both read and understand the United States Constitution, instead of having it read to them as is allowed now. During legislaitve debate, it was said the amendment's purpose is to further reduce the number of Negro voters.

'Germs' Reach District, But Police, Educators Apply Quick Therapy

The "germs," which Baltimore School Supt. John H. Fischer said 10 days ago had "drifted down from Delaware," struck the District last week.

But quick therapeutic measures by Washington police and school authorities got the "germs" under control and minimized what could have been serious ravages of a pernicious disease.

The germs of which Dr. Fischer spoke manifested themselves in strikes against racial integration in public schools. In Milford, Del.; Baltimore and Washington, racial bars were wiped out in schools this fall for the first time in history.

There was a difference between reactions to the "germs" in Milford, on the one hand, and Baltimore and Washington on the other. In the little Delaware town, where 11 Negroes had been assigned to a white school, the school first was closed and then reopened on a segregated basis. In the two larger cities, neither shutdown nor resegregation was permitted. The result was that, by this week end, anti-integration strikes in both Baltimore and the District seemed to be nothing but unhappy memories.

High School Strikes

The first inkling of trouble in Washington came at three high schools—Eastern, Anacostia and McKinley—on Monday. Students and some adults milled around and absenteeism rose but no violence was reported. As the week wore on, a few other schools were affected. Police kept a stern watch, and on Wednesday, Washington School Supt. Hobart M. Corning warned students of the consequences if they refused to return to classes. Those under 16, he said, would be forced to go to school in compliance with the law; those over 16 would be expelled.

The authorities' firm stand worked. By Thursday school attendance was on the way back up. And on Friday, things were reported just about normal throughout the District.

Similarly, the germs seemed to have run their course in Baltimore, where Southern High School, focal point of disturbances in the Maryland city, had normal attendance in the closing days of the week.

Across the integration scene from Milford to Washington fell the shadow of Bryant W. Bowles, 34-year-old founder of the "National Association for the Advancement of White People." A Florida native with a Baltimore police record and a Washington headquarters (1319 F street N.W.), Mr. Bowles was one of the organizers of the Milford trouble and had put in appearances where strikers had gathered in Baltimore and Washington.

His official insistence on nonviolence among demonstrators contrasted strangely with his repeated personal stand that his children would never go to school with Negroes "as long as there is breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

The doors of the Fulton County Court House will be thrown open [illegible] as the county's one hundredth anniversary nears a swiftly approaching climax, linked on one hand with evidence of progress and on the other with an active part in a last ditch effort to place violation to the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-school segregation ruling.

From 1854 to 1954 — one hundred years — is a long way back before [illegible] angry Sherman lighted his unforgetful torch and bore down on Atlanta with a vengeance on [illegible].

Of course today finds a big difference in the picture, admittedly still far from approaching perfection. The sign ordering Negroes to drink from separate water fountains have disappeared from the court house building, and the only visible evidence of bias lies in separate toilets and division of jobs; with Negroes serving only as maids and [illegible].

PARADE FEATURE

Last night a group of historical floats attempted to depict the milestones of the past 100 years of the county. The Citizens Trust Bank, which was invited to join in festivities, sent along a float describing higher education for Negroes in Fulton County.

It was designed by Miss Jenelsie [illegible], art instructor at Spelman college and featured color paintings of campus buildings local Negro colleges and universities.

Huge, happy balloons delighted countless children, and on moved the parade to tell what went on during the past one hundred years. Absent was the story of William Oliver's fight for life from a Georgia [illegible], or the indignities still suffered by Negroes on Atlanta street cars in this parade of history.

Music, music was everywhere with huge bands and joyful lightness, by a Southern community which openly and proudly proclaimed itself the "greatest" center of Negro colleges and universities.

The theme of the floats was "Now and Then." To celebrate the centennial, a complete extensive program by public and private schools, parks and dance halls, remained at the historic court house, which has been the scene of happiness and heartbreak for so many Georgians; an unusually large ratio of them being Negroes.

Actually the "Now and Then" theme was used to depict so-called milestones in the history of the county. The Negro float on education gains importance in connection with the year 1869, opening date of Atlanta University, which is described as the "beginning of the Negro Educational Center."

Another "milestone is recorded as "1848-1908" with Joel Chandler Harris and his creation of "Uncle Remus." Among other milestones is Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With The Wind", opening of Georgia Tech in 1888, erection of Atlanta's first "skyscraper" in 1891 at Pryor and Edgewood Avenue, N. E.

This is to be a story of one hundred years, and though it mainly deals with what one race has done, it necessarily shows that Fulton County is expanding with a hope for a brighter future in the heart of the liberal.

Governor Nominee In Georgia Renews Segregation Pledge

By The Associated Press

MACON, Ga., Oct. 1.—Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin yesterday launched his campaign for passage of the so-called private school amendment as he accepted the formal Democratic nomination as Governor of Georgia.

To delegates to the State Democratic convention, Mr. Griffin renewed his pledge that "during the time I am Governor there will be no mixed schools or colleges in Georgia."

But he added that passage of the school segregation amendment—which he labelled a second bill of rights for the people of our State"—is essential if segregated schools are to be preserved.

Won Primary Sept. 8.

The principal business of the convention was to give Mr. Griffin the nomination he won in the September 8 primary after a heated campaign with eight opponents. Nomination in the Democratic primary is the same as being elected in Georgia.

Mr. Griffin devoted the greater portion of his acceptance speech to the segregation issue, but in terms more temperate than some of his campaign speeches.

In contrast to a campaign declaration to use all means, including the militia and State

MACON, Sept. 30—The Georgia Democratic Party Thursday asked Congress to strip the United States Supreme Court of all authority to decide cases involving the public schools of this or any other state.

The party, in its convention here to nominate candidates for state offices, joined with Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin in kicking off a campaign seeking passage of a so-called "private school" constitutional amendment.

It deplored the conduct of the present leadership of the Georgia Education Assn. for "causing the teaching profession of this state to be credited in the national press with acts and opinions contrary to the actual views of Georgia teachers." (It noted that the Georgia delegation to the National Education Assn. voted for a resolution "favoring mixing of the races.")

ATTACKS EISENHOWER

The party labeled the Southern Regional Council a "menace to Georgia institutions" for working to carry out the court decision, and it declared that the people, "by force of their opinions," should drive this organization out of Georgia.

The Democrats violently attacked President Eisenhower, Chief Justice Warren, and U.S. Atty. Gen. Brownell. They pledged all of their nominees to state and congressional offices to use all the resources of the state and every power at their disposal to preserve segregation, notwithstanding the federal court decision.

The party asked Georgia's congressional delegation to introduce in Congress amendments to the Federal Judiciary Act so that the federal courts, including the Supreme Court, may be stripped of power to decide cases involving the public schools in the states.

The convention called on all loyal Georgia Democrats to vote for the proposed constitutional amendment, which, it said, would make it possible for the state to subsidize its children in the event that federal courts close down public segregated schools.

PRAISES TALMADGE

Another resolution declared that all persons who participated in the Fifth District Democratic primary are honor-bound to support Rep. James C. Davis in the general election against a Republican challenger.

Gov. Talmadge's administration was highly praised by the convention.

Gov.-Nominate Griffin, who feuded with the Atlanta newspapers during his campaign, urged the papers to work with him in passing the proposed constitutional amendment and in solving the school segregation problem.

"This is not just Griffin's baby," he said to the press in an addition to his prepared text. "It is the baby of the people of Georgia, and I trust the press will work shoulder-to-shoulder with me."

The governor - nominate proclaimed, as he did in his campaign, that Georgia's schools will not be mixed during his administration. This brought cheers from the vast audience.

He pointed to the trouble in border states caused by the court decision, and declared Georgians, too, will resist the decision.

NO VIOLENCE

However, Griffin declared: "There must be no violence of any kind in our state."

He said Georgia can solve the matter by passing the constitutional amendment and making it possible for the Legislature "to provide for free, separate education of the races outside the terms of the Supreme Court ruling."

Both Griffin and the keynote speaker, Carey Skelton of Hartwell, emphasized and re-emphasized that the amendment would be put into effect only as a "last resort."

So did Ernest Vandiver, the nominee for lieutenant governor, who urged its adoption. Vandiver said that as long as the South wants segregation it will have segregation.

Skelton declared that Georgians will not tolerate the mixing of the races. He said he was not preaching rebellion or advocating lawlessness, nor did he propose that Georgia secede from the Union or indulge in violence.

HITS PAPERS

"This situation can be handled within the law, and without placing ourselves in contempt of the United States Supreme Court," Skelton asserted. "As a last resort, we will simply place our schools outside the court's jurisdiction."

Skelton attacked the "foreign-owned newspapers" and defended the county unit system.

In a telegram to Griffin from Wyoming, Gov. Talmadge pledged his cooperation to the new administration and expressed confidence Griffin will give Georgia a courageous and constructive administration.

Griffin and Sen. Russell, who was seated on the platform, exchanged promises of cooperation.

COLLINS SAYS:

Pvt. School Plan Would Wreck Educ.

(By International News Service)

Georgia's State School Superintendent launched a speaking campaign against the so-called private school amendment Friday, declaring it would "wreck" education in the State.

Dr. M. D. Collins told a district meeting of the Georgia Education Association in Atlanta, "There is something tremendously dangerous about this proposal." He added:

"It will wreck our public school program and we just can't idly sit by and let it happen."

Collins will speak at other similar meetings throughout the State next week, urging teachers to fight the amendment which goes before the people in the November 2 general election.

Governor Herman Talmadge and Governor-elect Marvin Griffin are pressing for passage of the Constitutional Amendment which would permit the Legislature to grant State money to private individuals for educational purposes. Passage of the amendment is part of State leaders' plan for maintaining school segregation in Georgia.

Segregation Upheld by Rebel Yells

By ALBERT RILEY
Constitution Staff Writer

MACON, Sept. 30—Georgia Democrats almost unfurled the Stars and Bars of the Confederacy here Thursday as they whistled, shouted and applauded state convention speakers that voiced defiance of the Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregation in public schools.

The State Democratic caucus was Marvin Griffin's show as he stepped squarely into the spotlight to be officially nominated as the party's candidate for governor, his election a foregone conclusion.

Six thousand of his personal and political friends from every corner of the state overflowed Macon's big municipal auditorium on a sweltering day to hail Griffin's victory as the gubernatorial candidate who claimed to be most decisively pledged to uphold segregation in Georgia.

They came also to applaud the young Air Force veteran, Ernest Vandiver, as their next lieutenant governor—to elect John Sammons Bell, young Atlanta attorney, as the state party chairman and to hear a stirring keynote address from Carey Skelton of Elberton, temporary chairman of the convention.

But the popular Sen. Richard B. Russell brought the huge crowd to its feet with an unexpected appearance on the platform.

And, it was Shep Baldwin, veteran politico, ex-prosecutor and fiery orator from Milledgeville, who set the shirt-sleeved convention on fire as the Griffin supporters and Talmadge faithful waited patiently for the governor-nominate to appear.

WHOOPING REACTION

It was Baldwin's job to follow Grady Rawls of Albany and Roger Lawson of Hawkinsville to the microphone to eulogize and second the nomination of Griffin for governor.

He did it to the whooping satisfaction of the perspiring delegates as he also voiced contemptuous opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Through all of this sat a forlorn figure on the stage. It was M. E. Thompson, the former acting governor who seemed so certain a few weeks ago that it would be himself and not Marvin Griffin who would be the man of the hour at this convention.

Thompson listened grimly and attentively to the speakers and got a generous applause from the Griffin crowd when he was introduced. The applause was followed immediately by a buzz of conversation and chuckles from the delegates who had helped defeat Thompson Sept. 8.

WAVES FLAG OF SOUTH

With nary a mention of Robert E. Lee or Alev Stephens or any other Confederate hero, Shep Baldwin brought a somewhat fresh approach to his speech waving the flag of the Southland.

Griffin, Bell, Skelton, Vandiver and other speakers castigated the U.S. Supreme Court in their speeches, but it was Baldwin who hit hardest.

He told the crowd not to stand in awe of the Supreme Court, nor of the President of the United States as he termed the anti-segregation decision "an unholy and illegal" ruling.

And he denounced President Eisenhower under whose administration the decree was handed down.

Declaring that the President has called on Southern boys to join the armed forces and then "made them sleep with Niggers," Baldwin said:

"What I'd like to know is who invites him down to Georgia to play golf. It certainly is not me. I don't believe he could be elected dog catcher in any county in Georgia."

Warning the Supreme Court that if it attempts to enforce the anti-segregation ruling in Georgia it will be met "by a bulldog in everybody's backyard," Baldwin said, "a mighty arm of men and women of Georgia would rise up to fight such action."

Lauding Griffin's record as a combat officer in the South Pacific during World War II, Baldwin said Griffin did not stand in awe of the emperor of Japan and would not stand in awe of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Baldwin urged the shouting Georgia Democrats to tell the high court that "you shall not press down in the guise of justice a crown of thorns on the head of the state of Georgia; you shall not crucify the Empire State of the South on a politically inspired cross of the law."

The Atlanta newspapers, which opposed Griffin and Thompson with equal fervor in the campaign, came in for a lambasting from the speakers, chiefly Carey Skelton.

BLASTS NEWSPAPERS

As convention keynoter, Skelton opened his speech by declaring that "a once prominent political writer has just passed away." That writer's epitaph begins, Skelton said, with these words:

"Here lies the remains of Piney Woods Pete, who died from eating black crow meat."

Among state officials and party leaders introduced from the platform were Mrs. Eugene Talmadge, known affectionately as "Miss Mitt," along with Mrs. Julius Y. Talmadge, member of the State Board of Education, and Mrs. Iris Blitch, present state senator and Democratic national committeewoman who has been nominated to Congress from the Eighth District.

Congressmen James C. Davis of Atlanta, Paul Brown of Elberton, E. L. (Tick) Forrester of Leesburg were introduced along with Jack Flynt, president of the Georgia Bar Assn. and congressman-nominate from the Fourth District.

The huge crowd, which raised county banners pledging their support of Griffin, waited patiently for his appearance and acceptance speech, giving him an ovation and making him take off his coat to speak when he came smilingly onto the stage.

That was the climax, and when Griffin had finished speaking the crowd broke up and drifted away, leaving only a handful to conduct the convention's final business.

As the delegates departed from Macon, a Negro high school football parade weaved down Cherry street in front of the Dempsey hotel.

Georgia Teachers To March To Polls Against 'Private' Plan

Daily World Fri. 10-8-54
Atlanta, Ga.

Georgia teachers plan an organized march on the polls to save the state's public school system, it was reported by the Georgia Education Association as 300 school supervisors converged on Augusta for a three-day curriculum planning conference.

P. 1

Harold Saxon, GEA's executive secretary, in soliciting opposition to the private school proposal, described it as "fantastic."

Saxon said:

"There is no rush. It is not necessary to change our state constitution in the November general election because it is generally agreed that this matter will be kept in the courts for a long time, and the people need more time to study and discuss the far-reaching implications of this proposed amendment."

Saxon asked:

1. "What provisions are to be made for disposal of the near billion investment in the public schools and university buildings and equipment?"

2. "Is a 'private' school with any vestige of state, county or municipal control, supported by public tax funds granted to citizens for educational purposes, itself constitutional?"

3. "If this 'private school' plan is itself declared unconstitutional, what then?"

Daily World

In regards to the attorney general's ruling that the amendment would not kill the teachers retirement system, Saxon declared:

"The attorney general has affirmed, as of now, protection of teachers retirement and employees retirement is frozen into the present constitution. The question with teachers and other state employees is whether the provision of constitutional amendment No. 4, which states 'notwithstanding any other provision of this constitution,' is in conflict with the provision freezing protection of teachers retirement and employees retirement in the present constitution. There are 40,000 members of the teachers and employees retirement system who are vitally concerned."

Statewide Group To Be Organized In Fight Against School Proposal

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. p. 1
Sat. 10-9-54

A statewide citizens group will be organized to fight the proposed private school amendment, former U.S. Judge M. Neil Andrews of LaFayette announced Friday night.

Andrews blasted the proposed amendment in a statement.

"The fundamental objection to destroying Georgia's public school system, the oldest secular pubic school system in America, is that it would deprive Georgia's children of an opportunity for an education," Andrews said.

"The fundamental objection to a state-subsidized private school system is that it would deprive the people of control over their children's education," he declared.

Many school sites would revert to original owners if public schools were abolished, Andrews said. These sites were granted with the provision that they would revert to their original owners if the property is ever used for any purpose other than public schools, he explained.

"Under the amendment, 6,072 locally-owned school buildings would be given away, leased to operators of private schools, or lost altogether," Andrews continued.

The private school plan would end any possibility of operating separate schools for the races, Andrews said.

"It is significant that the only mixed schools operating today in the South are private schools in North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas," Andrews said.

At Rome Friday, State School Supt. M. D. Collins told 2,000 teachers attending a Georgia Education Assn. seventh district meeting that Georgia already has a plan which will assure segregation in schools—without voting to scrap its public school system.

"The present State Constitution requires that funds for operating a school district be cut off automatically in event a school opens its doors to both white and Negro children," Collins declared.

Collins said this is a sufficient guarantee against mixed schools. The private school amendment is unnecessary and ill-advised, he asserted.

"We should not make a mistake on the local level just because a mistake has been made on the national level," the state school superintendent said.

Meanwhile, the Georgia Education Commission, headed by Gov. Talmadge, aimed an appeal to the teachers. It mailed out 30,000 copies of its replies to questions raised by the Georgia Education Assn. about the amendment. The replies went to teachers, board members, superintendents and county officials.

Talmadge Hits Court at Editor Rally

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 10-9-54 p. 1

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Oct. 8 (AP)—Governor Talmadge of Georgia, declaring the Supreme Court overstepped its constitutional bounds in ruling against public school segregation, said today that the court has set itself up "as a glorified board of education."

Talmadge's remarks came as he and another Democratic governor —Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey—discussed the court's decision and its effect on the South.

Meyner, defending the decision, asserted New Jersey has solved the problem of segregation.

Talmadge predicted the court's ruling would destroy Georgia's modern public school system.

The forum for the governors' remarks was the National Conference of Editorial Writers. The segregation issue was raised in a question period after both governors had delivered luncheon addresses.

Talmadge, devoting most of his address to the South's educational, industrial and agricultural progress, said Georgia's schools are founded on a constitutional provision calling for segregation. Once segregation is eliminated, there no longer will be a provision for tax-supported public schools, he added.

Talmadge usged the editors "to tell the truth about the South," saying that misleading books and articles had caused other sections to regard the region "as one of Tobacco Roads, chain gangs and race baiting."

He said the court, in ruling against segregated schools, had "arrogated the power to amend the Constitution" and to make laws, setting itself up as a "glorified board of education."

State Municipal Group Endorses School Plan

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 10-9-54 p. 1

By ALBERT RILEY
Constitution Staff Writer

SAVANNAH, Oct. 8—The Georgia Municipal Assn. voted Friday night to endorse the so-called "private school" amendment after hearing Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin plead with them to support it.

The unexpected action came on a voice vote when Mayor Taxi Smith of Albany introduced a resolution placing the association squarely behind the constitutional amendment which will be voted upon Nov. 2.

Smith's surprise move only minutes before adjournment came after the GMA's resolution committee had turned the proposal down, neither approving nor disapproving it.

Mayor Sam Welsch of Marietta, presiding, called for a voice vote on adoption of the resolution. It passed with many delegates obviously not voting. There was a small scattering of "no" votes.

Atlanta's Mayor Hartsfield later asked Welsch formally to record him as voting against the resolution. A few hours earlier a similar resolution had been rejected by the Georgia City Managers Assn., which also is meeting here.

Griffin called on the association to support the amendment as the only "last resort" insurance for the preservation of free, segregated school in Georgia.

But Griffin said the proposed constitutional amendment to permit the granting of public funds to individuals for education has been erroneously called a "private school" plan.

The amendment, he said, is only permissive and would be used only as "a last-ditch fight against a social monstrosity which the federal courts seem determined to ram down our throats."

Griffin said that the General Assembly has the right to abolish the present school system, without the amendment by repealing statutes setting up the present school system.

What the Legislature does not have the power to do, he said, is to grant funds to private citizens for education.

And he declared that any private school plan would be used "only in counties or cities where the federal judiciary orders mixed schools."

Sat. 10-9-54

The amendment, he vowed, is no plan by "scheming politicians" to abolish public schools, but is the "Georgia way of life insurance."

SHARE OF GAS TAX

Before Griffin spoke, the association adopted resolutions asking the Legislature to give cities and towns a portion of state gasoline taxes collected within municipalities, and to exempt cities and towns from such taxes on fuel used in their own vehicles.

The association also asked that the state sales tax be eliminated from municipal construction materials, and that the State Highway Department be allowed to maintain state routes within the limits of cities and towns.

Also approved were resolutions offered by the City of Atlanta, calling for legislation to empower all municipal courts to try traffic misdemeanors, and to authorize cities and towns to control bus and truck routes within their corporate limits.

ELECT MARIETTA MAYOR

Welsch was elected president of the association for the coming year with Mayor Frank Tigner of LaGrange, elected vice president. Zach Arnold of Atlanta, was re-elected secretary, and B. Graham West of Atlanta, was renamed treasurer.

Earlier in the day, the association heard appeals for more vigorous action in city planning and civil defense.

BACKBONE OF STATE

And the mayors and city managers also heard the Georgia Municipal Tax Study Committee indicate that it may recommend to the Legislature that municipalities be permitted to levy sales and salary taxes.

Rep. Hoke Smith of Fulton County, chairman and spokesman for the committee, told the mayors and city managers that they should not go to the state government seeking handouts. But he said the cities and towns of Georgia for too long have been treate like orphans, whereas they are becoming the real backbone of the state.

Sen. William T. Dean of Columbus, declared that all the cities and towns are asking now is to be allowed to do what the state and Federal governments are doing in the fields of taxation.

GEORGIA PARTY AID SET IN BIAS FIGHT

Democrats' Machinery to Back School Segregation Drive, Talmadge, Chairman Say

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Sept. 13.—The full force of the Georgia Democratic party machinery will be employed in a campaign for approval of a constitutional amendment designed to maintain segregation in the public schools.

This was announced today by Gov. Herman Talmadge and James A. Peters, chairman of the Democratic State Committee.

The amendment, to be voted upon in the November general election, would give the Georgia Legislature authority to turn public schools over to private individuals and groups for operation.

Governor Talmadge, who advanced the amendment proposal some months ago, asserted that plans and strategy to keep the schools segregated would have to come from Marvin Griffin, who was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Governor last week. In this state, that means election.

Mr. Griffin campaigned on a platform endorsing the Talmadge "private school" plan.

Mr. Peters, after pledging the party's support of the private school measure, said he was "sure" that the state Democratic convention would vote its approval of the state constitutional amendment when it convened in Macon Sept. 29.

"Unquestionably," the Democratic chairman stated, "the people who voted for Marvin Griffin were in favor of the school amendment, and no doubt many of the others were, too."

Actual plans to put the party machinery in motion to campaign for the amendment will be set up during the convention. Mr. Griffin will be in charge of the reorganization of the party at that time.

In a statement today, giving his own "analysis" of the election, Governor Talmadge described the next four years as "probably the most crucial period in the history of our state.

"Maintaining segregation will be Georgia's greatest and most serious problem," he said.

"The people of Georgia were looking for two things in the next Governor," Mr. Talmadge emphasized, "a man they thought would under all hazards preserve segregation and a man they thought would under all hazards preserve segregation and a man they thought would continue the constructive policies of this administration substantially along the present lines."

The Governor denied that he was a "combination of Machiavelli, Crump and Huey Long" and had manipulated the primary last week and pledged his support "in all things" to the newly nominated slate of state officers.

Talmadge Defends Segregation

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Oct. 8 (AP).—Gov. Herman Talmadge, of Georgia, appealing to the nation's editorial writers to tell what he called the truth about Southern problems, declared today that the South "had no race problem before the Supreme Court ruled, and has none now."

Gov. Talmadge told the National Conference of Editorial Writers that a majority of both whites and Negroes in the South agreed that segregation is a "matter of practical human relations which works in the best interests of both races." He said these majorities will insist that segregation be maintained despite the court's ruling on school segregation.

Appealing for understanding of the South, Gov. Talmadge said: "In these times of crisis it is essential that the people of our great nation understand one another, and through understanding, overcome regional differences. . . .

"Unfortunately this mutual understanding has been hampered because of outright falsehoods told about the South and Southerners by purveyors of literary filth who would rather make a dollar than tell the truth. Too many people in other sections have formed their opinions of the South through reading such books and articles, and as a result think of our region as one of Tobacco Roads, chain gangs and race baiting."

Appearing with Gov. Talmadge on the program was Gov. Robert D. Meyner of New Jersey, who spoke principally of his relations with the press.

Group Fights Talmadge's School Plan

ATLANTA, Oct. 9 (AP).—A Georgia-wide committee will fight the Gov. Herman Talmadge-sponsored "private school" constitutional amendment which goes to the voters on November 2.

Former United States Judge Neil Andrews of Lafayette announced formation of the organization and issued this statement:

"The fundamental objections to destroying Georgia's public school system, the oldest secular, public school system in America, is that it would deprive Georgia's children of an opportunity for an education. The fundamental objection to a State-subsidized private school system is that it would deprive the people of control over their children's education."

Andrews said that under the amendment "6172 locally owned school buildings would be given away, leased to operators of private schools, or lost altogether."

'Private School' Plan Is Approved, 13 to 3, By State Commission

Caldwell Fears Ruin Of System

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Three career school men joined 10 other members of the Georgia Education Commission Tuesday in urging Georgians to approve the so-called "private school" constitutional amendment as a means of preserving segregation. There were only three votes against the recommendation.

The action came after Chancellor Harmon Caldwell warned that the University System could appreciation for the recommenda tion.

Before taking action, the commission received an official opinion from Atty. Gen. Cook declaring neither the state nor its subdivisions can levy or spend tax funds to operate mixed schools.

Durwood Pye, commission secretary, said Georgia can do nothing unless the amendment is passed. It is prevented by its own Constitution from operating mixed schools and it would be prevented by the federal courts from operating segregated schools, Pye said.

The commission interrupted its session briefly to greet U.S. Sen. George, who was visiting in the State Capitol. The senator told newsmen he had no opinion to offer on the "private school" amendment, but reiterated that he considers the court decision on segregation a calamity.

Talmadge declared the people's representatives — the legislators — will make the decisions.

The commission asked the Law Department to draft enabling legislation for the constitutional amendment if it passes Nov. 2. The legislation would seek to give students educational grants to attend "private" segregated schools if public segregated schools are abolished. The Law Department will submit its drafts to the commission for approval before they go to the General Assembly. The proposed legislation would be made public 30 days before the Legislature convenes.

Others absent from Tuesday's session were Speaker Pro Tem George Smith II, former Congressman John Wood, regent Charlie Bloch and Mrs. Ralph Hobbs.

Gov.-Nominate Griffin expressed disintegrate if it changes from a public to private status. He said it would lose its accredited standing, would lose hundreds of students who would transfer to other colleges, and would require additional state funds to offset loss of federal money.

BACKS DECISION

However, the chancellor voted for the commission's recommendation and put his faith in the Georgia Legislature to take care of the University System.

Former President Harvey Cutts of the Georgia Education Association (which is fighting the amendment) and School Supt. Mark Smith of Macon were the other two school men joining Chancellor Caldwell in voting for the report.

State School Supt. M. D. Collins shouted, "No," on the roll call, after arguing against the recommendation.

Miss Ira Darrell, Atlanta school superintendent and only other career school person on the 22-member group, was absent.

JOIN SUPPORTERS

Chairman Robert Arnold of the Board of Regents and Chairman George Whitman Jr. of the State Board of Education joined Gov. Talmadge, Gov.-Nominate Griffin, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, W. S. Mann, John Sammons Bell and Reps. Frank Twitty and Battle Hall in supporting the report.

State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr., chairman of the University Building Authority, raised a number of questions during the discussion. On the roll call, he said, he voted "yes" only to let the people decide for themselves.

Regent Roy Harris and House Speaker Fred Hand, chairman of the State School Building Authority, joined Collins in voting against the report.

HARRIS PREDICTION

Harris predicted the courts will hold unconstitutional any system which calls itself "private" while being regulated and financed by the state. Hand asked how the school building bonds could be paid off if the state can appropriate funds "only" to individual children.

Cutts insisted that the people themselves, make the final decision on what type schools they want in event a federal decree closes the present schools. He objected to delegating this final decision to the General Assembly.

Griffin Charges Misrepresentation By Foes of Segregation Amendment

By JOHN CONSTABLE
Constitution Staff Writer

WOODBURY, Oct. 13 — Gov. Nominate Marvin Griffin Wednesday denounced what he termed misrepresentation of the facts concerning the proposed state constitutional Amendment Four and called on farmers to line up as one man in support of the amendment to preserve school segregation.

Speaking at the fifth annual Woodbury Pimiento Festival, Griffin said the proposed amendment should be called the "segregation amendment" rather than the "private school amendment."

Griffin said he had never seen more misrepresentation of facts than "we are confronted with by the enemies of the amendment and of the Georgia way of life."

He termed the greatest misrepresentation is the one that says the amendment is designed to enable the Legislature to destroy public schools." The speaker asserted that the General Assembly already could destroy the school system if it desired and the amendment is designed merely to be used in a "last ditch fight" to preserve school segregation.

Other statements the governor-nominate labeled as erroneous are that the amendment would "destroy the teacher retirement system, destroy the school transportation system and destroy the school lunchroom program."

Griffin praised the pimiento growers and processors for an "excellent job in helping elevate farm economy and industry," and said he would like to see industry of this nature throughout the state.

Griffin was introduced by M. O. Campbell, master of ceremonies for the occasion.

Prior to the governor-nominate's speech, visitors to the "Pimiento Capitol of the World" were treated to a parade of floats and bands over which pimientos and pretty girls reigned.

The Molena Turkey Festival, slated in Thomaston Oct. 21, received advance publicity when its float won first place in the senior division. The float, sponsored by the Georgia Turkey Assn., depicted a Pilgrim Thanksgiving scene.

Molena also took first honors in the junior division of the float contest when the city's Boy Scouts won with a chuck wagon scene with Scouts preparing camping food.

The Greenville Boy Scouts won second place in the senior division and the City of Manchester float on "youth" won third place. Talbot High school senior class placed second in the junior division with Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. The dwarfs and the wicked queen trailed the glass covered casket of Snow White along the parade route.

In night festivities following the barbecue dinner, Miss Harriet Hardaway of Greenville won first place in the beauty contest and reigned over the Pimiento Ball which concluded the festivities. The new pimiento queen was crowned by Miss Ann Robertson of Manchester, 1953 queen.

Second and third place in the beauty contest were Miss Jeannette Odom of Turin and Miss Barbara Jean McCoy of Manchester.

Winners in the window-decorating contest, which depicted king pimiento, were Reeves Lumber Co., first; Carroll Mercantile Co., second, and Woodbury Banking Co., third.

School Plan Gets Triple Lambasting

McClatchey Rips 'Quack Medicine'

By ANNE GOWEN

The so-called private school amendment was the subject of three new attacks from opponents Tuesday.

1. Devereaux McClatchey, president of the Atlanta Board of Education, denounced it as a "quack medicine" which, he said, will not cure Georgia's school segregation problem.

2. The Georgia League of Women Voters demanded that its supporters tell who would handle state education funds under a private school plan.

3. Fulton Rep. Ham Lokey criticized proponents of the amendment for "saying it is a last resort, but urging its passage now."

McClatchey, who is an attorney, told the Civitan Club of Atlanta that conversion of the state's public schools into a private system, for which the amendment paves the way, would not stand up in court.

"A PRETENSE"

McClatchey said present schools cannot be kept operating without some measure of public control. Without any public control exercised, he said, the U.S. Supreme Court would reject the private school plan as a "pretense."

He voiced his conviction that "custom" will be strong enough to force maintenance of separate schools for whites and Negroes. "Negro parents will not force their children into schools where they would be hostilely received," he declared.

The League, in a statement, questioned whether approximately $122,000,000 of state school money now appropriated annually would be spent to the advantage of Georgia's children or to the advantage of "hand-picked individuals in your community," under the private school plan.

The League also asked the plan's supporters to tell how federal aid to state schools would be affected and how individuals would be able to make long-range improvements in schools.

CALLS IT PREMATURE

Lokey, speaking to the Tuxedo Civic Club, said the amendment is "premature."

"When, and if, we decide as a last resort to throw away our public schools, there would be plenty of time to pass such an amendment," Lokey said.

McClatchey said the amendment would give the Legislature "a blank check to spend the state's money as it wants to."

He said the amendment would take precedence over a constitutional provision forbidding the Legislature to give public money to private parties.

ASKS "WISER COURSE"

He said "more mature thought and wiser counsel" could find a way to maintain separate schools legally.

An attempt to put the private school plan into effect would mean "chaos, confusion, lost time and a setback for education from which it would take Georgia years to recover," McClatchey said.

"A quack medicine is worse than none at all. I hope the people of Georgia will not trade the birthright of their children and grandchildren for this mess of pottage," he said.

William J. Carter, 1953 Civitan president, officially thanked McClatchey for "pointing out the danger in cutting a door which politicians may be able to open for their own gain.

Meanwhile, the Morris Brandon PTA went on record Tuesday night as favoring the "preservation of our constitutionally protected public school system" and opposing the so-called private school amendment.

'PRIVATE SCHOOL' AMENDMENT PROS AND CONS

Journal & Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 10-17-54

Georgia's Education System Stands at Fork in Road

By ANNE GOWEN

Sixteen days from now Georgians will vote on probably the most important piece of school legislation in the state's history.

They will okay or vote down the constitutional amendment which would allow the state to discharge its responsibility for education by giving each child an allotment of money for his schooling.

The amendment, to be submitted in the Nov. 2 general election, would pave the way to convert the public schools into a private school system.

Both sides—those who want the amendment adopted and those who want it defeated—agree that the voters' decision will shape Georgia education for decades to come.

Section E.

Tradition Covers 221 Years

Amendment supporters say it must be adopted as a safeguard against integration of the races in schools. Antiamendment leaders, who contend it would wreck education, say segregation can be maintained without giving up public schools.

Each side says its way is the best way to protect Georgia's educational system.

The public school system which is the subject of this controversy began to take substance and shape after the War Between the States, but the tradition on which it rested dates back 221 years.

It was in October, 1733, that Christopher Ortman, a German schoolmaster, landed at Savannah to set up a school for Salzburgers who settled at nearby Ebenezer.

His career was short because he was expected to teach English to the German colonists and he had only a stumbling knowledge of the language. But other teachers followed in Ortman's footsteps and by the middle of the 18th century there were several private and church schools in the Georgia colony.

In 1777, with Georgia troops battling against the British, a constitutional convention met in Savannah and made the first provision for public, tax-supported schools.

The convention wrote into the 1777 constitution a provision that "schools shall be erected in each county and supported at the general expense of the state, as the legislature shall hereafter point out."

In 1783 Gov. Lyman Hall asked the Legislature to "lay an early foundation for endowing seminaries of learning" and the state made a move to give financial aid to academies which had grown up in each county and chartered the University of Georgia.

GEORGIA VOTERS TO DECIDE FUTURE OF SCHOOLS NOV. 2
Will It Go "Private"?—Atlanta's Sylvan Hills High School

In 1817 the state realized it must play a direct part in education and the Legislature set up a $250,000 "poor school fund."

The state agreed to use this money to teach the children of white parents who were too poor to meet the expense themselves. Children whose parents paid only 50 cents or less a year in state taxes were eligible for three years' school from the fund.

But the 1817 Legislature had not considered the pride of the early Georgians. Many poor Georgians shunned state help because they did not want to be adjudged legally poor. Others just were not interested in education.

The poor school system was termed "miserably defective" in the report of a legislative investigating committee in 1829.

Set Up Real School System

Seven years later the Legislature set up a commission to study schools in other states and Europe and, in 1837 and 1838, it passed laws which set up a real common school system.

The laws, which were to have become effective in 1839, set up an intricate organization for educating all children between the ages of 5 and 15. They provided that the state would allot school money to the counties according to the number of white school children and allowed the counties to supplement this with local taxes.

But the 1840 Legislature, troubled over finances after the serious depression of 1837, repealed the common school laws and education remained a matter of private and parochial enterprise.

In 1858 the Legislature appropriated $100,000 a year to establish free schools, but the 1861-65 war halted efforts to carry out this plan.

Section 3F

Schools were closed during the War Between the States, but as soon as the flames died down Georgians set about reopening them.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Legislature passed its first effective public school law in 1870 and in 1877 a tax-supported, segregated school system was written into the state constitution.

Sun. 10-17-54

That provision firmly established the state's duty to educate all of its children at state expense. From then until now, the battle for better education has been fought within its framework.

Term It 'Dangerous'

Leaders in the opposition to the socalled "private school" amendment point out that adoption of the amendment would strike this educational guarantee from the constitution and they maintain it would be dangerous for the people to give it up.

Pro-amendment leaders say the amendment is the only way to separate schools for white and Negro pupils. They say removal of the guarantee will not materially affect operation of the schools.

After 1877 the school system expanded gradually. In 1904 the Legislature allowed local governmental divisions smaller than counties to levy taxes for schools.

State Bridged Gap

The 1877 constitution provided only for elementary grade education and the university system. In 1910 the state bridged the gap by providing for tax-supported high schools.

Laws in 1916 made elementary school attendance compulsory and provided that the same textbooks should be used over the state.

Free textbooks came in 1937, along with laws requiring schools to be open at least seven months a year and establishing a state board of education. In 1947 each county was required to have 12 grades in its public schools.

A big step in school improvement was taken in 1949 when the Legislature passed the Minimum Foundation for Education program to bring all public schools — rural and city — up to the same standard.

Two years later the State School Building Authority began its work and Georgians began paying sales taxes to foot the bill. Education grew into a $115,000,000-a-year state-owned and state-operated enterprise.

Now, because of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation of the races in the schools, Georgia's education system stands at the fork in the road.

And the people of Georgia, who must decide on Nov. 2 which fork to take, are confronted with a challenge even greater than that which faced the German schoolmaster when he stepped onto the Savannah pier 221 years ago.

All Georgia Concerned In School Amendment

Journal & Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Sun. 10-17-54

THE MOST IMPORTANT issue before the people of Georgia is the so-called "private school amendment."

Nothing so fundamental, so basic in the Georgia way of life, has confronted the people of the state in this century.

The amendment, if passed by the people and implemented by the General Assembly, would affect the schools, the educational system, and all the children of Georgia.

Section 2-E

There is overwhelming agreement in Georgia that segregation is our desire and our purpose.

But there is disagreement about the amendment being the only plan for maintaining segregation.

In the midst of the increasing debate on the issue, it seems wise to print the amendment itself, presenting it to all the people.

This is the amendment:

SECTION XIII, PARAGRAPH I—Grants for Education: Notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution, the General Assembly may by law provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes, in discharge of all obligation of the state to provide education for its citizens.

Here is an issue that every Georgian, out of loyalty to his state and love of his children, is called upon to consider for himself.

No man can permit any other man, or any group or organization, to settle this issue for him.

It is the obligation of every man and woman in Georgia to read the amendment, to study it as a whole and in each part, and to form his or her individual opinion about it.

School Plan Foes Tell Teachers To Refuse To Be Intimidated

Opponents of the private school amendment opened fire on many fronts Tuesday, lashing attempts of proponents to "intimidate school leaders, teachers and parents of school children" into silence.

Rep. Charlie Gowen of Glynn County, unsuccessful gubernatorial candidate, warned Georgians the private school plan will protect segregation only a few months, but it could deny an educational opportunity to children for a generation.

BELL'S DEFENSE

State Democratic Chairman John Sammons Bell came to the defense of the plan. He charged that opponents are raising "fancied objections" to the "segregation amendment" just as a "smokescreen." He declared the opponents want to keep the Legislature's hands tied so Georgia can do nothing but surrender on the issue. Adoption of the amendment, he said, will pave the way for Georgia to continue free, segregated schools for her children. These opponents do not want this, he added.

The Georgia Committee to Save Our Schools hit back at the "threats of reprisals" on school people, a day after James Peters of Manchester, vice chairman of the State Board of Education, had warned school leaders to quit feuding with the governor if they expect to keep on getting high appropriations for schools. Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin also had warned he would closed schools if the amendment fails and intergration is ordered.

State School Supt. M. D. Collins appealed to 800 teachers at a GEA meeting at Warner Robins "not to let anyone push you around and keep you from voting, talking and using your influence against the private school plan."

FEARS LEASES

Gowen, speaking to the PTA in his home town of Brunswick, predicted the private school plan wouldn't stand up under court attack any longer than South Carolina's "private Democratic Party" plan lasted when that state tried to get around the white primary ruing by repealing its election laws.

"These private school leases will be contracts between the state and private citizens and they may run for years with the State of Georgia powerless to rescind them," Gowen, a former president of the Georgia Bar association, said.

He noted that the state still suffers the effects of a contract made in 1833 with a private group limiting taxes that could be levied on the Georgia Railroad property. Over 120 years after that contract was made, the owners of this property enjoy special privileges not given other railroads, he pointed out.

"Let's don't have hundreds of situations over our state similar to the Georgia Railroad," Gowen said.

Constitution

"LAWS NOW ENOUGH"

Gowen said present laws will prevent mixed schools.

"It is impossible to have a single mixed public school in Georgia under our present appropriation act," he stated. "But if the private school plan is put into effect it would be possible to have mixed schools with the state powerless to interfere."

Wed.
10-20-54

Former Federal Judge Neil Andrews issued the statement for the Georgia Committee to Save Our Schools.

"The schools of Georgia belong to the parents and children, not a handful of politicians," he said. "The school buildings were built with taxes of Georgians. The teachers are paid with taxes of Georgians. The people of Georgia have a right to decide whether they wish to give away to private school operators the half-billion dollars in assets of Georgia's educational establishment.

"The destruction of the common schools and the 'disintegration' of the University System, the loss of millions of dollars worth of valuable property, the loss of the school lunchroom program, of vocational education and of the Extension Service is an issue that the people must decide," the committee statement said. "Every responsible educational leader in Georgia has warned of the danger. They know the problem and how to deal with it. The efforts to silence them with threats is dangerous to the well-being of our state and is an affront to the democratic process in which our people believe."

23RD YEAR

School Supt. Collins observed that he will begin his 23rd year in that post in January.

"My first job in the great depression year of 1932 was to try to keep the schools, such as they were, open for at least a few months in the year," he said. "In Washington, I succeeded in getting $1,700,000 of relief funds with which to pay teachers. That's right: School teachers on relief! I asked the State Board of Education to cut salaries in the State Department of Education, starting with mine. In 1939 when the state again was unable to pay teachers salaries regularly and on time, I did not accept mine during that period."

Collins said he made these personal references only for the purpose of emphasizing one thing:

"I am willing to make any sacrifice to enlarge the educational opportunity of Georgia children—and to defend our public schools."

Kankakee (Buck) Anderson, Polk County school superintendent and former GEA president who also addressed the Warner Robins meeting, called upon teachers to cease their fears. A scared teacher means a scared school child, he commented as he anticipated effects of the current campaign.

The Rev. V. L. Bray, retired Atlanta Methodist minister, said Tuesday he favors the amendment. He said he would have voted against a resolution before the Methodist Ministers Association of Greater Atlanta had he been present Monday. All 75 ministers present condemned the private school plan.

R. L. (Shorty) Doyal, former high school football coach and unsuccessful candidate for the State Senate, told the Savannah Quarterback Club that defeat of the amendment could change the

GEA Head Hits Private School Plan

AUGUSTA, Oct. 7 (AP)—The president of the Georgia Education Assn. Thursday charged Gov. Talmadge organized the Georgia Education Commission "to confuse voters" and branded the private school amendment "merely an idea—not a plan."

Paul Sprayberry of Marietta said the education commission—which Gov. Talmadge said he organized to find a solution for maintaining segregated schools—is being confused with the GEA.

"SKELETON OF IDEA"

"The private school amendment," he declared, "is only the skeleton of an idea and it will not hold water."

Here for a school supervisors conference, the GEA president lambasted the amendment as "a cunning move not to preserve segregation but to throw the public school system into hands of scheeming politicians who would set our educational program back 50 years."

Sprayberry's attack came on the heels of an announcement from J. Harold Saxon, GEA executive secretary, that the state teachers group will conduct an organized campaign against the private school amendment which goes before voters in the Nov. general election.

"Teachers will provide information about the amendment to better inform the electorate," Sprayberry said. He emphasized a main point in the GEA's campaign will be to differentiate between the teachers organization and the education commission.

In an apparent slap at both Gov. Talmadge and Gov.-Nominate Griffin, Sprayberry declared "advocates of the amendment have misconstrued the facts."

ROY HARRIS' VIEW

While Sprayberry and Saxon solicited support of some 300 school supervisors at the conference here, Augusta Atty. Roy V. Harris, member of the University System Board of Regents, agreed with GEA officials that the amendment "will not keep segregation in Georgia schools."

"We have all the law we need today to maintain segregation," Harris said. "All we need is some public officials with courage."

Harris said the private school plan, as provided in the resolution adopted by the education commission, calls for a system of supervised private schools supported with public money. "That is nothing more than public schools," Harris added.

"I can't see how any court would hold that a school conducted in a building paid for with public money, with light and water bills paid out of public money and the teacher receiving a pension upon retirement out of public money can be a private school," Harris said.

Harris added that if the private school amendment is passed, "it will destroy the most effective means we have of preserving segregation."

Close Vote On School Plan Due

My M. L. ST. JOHN

The "private school" plan may have trouble receiving the endorsement Tuesday of the Georgia Education Committee, political observers said Monday night.

Opposition has developed within the committee to a report which the group is being asked to sign "after deliberation." The report would have the committee urge ratification of a constitutional amendment to authorize educational grants to private citizens in lieu of operating public schools.

LAW DEPARTMENT

The report also would ask the State Law Department to draft legislation which would clear the way for "private schools" to preserve segregation—although the report carefully omitted the word "private."

The vote on the resolution may be close. Several of the 21 members already have stated they cannot be present for Tuesday's meeting.

Gov. Talmadge, the commission chairman, Monday asked Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook to say officially Tuesday what Cook already has said unofficially in public speeches about the legality of desegregation problem.

OFFICIAL OPINION

The governor called for an official opinion as to whether the state or its subdivisions can levy and spend tax monies for racially mixed schools, even if the mixing is ordered by the federal courts.

In a speech at Miami Sept. 20, Cook said that if proponents of desegregation block the private school" plan, Georgia's Constitution, which has a clause calling for "equal but separate" facilities, would leave the state unauthorized to levy taxes for educational purposes.

OPPOSE PROPOSAL

State School Supt. M. D. Collins and a few other members of the commission have expressed opposition to any move which would permit the scrapping of Georgia's public school system.

Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin, Atty. Gen. Cook, Chairman George Whitman of the State Board of Education, and others have joined Gov. Talmadge in supporting the plan.

Monday Regent Roy Harris, a commission member, said segregation in private schools would not solve the problem of legalizing the custom. He cited a recent ruling of the New Jersey attorney general that private schools are not exempted from a New Jersey law against segregation.

Miss Ira Jarrell, superintendent of Atlanta public schools, and Chancellor Harmon Caldwell of the University System—both members of the commission — held their silence Monday. Both said they were studying the recommendations drafted by Attorney Durwood Pye.

The commission was created by the Legislature for the purpose of finding a plan whereby Georgia can continue to provide adequate education within the framework of both the state and federal constitutions.

School Plan Vetoed by Bibb GEA

MACON, Oct. 7 (AP)—The Bibb Education Assn. Thursday overwhelmingly opposed ratification of the private school amendment in direct opposition to the stand Bibb School Supt. Mark A. Smith has taken on it.

Following the lead of the parent Georgia Education Assn., the local teachers voted about 290 to 10 in opposition to the amendment.

Several teachers spoke against the amendment. One school principal spoke for it but said she has not decided how she will vote in the general election on Nov. 2.

Dr. Smith, a member of the Georgia Education Commission, voted in Atlanta last week for the commission's resolution urging voters to ratify the amendment.

The BEA vote came at a alled meeting at Lanier Senior igh School after Bibb Rep. ndrew W. McKenna had spoken

Georgia Unit Votes Against Integration

ATLANTIC, Sept. 28 (AP).—With little debate or opposition, the Georgia Education Commission today adopted a resolution recommending ratification of the so-called private school amendment.

The vote was 14 to 3, with four members absent.

The resolution states that the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation "is contrary to the constitution of Georgia and the wishes of the people of Georgia, and it should not be accepted."

It adds: "If this decision is forced upon the whole state and mixed public schools are ordered throughout the state, there will be no public schools of any kind anywhere in the state."

Harmon W. Caldwell, chancellor of the university system, told the commission that various units of the system stood to lose their accreditation and approximately 2½ million dollars of Federal funds, but he would vote in favor of the amendment.

The basis of the commission's claim that desegregation would kill the public schools was an opinion from Attorney General Eugene Cook that "there is no authority under the Georgia constitution of 1945 to establish mixed schools, tax for mixed schools or expend funds for mixed schools."

Private School' Support By Convention Seen

The State Democratic Convention will throw its full support behind the private school plan to preserve segregation in Georgia schools, two state leaders of the party predicted Wednesday night.

James S. Peters of Manchester, chairman of the party's state executive committee, and George D. Stewart of Atlanta, secretary, said they expect the party, in convention at Macon next week, to pass a resolution recommending that Georgians vote for the private school amendment in the November election.

PRESS GALLERY

Peters and Stewart were guests on WSB-TV's Press Gallery, presented by The Atlanta Journal. They were questioned by Don Carter, city editor of The Journal, Managing Editor William I. Ray Jr. served as moderator.

Peters declared that the "best leadership" in the Democratic Party is in the South, but he said the South would be more influential in national affairs and in the national party if it had a strong two-party system.

"We would be much better off in Georgia if we had a strong two-party system," said the retiring committee chairman.

Peters said that press, radio and television coverage of the recent political campaign and primary presented voters with a complete picture of the issues.

COMMENDS PAPER

He commended the two Atlanta newspapers for doing an "excellent job" of campaign and primary coverage. "They were fair to everybody," he said. "I heard no criticism—nothing but compliments."

Peters, who has served eight years as committee chairman, said that women in Georgia "don't take as much part in politics as women in other sections of the country."

He said, "We need more women to run for public office in Georgia."

Commenting on his recent trip to the National Democratic Convention at Indianapolis, Ind., Peters said that he has found "very little opposition" within the party to Adlai Stevenson. He is the strongest contender for Democratic nominee in 1956, Peters said, and added that Averill Harriman, Democratic nominee for governor of New York, probably will be a candidate.

Convention Due To Hit Race Ruling

By M. L. ST. JOHN
Constitution Political Editor

MACON, Sept. 29—The Georgia Democratic Party convention Thursday is expected to condemn harshly the U.S. Supreme Court's segregation decision, and to launch a campaign to prevent mixing of the races in Georgia schools.

Resolutions have been prepared bitterly assailing the court for its decision outlawing segregation in the public schools of four states and the District of Columbia.

Resolutions also have been drawn asking party leaders to campaign for passage Nov. 2 of a constitutional amendment designed to enable Georgia to pay her children's tuition in private schools, if necessary, to preserve segregation.

Overwhelming passage of these resolutions is anticipated, since the convention will be composed of friends of Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin.

The action will parallel that of former state Democratic conventions which have expressed defiance of the United States Supreme Court's rulings.

In 1946, the convention, dominated by the late Gov.-Nominate Eugene Talmadge (despite his absence due to illness), adopted resolutions promising that Negroes wouldn't vote again in a Georgia primary. It acted to establish a white primary exclusive of Negro voters, after the federal courts had ruled that Negroes could vote. However, the move failed, and Negroes still vote in Georgia Democratic primaries.

In 1950, the convention, dominated by Gov. Herman Talmadge, pledged all state officials to fight to preserve segregation in Georgia colleges and schools," the United States Supreme Court decision to the contrary, notwithstanding." This action came after the court had ruled that Negroes could attend universities in Texas and Oklahoma. No Negro has yet enrolled in a white college in Georgia.

Thursday's convention is the first meeting of the Georgia party since the United States Supreme Court issued its ruling earlier this year that segregation cannot be carried on in public schools. The decision was on cases brought up from states not including Georgia.

GRIFFIN SPEECH

Highlight of Thursday's convention will be Gov.-Nominate Griffin's 12:30 p.m. speech accepting the nomination. It will be carried over a statewide radio network.

Griffin has disclosed he will ask the convention to support the proposed so-called "private school" amendment. He calls the amendment "good insurance" to be used as a "last resort" to preserve segregation.

The party is expected to write into its platform for the next four years a pledge to preserve segregation and continue the county unit system. These were features of the platform on which Griffin won the recent primary. The party, likewise, will follow Griffin's platform in urging expansion of state services without increasing state taxes.

KEYNOTE ADDRESS

Another feature of Thursday's convention will be the keynote address by Carey Skelton of Hartwell.

All former governors have been invited to sit on the platform at the convention. John Sammons Bell, who is to succeed James Peters as state chairman, said invitations have been issued to former governors John Slation, Clifford Walker, Richard Russell, Ed Rivers, Ellis Arnall and M. E. Thompson.

Bell said that all members of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals and state department chiefs also have been invited to sit on the platform.

The convention will nominate formally all winners in the State Democratic Primary.

Panel To Get Talmadge's School Plan

The Georgia Education Commission likely will be asked Tuesday to endorse Gov. Talmadge's so-called private school amendment—and may get into some argument over it.

The meeting of the commission, created to find ways of preserving segregated schools, was called to begin preparation of a report.

Durwood Pye, Atlanta attorney serving as secretary, said Thursday the commission probably will be asked to favor the proposed constitutional amendment which would authorize educational grants to individual citizens.

Talmadge, Pye and B. D. Murphy, commission attorney, have made it clear that they consider the amendment the only sure method of maintaining segregation.

Some members of the commission, however, are less enthusiastic about it and at least one, State School Supt. M. D. Collins, is outspokenly opposed.

He declared earlier this week that while he favors segregation he was not "elected to preside over liquidation of the public school system."

Pye also said that a draft of a report for consideration by the commission will be submitted at the Tuesday meeting. He and Talmadge, Murphy and Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook joined in preparing the draft.

It includes ideas from practically every member of the commission, Pye reported.

The commission held several hearings and heard from candidates for governor and lieutenant governor and representatives of the Georgia Education Assn. and Parent-Teacher Assn.

In addition to Talmadge, who is chairman, Cook and Collins, the commission is composed of:

Lt. Gov. Griffin, vice chairman; House Speaker Fred Hand; Reps. George Smith II of Swainsboro, Frank Twitty of Camilla and Battle Hall of Rome; Harvey Cutts of Greenville, former president of the Georgia Education Assn.; Mrs. Ralph Hobbs of Cataula; Miss Ira Jarrell, Atlanta school superintendent; Mark Smith of Macon, W. Y. Mann of McRae, John Wood of Canton, Roy Harris of Augusta, John Sammons Bell of Atlanta, Charles Bloch of Macon, Chancellor Harmon Caldwell and Regents Chairman R. O. Arnold of the University System of Georgia, State Board of Education Chairman George P. Whitman Jr. and State Auditor B. E. Thrasher Jr.

Local Civic Leaders Attack Private School Amendment

Daily World

BY SAMUEL L. ADAMS
(SNS Staff Writer)

The private school amendment and several other hot political questions were tackled last night at a mass meeting at Wheat Street Baptist Church as Charles A. Moye, Jr., Republican candidate for the Fifth Congressional District seat held by incumbent James H. Davis, and several local civic leaders spoke.

Pledging himself and affirming his belief in Eisenhower's statement of February 5 of this year, he said:

"In all those things which deal with people, be liberal, be human. In all those things which deal with the people's money or their economy or their form of government, be conservative."

Fri. 10-15-54

"We have a great need for a two-party system," Moye explained, for it would cure a great many of the ills of this state. He said a two party system would accomplish the following:

1. "Complete abolition of the county unit system which was put into effect to disfranchise thousands and thousands of voters.

2. "The restoration of the South's lost prestige on public affairs.

3. "We'd stand a greater chance of getting public projects completed if both parties were anxious in getting our votes.

The audience broke in with applause when Moye stated that the Negro received freedom under the leadership of one great Republican — Lincoln — and was restored to dignity by another — Eisenhower.

He expressed a need for "cooperative congressmen" rather than "ones who will be sniping at him (Eisenhower)."

OTHER SPEAKERS

Among other speakers were: Cliff Smith, formerly a school teacher; C. A. Scott, editor-general manager of the Atlanta Daily World; C. L. Harper, executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association; Robert Johnson, Atlanta Urban League executive; and the co-chairmen of the meeting, A. T. Walden and Rev. W. M. Jackson who presided.

Harper attacked the actions of Talmadges hand picked commission which the governor has been accused of organizing to confuse the public.

Daily World
Atlanta Ga.

When the Supreme Court outlawed white primaries, in Texas, he said, "they tried to organize private clubs, but the court said it doesn't matter what you call it it's still the same thing."

He raised the question of who is going to handle the millions of dollars appropriated for schools? and then answered his query in a loud voice — "politicians!" The league of Women Voters had raised this same question earlier, he said. "Will the money be put in schools or will somebody take some of it home?," he added.

Mr. Harper said the whole thing would throw our society into chaos. "If they can defy the Supreme Court, our youth will say, 'I can defy the Georgia courts,' and crime will increase."

Fri 10-15-54

Mr. Scott, who followed Harper to the podium, had spoken from the floor earlier when he asked Moye to explain for the general public how one could vote the full democratic ticket without also voting for incumbent Davis. An unidentified speaker from the floor said the simple way is to vote for nothing but the amendment.

Mr. Scott claimed he had never voted for Davis and never would. He expressed his appreciation that he had somebody to vote for in Moye. He added:

"I am thoroughly with Moye because he is running against a principal. I am glad we got a man running because otherwise we could only pull the master lever and vote the whole Democratic ticket."

Mr. Scott pointed out that South Carolina was four years later than Georgia in voting in primaries because they permitted the legislature to strike "every law on the books to meet the white primary decree."

He explained his attitude toward each of the proposed amendments, but specifically advised the audience to vote against No. 2, calling for a yearly meeting of the legislature, No. 4, the private school amendment, No. 5, fireman's pension, and No. 6, slum clearance.

Mr. Thompson took issue with Scott on Amendment No. 6, slum clearance. Whereas Mr. Scott felt it was a blind to relocate the property of Negroes — "to take property from one individual (Negro) and sell it to another (white) — Mr. Thompson said Georgia and Florida are the only states which have rejected the federal slum redevelopment plan. He said the state government puts in only one-third of the money and the federal government puts in two-thirds. This leads him to believe there would be recourse through the course for any misdeeds under the plan.

Clifton Smith, in a high-pitched emotional voice, called attention to the "fly-by-night veteran schools that ship-wrecked government funds." He said the private school amendment would be 50-times worse. He also suggested that teachers instruct high school students to help educate voters.

The proposed amendments that no one took a definite stand against were numbers 1 and 7 — so called "home rule", and changing tax limitation to education.

An unidentified member of the audience spoke in favor of the tax exemption amendment for church property, however.

Gradual integration in Southern schools predicted by lawyer

Wash Post
9/8/54

ATLANTA, Sept. 8—(AP)—Gradual elimination of racial segregation in public schools of the South is predicted by a Tennessee lawyer long associated with Southern education.

The prediction was made yesterday by Cecil Sims, Nashville attorney and member of the Davidson County (Tenn.) Board of Education, in an address to a conference of school officials from 16 Southern states.

Sims said the U. S. Supreme Court did not order compulsory integration of the races in its ruling against compulsory school segregation.

Because of the absence of a compulsory integration ruling by the court, Sims said he believes "school officials can set their sights toward gradual de-segregation."

FLORIDA'S ATTY. GEN. Richard W. Ervin reported to the conference on a recent state-sponsored survey in Florida to determine urban and rural reaction to the court ruling against segregation.

He said the survey showed 75 per cent of the people polled, both white persons and Negroes, believe Florida will need a period of time to adjust itself to public school integration.

The conference was called by the Southern States Co-Operative Program in Educational Administration to study changing trends in Southern education, including problems arising from the segregation ruling of the Supreme Court.

Collins' School Stand Called Bold, Forthright

Atlanta—Dr. M. D. Collins, state school supt., has taken a bold and forthright stand in defense of the public schools of our state against the proposed "Private School" plan.

Ga. Solon OKs Strike In Talk With Leaders

Atlanta, Ga.

By International News Service

Rep. James Davis (D) Ga., a member of the House District of Columbia Committee, said Thursday he advised some Washington white students who oppose school integration to stay away from classes. (Davis will be opposed for re-election by Charles Moye, the first Republican to run in many years). P. 1

Davis said three students from Anacostia High School visited him while he was in Washington Wednesday and asked for advice about the school "boycott." Davis said:

"The students and their parents have a right to protest this outrageous decision by any peaceful means The constitution guarantees the right of free speech and the right of assembly and these provisions protect them in picketing the schools, the District Commissioners, the Supreme Court, the White House or any other government agency they want to picket.

"I told these boys they had these rights and that if they stay away from school, the schools will have a hard time operating without pupils and very likely some sensible conclusion could be reached under which they would not be required to be the unwilling classmates of Negro students."

Daily World
Fri. 10-8-54

Davis said he regards the Supreme Court's school segregation ruling "as being a rank usurpation of authority by the court which it does not possess. It's an outrageous attempt to cram down the throats of an unwilling people the personal sociological views of the nine people who comprise the court." P. 6

Integration Ruling Seen Anti-Red Tool

Atty. Gen. J. Eugene Cook of Georgia indicated Monday he thinks the United States Supreme court segregation ruling was a move to counter Communist propaganda against U.S. racial practices.

Addressing the Dade County Bar Association in the Columbus Hotel, Cook wound up a near hour-long talk by quoting United States Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., as saying on June 3 in California:

"Communist charges of racial intolerance in the United States have been answered directly by the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision."

Cook went on to say that Brownell is one of the friends of the court in the segregation litigation and added that "we have softly yielded to communist charges until human dignity and liberty lie prostrate in two-thirds of the world."

Earlier, Cook described Georgia's reaction to the court's decision as one of "total resentment and violent rebellion."

He also reiterated that Georgia will not bow to the segregation decision "in the forseeable future" and declared that any attempt to enforce it would create "a crisis so devastating that the most temperate and self-disciplined minds among us are reluctant even to discuss it."

If the Supreme Court insists on integration of White and Negro students, Cook stated, Georgia has a plan for a private school system which would replace the public school system.

Superintendent Of Ga. Schools Against Private School Proposal

The proposed "private school' constitutional amendment has the State Board of Education split today after the Superinendent and the Board "squared off" at each other in a meeting Monday night

State School Supt. M. D Collins, an elective officer, is against scrapping the public school system, but the Talmadge-appointed board is for the proposed amandment as a means of preserving segregation

Another staunch opponent to the proposed amendment is the Georgia Education Association which reiterated its opposition on Saturday.

Commenting on the matter, Collins said he did not think he was elected state school superintendent" to liquidate the Georgia public school system " He added:

"I am against the amendment. I am in favor of segregated public schools. I am for segregation as strong as anyone, but I believe it has got to be handled on the local level. We have too much at stake to abandon our public schools "

Chairman George Whitman Jr , of Atlanta suggested that the board pass a resolution stating that the board was in favor of the proposed "private school" amendment.

MOTION CARRIED

A motion to this effect was made by Clarke Duncan of Buena Viesta and seconded by Mrs Julius Y. Talmadge of Athens. The motion was carried unanimously by those present.

Members present when the resolution was adopted were: H. W Blount of Waynesboro, James Peters of Manchester, W. H. Lovett of Dublin, Lonnie Sweat of Blackshear, and Irwin Kimsey of Clarkesville.

Not voting were: J. D Dotson ofg Blakely, who was out of the room and Glenn Milner of Rome who was absent.

Paul Sprayberry of Marietta, President of the Georgia Education Association cautioned the board against voting themselves out of a job.

"Regardless of what plans are offered to get around the court decision," he said, "I think there will be court tests I don't think it wise to risk a public school system we have been building for 75 years by attempting a system of private schools," Sprayberry added

"No one knows what will happen if the private school amendment is passed," he pointed out. "We don't even know whether we would have a state board of education."

On Tuesday, Gov. Talmadge ordered a meeting of the Georgia Education Commission to begin drafting recommendations to the state Legislature on ways to preserve segregation.

The Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers and the Georgia Education Association, both of which have gone on record against the private school plan, have been asked by the commission to submit recommendations by October 1.

PRIVATE SCHOOL PLAN "BORN IN POLITICS," SAYS THOMPSON

Speaking before a workshop sponsored by the Georgia Educational Association at Dahlonega, former Governor M. E. Thompson indicated his opposition to the private school plan by saying it was "born in politics." The plan was discussed by Mr. Thompson and other candidates before the workshop.

Mrs. Grace Thomas, only woman in the nine-man field for the governorship of Georgia, insists that she is taking the current campaign seriously, but that Atlanta newspapers have beamed her platform wrong. She denied that she is the "anti-segregation candidate" and said at no time had she used the words "segregation" or "anti-segregation."

This development added to the confusion which has caused a barrage of charges and counter charges over the school segregation issue.

THOMPSON'S STATEMENT

In contrast to Mrs. Thomas sidestepping of the segregation issue, former Acting Governor, M. E. Thompson said, "the private school amendment" which would empower the legislature to allocate funds to private institutions "was born in politics, is being nurtured in politics, and will die a political death."

Thompson cited his record as a public official and said the programs that he advocated in 1950 are today a reality in Georgia.

Thompson said when elected governor he would work with Georgia Education Officials and reiterated his stand on segregation by stating: "I know that 90 per cent of both races want separate schools. However, Georgia must give Negroes absolutely equal educational opportunities."

OTHER CANDIDATES

Elsewhere, Marvin Griffin proclaimed himself "a working and fighting part" of the administration of Gov. Herman Talmadge.

Griffin pledged to "continue in full effect the progressive program instituted by Gov. Talmadge."

He made another strong stand for segregation saying "90 per cent of the white people are ready to use every possible weapon to continue segregation now in force."

Fred Hand promised "harmonious and progressive government and slammed Griffin by stating that he pardoned himself while serving as executive secretary to former Gov. E. D. Rivers.

Hand promised to let loose additional material on "the dry county liquor racket which flourished in Georgia while M. E. Thompson was acting governor."

Charlie Gowen outlined plans to make Georgia "one of the greatest tourist states in the nation."

And in doing so, promised to eliminate speed traps and instruct the State Patrol to be "ambassadors of goodwill."

Meanwhile the Gainesville Daily Times Friday gave its editorial support to M. E. Thompson in the race for governor of Georgia.

The newspaper said in an editorial that Thompson comes closest to the standards required for governor." It said Thompson has positive capabilities and his program has proven his stature and vision.

The paper added that Thompson is backed by supporters with talent in business, administration, finance and legislation.

Private School Idea Hit as Do-Nothing Plan That Will Be Ruled Out by Supreme Court

Powder Springs—Have you noticed that all the leading advocates of the Private School Amendment are politicians?

These men seek to quiet the misgivings of the public concerning their scheme with the assurance that there is no need to be reluctant to ratify No. 4 because nothing much will happen to the schools anyhow. The amendment, they soothe, doesn't require any action, so nothing has to happen. Besides, they really expect it to be a long time, if ever, before it will be necessary to use their amendment. They want it as a last resort, "just in case."

In the next breath, however, they seek to club the reluctant into voting for it by telling them that if their amendment fails they will be forced to fire the teachers, close the schools, and turn the children out on the streets to grow up in ignorance. They brandish this club in such a way as to leave the impression that if their amendment is rejected on Nov. 2, they will abolish the schools on Nov. 3.

Atty. Gen. Cook, a supporter, revealed how useful a tool to maintain segregation Amendment 4 will be when he stated that there is now no legal way to stop the mixing of the races in the schools, "either with or without the Private School Amendment." As long as public money goes into the schools, however round-about the path by which it gets there, the courts will hold them to be public schools despite what they are called, or however carefully their heads are selected.

Men generally don't have to muddy the waters if they have a clean case. The politicians have gone to great lengths to hide the futility and dangers of their schemes with regard to the schools.

Mixed Schools Predicted in a Year If Amendment Defeated on Nov. 2

If Amendment No. 4 fails on Nov. 2, Georgia will have mixed schools within 12 months, the defense attorney in the Atlanta schools segregation case predicted Monday night.

B. D. Murphy of Fayetteville made the statement as he appeared with a panel of seven state officials and Democratic Party leaders in a program carried over WAGA-TV and WLW-A.

Nine members of State Board of Education agree to appear on television in support of Amendment No. 4—Page 6.

On the other side of the fence, 47 Methodist ministers and laymen from over the state signed a petition urging defeat of the private school amendment. Those signing included a college president, leaders of the Methodist Education Board, and district superintendents.

Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin, appearing on the television panel, indicated he will not ask the Legislature to pass a private school plan in January. This is contrary to an anticipation that the General Assembly would act in January on the recommendations of the Georgia Commission on Education.

"If you ratify the amendment," Griffin said, "nothing will happen. If the court orders the mixing of schools in any county, I shall obey Georgia laws and withhold money, thereby closing the schools. Then, I will call the Legislature into special session and devise a plan for free, segregated schools. If you do not ratify the amendment, it would be needless for me to summon the Legislature after the court rules because there would be nothing the Legislature could do."

Gov. Talmadge charged that segregation enemies are trying to force a crisis in Georgia schools in an effort to compel integration of the races.

"That group is saying now we don't need the amendment," Talmadge said. "When the federal courts force Georgia schools to close, the same group will tell you Georgia must bow to the court's decision and accept integration."

Lt. Gov. Ernest Vandiver, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, Secretary Durwood Pye of the Georgia Commission on Education, and State Democratic Chairman John Sammons Bell appeared on the program. Cook asked the people to approve the amendment "if you expect to hold me accountable to defend free, segregated schools."

President Charles Clegg of Young Harris College was among the signers of the petition urging preachers and laymen to oppose passage of the private school amendment. The petition, almost identical to a resolution adopted by the Atlanta Methodist Ministers Association, said the amendment wouldn't solve the segregation problem and would create many new problems.

SIGNERS OF PETITION

Signers of the petition include the Rev. Roy Bond of Macon, secretary of the education board of the South Georgia Conference; the Rev. Arthur Gilmore of Atlanta, secretary of the education board of the North Georgia Conference; the Rev. Frank Robertson, Douglas; the Rev. E. D. Rudisill, Augusta district superintendent; the Rev. Charles Gray, Augusta; the Rev. J. C. Callaway, Elberton-Athens superintendent; the Rev. Dow Kirkpatrick, Athens; the Rev. Edward Mackay, Decatur-Oxford superintendent; the Rev. Charles Cochran, pastor of the Patillo Methodist Church in Decatur; the Rev. W. H. Gardner, Gainesville; the Rev. J. W. Kibley, West Point; the Rev. Nat Long, Atlanta District East superintendent, and the Rev. J. W. McKibben, Atlanta District West superintendent.

Fulton Rep. Hamilton Lokey Monday night said the idea that Georgia can have private schools by simply changing the name of public schools and thereby escape the court decision "is tommyrot."

SPEAKS AT PALMETTO

"When the court finds that to be state action, we will be under the court segregation decision," Lokey told a Palmetto civic club. "We will have destroyed our schools for no purpose."

Lokey said the Supreme Court hasn't ruled against Georgia's present constitution.

Neil Andrews, head of the Committee to Save Our Schools, hit at the Democratic Party leadership for sponsoring the television program, and at state leaders for spending state funds to campaign for the amendment.

He said a "small group of party leaders has assumed authority to contribute to the financing of the campaign to pass the amendment." He called this "deplorable and inconsistent with democratic processes." Andrews also said the Georgia Commission on Education is violating the law in using state funds to promote the amendment in the Nov. 2 election.

Gov. Talmadge said the television was financed by private contributions and sponsored by the party.

Pye said state law authorized the committee to circulate its recommendations and that he is mailing out 60,000 reports.

Bell said that Andrews "as usual just doesn't know what he's talking about." He said the people should know something of the background of those opposing the amendment. Andrews, Bell said, is "a close friend of Mr. Tom Clark, one of the scalawag justices of the Supreme Court who rendered the ill-timed and ill-considered school segregation decision."

Bell said Andrews was given an interim appointment as a federal judge through Clark's friendship. However, he added, Andrews was not confirmed by the Senate due to the opposition of Georgia senators.

Labor Chief Assails As Talmadge Lauds School Amendment

Private Plan Hit as Peril To Worker

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Gov. Talmadge said Sunday adoption of the private school amendment will aid Southwide resistance against the segregation decision, but Georgia labor leader declared it would mean disaster for the average worker and average rural family.

The battle over the proposed constitutional amendment to be voted on Nov. 6 entered its home stretch with television, radio, and civic club speeches scheduled by both sides.

W. C. Crimm, secretary of the Georgia Federation of Labor (AFL), estimated the private school plan would place a direct added cost of approximately $400 yearly upon the average family with two children in the average Georgia town. He said it would cost the average rural family an additional $520 annually.

QUESTION OF TUITION

Crimm said the average working family and rural family would not have available the money to supplement the state grant of $93 a year. Unquestionably the tuition charged by private school operators would greatly exceed the $93, he said.

"These people cannot give up the benefits of the free textbook program, public transportation, and the lunchroom program," Crimm stated.

Opposition to the proposed amendment also came Sunday from the League of Women Voters of Georgia in a statement which said: "One of the most dangerous features of the private school amendment is the opening phrase, 'Notwithstanding any other provision of this constitution . . .'

OTHER SAFEGUARDS

"If the amendment is ratified this phrase will give the legislature, present and future, the power to override other sections of the Georgia Constitution. The people will have lost constitutional safeguards which have been underlying principles of our form of government since its beginning.

"Throughout history whenever the people have been frightened into voting their sovereign powers into the hands of a few, tyranny and corruption have been the results. Passage of the private school amendment would be a step in that direction."

Members of the United Liberal Church of Atlanta (Unitarian-Universalist), of which the Rev. Glenn O. Canfield is minister, Sunday voted opposition to the amendment in a resolution which stated in part, "We believe in separation of church and state, as stated in the constitution of the state of Georgia, and know that public funds would go to church schools via their students if tax monies were granted to citizens for educational purposes."

Gov. Talmadge declared that Georgia's approval of the amendment will reinforce the entire Southwide resistance movement against the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

"On the other hand," the Governor continued, "defeat of the amendment would be interpreted by the nation as a repudiation of the principles and leaders of the South and a sure indication that we are unwilling to fight for the welfare of our children and our heritage. If we are to serve notice on the Supreme Court and the world that we are determined to defend and preserve our way of life, then we must write the school segregation amendment into the Constitution of Georgia."

Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin, in a statement issued over the weekend, said the amendment has the support of the high state officials who have the responsibility of meeting the segregation problem—and the opposition of enemies of segregation.

"The fact that organizations and individuals that are avowed enemies of segregation are fighting this amendment with such bitterness and gross unthruths is clear evidence of its need and effectiveness," Griffin asserted.

He said the amendment has the backing of the governor, the governor-nominate, the attorney general, the State Board of Education, the Georgia Commission on Education, the State Democratic Party, the Association of County Commissioners of Georgia, the Georgia Municipal Assn. and practically every member of the Legislature.

The first of three television programs supporting the amendment will be presented Monday night. It will begin at 7:30 p.m. and will be carried over WAGA-TV and WLW-A in Atlanta, WRBL-TV in Columbus, and WROM-TV in Rome. Appearing on the panel will be Gov. Talmadge, Gov. Nominate Griffin, Lt.-Gov.-Nominate Ernest Vandiver, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, Attorney B. D. Murphy of Fayetteville, Secretary Durwood Pye of the Georgia Commission on Education, and State Democratic Chairman John Sammons Bell.

EDUCATION 1954 GEORGIA TENSION

School Debate Prompts Outcry of 'Mob Action'

Charges of "mob action" and "scandals" flew in the private school amendment debate Wednesday, as Durwood Pye, secretary of the Georgia Education Commission, and Fulton Rep. Muggsy Smith spoke here.

Pye, addressing the DeKalb Good Government League Wednesday night, charged opponents of the amendment propose to solve segregation problems "through mob action." He urged ratification of the amendment as the only peaceful means of placing schools beyond the court's decision.

TEAPOT DOME

Smith, debating Pye earlier at the Bass Community Council meeting, warned that the "Teapot Dome Scandals" wouldn't touch the scandals which the private school plan would bring on Georgia.

In his speech in Decatur, Pye quoted some school leaders as stating "the people will rise up and see that colored children go back to colored schools" when the state shuts off school funds on mixed schools under the present laws.

"Schools cannot be run by mob action," Pye commented. "Those participating in this mob 'rising-up' will be jailed for defying the court."

WHY HURRY?

Smith said the Legislature passed a segregation protection measure four years ago (shutting off funds if schools are mixed), and it hasn't had to use it yet. He noted that Negroes are not going to Georgia colleges, although the federal courts decided colleges should be mixed in 1938. He asked why all the hurry.

"They want us to vote to give our money to somebody to run some sort of school under some sort of arrangement," Smith observed. We cannot have private schools by just changing the name of 'public' schools to 'private' schools. I want a lot of questions answered before I vote for any such thing."

COOK ANSWERS

Pye said his child, now in Moreland Avenue public school, would be enrolled in the same school if the courts forced Atlanta to go to a private system. The school would be licensed and supervised by the state. It would be operated by trustees, licensed served. "We cannot have private to operate a school for white children. Pye said he would assign the city-state grants to the school, and these grants would care for all tuition costs. Pye stated the child would have the same teachers and the same educational benefits.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, answering questions of Miss Nancy Fletcher of 1206 Peachtree St., NE, said Georgia cannot require segregation in any school system, either with or without the private school amendment.

The Atlanta Public School Teachers Assn. joined the campaign against the amendment.

BELL DRAWS SNICKERS

Druid Hills Club Cheers School Proposal's Foes

A Druid Hills civic club audience snickered Wednesday night when John Sammons Bell told them they could trust the Legislature to look after the best interests of Georgia's children and schools if the "private school" amendment is ratified Nov. 2.

And then, when Bell hurried off to keep a television appointment to speak for the amendment on WSB-TV's Press Gallary, the audience applauded State School Supt. M. D. Collins, GEA Secretary Harold Saxon and Rep.-Nominate James A. Mackay as they spoke against the amendment.

Dr. Collins and Mackay were unscheduled speakers on the Druid Hills Civic Assn. program that featured a debate between Bell and Saxon.

"PIG IN POKE"

But Dr. Collins arose to brand the amendment as "a pig in a poke" and declared its ratification would mean "selling the children of Georgia down the river." The state school superintendent said he would rather be defeated for reelection Nov. 2 than see the amendment ratified.

Mackay then rose to tell the audience that the DeKalb County delegation in the last legislature opposed the amendment and that the incoming lawmakers are against it.

But Mackay warned that with its ineffective voting strength, the DeKalb delegation "can't protect your children." He predicted that ratification of the amendment would result in "the darndest political machine you have ever seen."

Making an eloquent appeal for the amendment's ratification, Bell declared it is the only way that free, segregated schools can be maintained in Georgia in the face of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

STRIKE A BLOW

Without the amendment, which would permit the Legislature to make educational grants to individuals, schools would be closed down immediately if they are mixed, he declared. Declaring opponents have misrepresented the amendment, Bell urged his listeners to vote for it and "strike a blow" against a "tyrannical decision of the court."

Saxon raised many questions about how the amendment would affect curricula and accrediting standards, school transportation and teacher retirement, and charged there is a suspicious hurry in attempts to get the amendment ratified. Urging caution, he argued that Georgia public schools can be kept segregated for years without the amendment.

When the audience chuckled as Bell told them not to be afraid of the Legislature's taking care of school children, Bell expressed surprise at the laughter. Whereupon, a woman in the audience arose to tell Bell she was shocked at his expressions of contempt for the Supreme Court, which he had denounced for its anti-segregation ruling.

'Amendment 4 Provides No Legal Restraints Which Require Following Any Kind of Plan'

Atlanta—A vote for the school amendment (Amendment No. 4 on the ballot) is a vote for 44 words, and for those words only! We have had threats and promises; but a vote in favor will teach us the real reason why politicians are spending thousands of the public's money to get permission to handle $150,000,000 a year without legal restraints.

There is no word in the 44 of the amendment defining the qualifications of persons or schools, or setting standards or restraints of any sort, or even requiring the following of any plan. There is not even any word referring to segregation. Your vote is not for or against segregation; it is for or against Amendment No. 4. Vote against it!

Says Private Schools Can Get State Funds

Atlanta — The Honorable Attorney General Eugene Cook has stated several times in the past two or three weeks that if amendment No. 4 should pass, that this amendment would not open the door for grants to religious schools.

If Mr. Cook will read this amendment carefully he will find the first six words of the amendment plainly states that the provisions in our state in regards to our schools will become dead issues upon the passage of this amendment:

The first six words are as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this constitution.

High Court Can Rule On Any Law Passed

Atlanta—Regarding the pros and cons of the private school amendment, I wish to quote from a book by Dr. Newton Edwards, "The Courts and Public Schools," that the Supreme Court of the United States exercises the right to review the economic and social legislation of the states and to determine whether the objects to be accomplished and the manner of their accomplishment are reasonably necessary to promote the public welfare.

The state is free to formulate its own educational policies, but at any time the Supreme Court may reverse these policies as an arbitrary interference with either liberty or property.

Since the terms "liberty," "property" and "due process of law" mean whatever the court says they mean, the court in reality may declare unconstitutional any law of which it disapproves.

Just how far the state may go in extending its control over private schools has not been clearly determined; therefore since the private school amendment is an attempt on the part of a certain political group to override the recent Supreme Court decision, the court would still have legal authority to declare such an amendment unconstitutional.

Georgia Test On Schools Due Tuesday

Last + Imes
Herald
Sun. 10-31-54

ATLANTA, Oct. 30 (AP).—The private school plan to evade the Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation will be put to a popular vote test in Georgia Tuesday.

About a half million of the state's 1,272,793 registered voters are expected to vote on a controversial constitutional amendment which would clear the way for creating a system of private schools. P. 26m

The proposed amendment does not mention private schools. It only authorizes the grant of state, county or city funds to individuals in discharge of all the state's obligation to furnish an education.

But Gov. Herman Talmadge, leading Southern white supremacy champion, and his hand-picked successor, Lieut. Governor Marvin Griffin, make no secret of their belief that only in private schools can separate classes for white and Negro children be permanently maintained.

Washington D.C.

The Georgia election will be the first ballot test of the private school plan which several southern states are considering as a means of circumventing the United States Supreme Court's ruling of last May 17, holding that classification of students solely on the basis of race is illegal.

Action similar to that proposed for Georgia by the amendment already has been taken by South Carolina. But that came two years before the Supreme Court school segregation decision, when the state adopted a constitutional change under which the legislature could abolish public schools.

Mississippi is to vote in December on a similar constitutional change proposed by a recent special session of its legislature and the private school plan is being studied by some pro-segregation leaders in Alabama.

A Vote Against Amendment 4 Called Vote To Keep Schools as They Are—Public

Atlanta—As an interested citizen, member of Active Voters and League of Women Voters, and what is more important, as a mother of three school-age children (college, high school and grade school) I would like to clarify some points about Amendment 4 which may be confusing to a lot of people.

On your ballot Amendment 4 will appear thus:

( ) For the amendment to Article VIII of the Constitution, adding a new section relating to education.

( ) Against the amendment to Article VIII of the Constitution adding a new section relating to education.

As you can see the word "public" and "private" schools are not used. The wording of the ballot means that if you vote for the amendment you vote to put the public schools into private ownership — that is what the phrase "adding a new section relating to education" means. It gives the Assembly the power to make public schools private.

If you vote against Amendment 4 you are voting against giving the Assembly the power to make the public schools private—in other words, a vote against Amendment 4 is a vote to keep the schools as they are—public.

Disposing of Schools Decried as Unthinkable

Juniper — To whom do our schools belong, the temporary politicians or the people? At first this so called private school business was a "last resort" and in the news this morning it was reported that our governor has stated that our schools will be closed if we do not vote in the fourth amendment!

A few years ago the politicians were making all kinds of dire predictions as to what would happen if we did not change the county unit system to suit them and none of those things have happened that are evident. And now they are trying to bully and threaten us into voting our schools away. What next?

It has taken years of hard work and hard planning and thinking to bring our schools up to the present low standard in too many cases and to just throw it all away in one fell swoop is unthinkable.

The government can already tell us who are in private business that we cannot practice segregation and private schools would be a private business. How are you going to keep the government from telling the private schools they cannot practice segregation?

An Unknown Author Pens His Dreams

Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

I slept, I dreamed, I seemed to climb a hard ascending track,
And just behind me labored one whose face was black.
I pitied him, but hour by hour he gained upon my path;
He stood beside me, stood upright, and then I turned in wrath;
"Go back," I cried, "What right have you to stand beside me here?"
I paused, struck dumb with fear, for lo, the black man was not there—
But Christ stood in his place—
And, oh, the pain, the pain that looked from that dear face!

Must Public Schools Be a Political Toy?

Atlanta—The professional Georgia politicians in their frantic effort to perpetuate themselves in a good paying business (The control of the State Government) has now come up with about the worst and most destructive "Nig'er, Nig'er" boomerang in the history of the state.

The citizens now find themselves in the same position of the man who sheltered the camel in his tent—only to have him grow to such proportions that he eventually pushed his benefactor out in the cold.

Granted that they sheltered him in the name of the "segregation" he so craftily sold them—must he in gratitude now threaten to knock the very foundation of progress of mankind (Education) from under them? Must he now make an experimental play-toy of their most cherished inheritance—that has required centuries to build? Isn't this really going too far?

Even they admit—It is only a question of time that in spite of any subterfuge the Supreme Court will strike down whatever "substitute" is employed. In the interim shall we grope in confusion because these few selfish politicians used the promise as a means of getting elected?

Amendment Foes Demand Equal Funds

The state, which is spending $13,000 on mailing out information favorable to the proposed private school amendment, Tuesday was called on to supply opponents of the measure with an equal amount for fighting the amendment.

Bibb County's Committee to Save Our Schools wired the demand to Gov. Talmadge, who replied that the state was carrying out the mandate of the Georgia General Assembly.

FLAYED AS ILLEGAL

A spokesman for the committee said the group considers use of state money to distribute "propaganda" in favor of the amendment illegal.

The $13,000 in state funds is the cost of two statewide mailings of proprivate school amendment material sent out by the Georgia Education Commission.

Durwood Pye, commission secretary, said the law setting up the Segregation Study Commission authorized it to distribute "such reports as might be deemed proper."

The first mailing went out over the weekend to 60,000 Georgians and the other was slated for Tuesday or Wednesday to 30,000.

DEFENDS PROCEDURE

In a telegram Tuesday to Richard C. Burts Jr., chairman of the Bibb committee, Talmadge said a section of the House resolution creating the Georgia Commission on Education provided that such funds as are necessary to effectuate the purposes of the resolution shall be made available by the Bureau of the Budget from money appropriated for the operation of the General Assembly and from such other funds as the Bureau of the Budget may from time to time transfer to the commission.

Who Will Own, Run Schools Under Private School Plan?

We guess we're one of those "bleeding hearts" that Governor-Elect Marvin Griffin refers to when he talks about opponents of the private school amendment.

We find ourselves in agreement with Roy Harris on this proposal. We're against it.

The administration of Governor Talmadge, which put Mr. Griffin in the Governor's office for four years, says the private school plan is to be used as a "last resort" to insure segregation. By dropping one or two words from the state constitution, the supporters of the private school plan hope to get around the Supreme Court's decision.

We know now who runs the schools and who owns them—the taxpayers. Under the so-called private school plan, we don't know who would own and run the schools.

Mr. Harris asks, and no one has given any answer at all, these questions:

1. Who's going to run these private schools?

2. Did you know that it would strip your local board of education of power?

3. Did you know that a few bureaucrats in Atlanta under this plan could lease your school to anybody they saw fit?

4. Who are they going to give your school house to?

We had prefer to resort to the constitutional provision against appropriating money to mixed schools to maintain segregation, rather than throw out all the laws protecting a public school system that has taken 75 years to build.

Those of you who might be opposed to the amendment should ignore these dirty charges that you are opposed to segregation if you vote against this amendment and labels that you are Communist sympathizers. Let them call us what they will but we will stick with people like State School Supt. M. D. Collins, Buck Anderson of Polk County, Bert Struby of The Macon Telegraph, and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. Anyone who labels these men as "nigger lovers" and "Communists" knows he is lying when he makes the charge against those opposed to the amendment.

Masonic Paper, Professors Object To School Plan

Constitution - Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 10-27-54 P.1

The official publication of Georgia Masonic lodges Tuesday came out against the proposed private school amendment, declaring it jeopardizes separation of church and state.

Professors at the Atlanta Division of the University of Georgia also joined the list of opponents to the amendment. The college's chapter of the American Association of University Professors adopted a resolution stating simply that it opposes Amendment No. 4.

TALMADGE APPEAL

Governor Talmadge, speaking over WAGA-TV, appealed to the voters to give the Legislature power to provide schools for Georgia after they are closed down, as a result of the Supreme Court ruling.

The governor said Georgia is between the Georgia constitution on one side and the Supreme Court ruling on the other. The state constitution forbids mixing the races and the Supreme Court forbids segregating the pupils by races.

"We don't want our schools covered with cobwebs and our children to grow up in ignorance," the governor said, forseeing continuation of the present schools, systems and curriculums if the amendment is passed.

Hitting at the editor of the League of Women Voters' state publication as "a white lady teaching in a Negro college," Talmadge said he didn't want advice on how to maintain segregation from her.

'Would the CIO-PAC, NAACP and other organizations be fighting the amendment if they thought it would not maintain segregation?" the governor asked, urging passage of Amendment No. 4.

In another development, State Veterans Service Director Pete Wheeler denied that he assessed his employes for contributions to support the amendment—but stated that he is accepting voluntary contributions from these workers to help finance the campaign. Wheeler said he is making a contribution himself.

CIRCULATED

The Masonic Messenger, opposing the amendment, was circulated Tuesday at the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Georgia Masons in Macon.

"If this amendment should be voted, public monies could be lawfully passed on by the citizens to sectarian schools," the article said. "Such a constitutional amendment is too fraught with danger in its implications to be dealt with as being merely political. It could be epochal in its eventual results. Protestantism, and even liberty itself, could be forfeit if we let the foot in the door."

Constitution

The Georgia Committee to Save Our Schools will present a program against the amendment at 6 p.m. Wednesday over WLW-A. Appearing on the show will be Neil Andrews of Lafayette, committee chairman; Mrs. Stewart Colley, chairman of the board of education of Coweta County and president of the Methodist WMU of Georgia; Mrs. Frances Pauley, president of the Georgia League of Women Voters; State School Supt. M. D. Collins, and Kankakee Anderson of Rockmart, past president of the Georgia Education Assn. and superintendent of Polk County schools.

The Atlanta League of Women Voters, the United Church Women of Atlanta, the Business and Professional Women's Club, and the Georgia Federation of Labor Tuesday began a city-wide drive of opposition to the amendment.

HAND BILLS

Five thousand hand bills were being distributed in downtown Atlanta.

Wed. 10-27-54

Sen. Everett Millican is scheduled to address a public luncheon Friday at Emile's Restaurant, speaking against the amendment. Fulton County School Supt. Paul West, Devereaux McClatchey, president of the Atlanta Board of Education, and Fulton Reps. Muggsy Smith, Hoke Smith and Hamilton Lokey have been invited. Reservations for the luncheon may be made by calling WA. 6111 before 5 p.m. Wednesday.

GOOD COMPANY P. 11

Andrews, chairman of the Committee to Save Our Schools, said proponents of the amendment have no logic so they have substituted personal attacks on popular State School Supt. M. D. Collins and others who are fighting the "debauchment of education."

Answering State Democratic Chairman John Sammons Bell's invitation that the people compare the character of the proponents and opponents of the plan, Andrews said: "The Georgia Committee to Save Our Schools finds itself in good company with the ministers of Georgia, teachers, an overwhelming majority of the press, the church folks and the parents of Georgia's children, who wish them to have an education in their own schools, properly safeguarded."

By ALBERT RILEY

...300,000 and 400,000 Georgians are expected ...the polls Tuesday to cast their ballots in a gen... sparked by a hot battle over ratification of a ...amendment to the state constitution.

And in that election, too, there was an amendment to over write the county unit system into the constitution.

The last previous "off year" general election in 1950 saw only 298,000 Georgians go to the polls. And in that year, also, there was an amendment scrap over extending the county unit system into the general election.

BEARING ON OUTCOME

The size of the voter turnout could have an important bearing on the outcome of the school amendment, which Gov. Talmadge contends is needed to preserve segregation in Georgia. Talmadge, who was defeated in his two county unit amendment fights in 1950 and in 1952, has said that a heavy vote probably would mean approval of the school amendment.

But if the vote is light, the amendment may be defeated, Talmadge also stated.

The amendment would authorize the Legislature to grant funds to individual citizens for educational purposes in discharge of the state's obligation to provide education for its children.

Dr. Collins, leaders of the Georgia Education Assn., Roy Harris, Augusta political leader, and others have waged an organized fight against it. They contend that its ratification would mean abolishment of public schools, and they also argue that it would not guarantee the preservation of segregation in the schools.

POPULAR VOTE BASIS

Like all other amendments and contested races in the general election, the fate of Amendment No. 4 will be decided on a popular vote basis. Therefore, Talmadge apparently was hoping for a big turnout of pro-amendment rural voters to offset opposition votes in the cities.

Cool and partly cloudy weather was forecast for most of the state on election day, with not much rain in prospect.

The polls will open at 7 a.m. and will close at 6 p.m., except in Fulton, DeKalb and a few other counties, where they will remain open until 7 p.m.

A fairly heavy vote was expected in Fulton, DeKalb and Rockdale counties where election interest has been stimulated by a two-party contest for the Fifth District congressional seat.

Charles A. Moye Jr., Decatur attorney, is carrying the first Republican bid for a Georgia congressional seat since Reconstruction Days in an effort to oust the incumbent and Democratic nominee, Rep. James C. Davis.

There is one other contested congressional race in the First District where Rep. Prince Preston is opposed by an independent, Frank O. Downing.

A heavy vote is expected at Albany where there is a torrid battle over a local constitutional amendment that would permit the consolidation of the governments of the City of Albany and Dougherty County.

MUSCOGEE SEATS

Muscogee County voting is expected to be spurred by Republican efforts in the Columbus area to win two more county commission seats. The GOP elected two county commissioners in Muscogee in 1953.

Republicans are ...ning for legislative seats in Fannin, Gilmer, Pickens and Towns counties and for the 41st senatorial district comprising Fannin, Gilmer and Pickens.

In addition to the "private school" amendment, which has the innocuous wording under Amendment No. 4 of simply "adding a new section relating to education" to the State Constitution, these are the six other statewide amendments to be voted upon:

No. 1 is the "home rule" amendment authorizing the Legislature to permit self-government by municipalities.

ANNUAL SESSIONS

No. 2 would require 40-day annual sessions of the Legislature.

No. 3 would exempt church residential property from taxation.

No. 5 would authorize taxation for a firemen's pension system.

No. 6 would authorize cities and housing authorities to undertake slum-clearance and redevelopment work and enable them to obtain federal funds for that purpose.

No. 7 would provide a referendum procedure whereby counties might remove or increase the present 15-mill limitation on school taxes.

PRIVATE SCHOOL AMENDMENT

Of the 40 local amendments to be voted upon, 29 will be decided only in the counties affected. But 11 local amendments will have to be voted upon by the entire state because of a legal technicality.

Three of the local amendments concern only Fulton County.

GEORGIA TO VOTE ON SCHOOL PLAN

Private System to Be Put to Popular Test

ATLANTA, Oct. 31 (AP)—The private school scheme to counter the Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation will be put to a popular vote test in Georgia Tuesday.

About a half million of the state's 1,272,793 registered voters are expected to vote on a controversial constitutional amendment which would clear the way for creating a system of private schools.

The proposed amendment, which has stirred up a hot and some times bitter campaign, does not mention private schools. It only authorizes the grant of state, county or city funds to individuals in discharge of all the state's obligation to furnish an education.

But Gov. Herman Talmadge leading Southern white supremacy champion, and his hand-picked successor, Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin make no secret of their belief that only in private schools can separate classes for white and Negro children be permanently maintained.

And they insist the amendment is necessary to give the Legislature "last resort" power to deal with a final Supreme Court decree banning segregation in any or all of the state's public school systems.

The amendment is the only major issue on the long general election ballot in this one party state, which, with two exceptions, will elect all Democratic nominees without opposition.

For the first time since Reconstruction days following the Civil War, Republicans have nominated a candidate for Congress. But that race involves only populous Fulton (Atlanta) and De Kalb and tiny Rockdale counties in the 5th Dist. where Rep. James C. Davis is opposed by Republican Charles A. Moye Jr.

The only other contest is in the 1st congressional Dist. where Frank O. Downing, a young Savannah, Ga., attorney, is a write-in candidate against Rep. Prince H. Preston. He announced as an independent after disclosure of Preston's connection with a Savannah housing project on which he made substantial profit.

Sen. Richard B. Russell and eight other congressional nominees, including six incumbents, are unopposed as are all Democratic nominees for state and district offices.

The Georgia election will be the first ballot test of the private school plan which several Southern states are considering as a means of circumventing the Supreme Court's May 17 nonsegregation decision.

Action similar to that proposed for Georgia by the Talmadge-sponsored amendment already has been taken by South Carolina. But that came two years before the Supreme Court decision. The state adopted a constitutional change under which the Legislature could abolish public schools.

Mississippi is to vote in December on a similar constitutional change proposed by a recent special session of its Legislature and the private school plan is being studied by some prosegregation leaders in Alabama.

Both Sides Appear on TV, Radio

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Amendment No. 4 will either destroy Georgia's schools or preserve free, segregated education "until doomsday," voters were told on the eve of Tuesday's election.

The predictions came from opponents and supporters, respectively, of the amendment in closing appeals over television and radio.

A former chairman of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools made the flat statement that the University Sistem of Georgia will be knocked off the accredited list if it is changed into a private school system.

This leader, President Emeritus James R. McCain of Agnes Scott, recalled another time when another Gov. Talmadge (father of the present governor) made a serious political error in causing the university to lose its accredited standing.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook expressed the opinion that the amendment would make it possible for Georgia to continue free, segregated schools forever. He said as soon as the courts knock down one plan, another will be substituted.

Gov. Talmadge predicted that schools would be mixed in Atlanta within a year unless the amendment is passed. He said the local federal court would have to follow the decision of the United States Supreme Court, and that a case already is pending from Atlanta.

Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin, urging passage of the amendment, promised he would call the Legislature into sepcial session and furnish "some kind of schools" if the federal courts force the closing of Georgia public schools.

After watching proponents answer questions for an hour, W. P. Sprayberry, president of the Georgia Education Assn., told a television audience: "The proponents still haven't produced any definite plan for the operation of schools. If you want to continue public, segregated schools, vote against Amendment 4."

Legislators, educators, church people, Women and labor representatives battled the amendment in a series of television and radio programs Monday.

44 social scientists on anti-tension group

After American P. 9 Baltimore Md. Sat. 10-30-54

NEW YORK — Forty - four of the nation's leading social scientists have formed a committee of consultants which will seek to prevent outbreaks of racial tension in connection with desegregation of public schools, Thurgood Marshall, director and counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, announced last week.

A. M. LEE

During the past weeks members of the committee were in Milford, Del., and White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., the two communities where overt frictions arose following integration of children in schools in accordance with the U.S. Supreme Court ruling of last May.

Their purpose was to observe the start and development of community tensions, to analyze the forces at work, and to recommend methods for preventing such disturbances there and elsewhere.

ALFRED M. LEE chairman of the department of sociology and anthropology at Brooklyn College, heads the committee of consultants, Mr. Marshall said.

Robert M. MacIver, professor emeritus of sociology at Columbia University is honorary chairman, and Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College of New York and research director of the Northside Center for Child Development, is vice - chairman.

The committee has offered its services as a consulting resource to the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Mr. Marshall said.

MR. MARSHALL pointed out that the U.S. Supreme Court had quoted the findings of several of these social scientists in its May 17 decision outlawing segregation in the public schools.

In effecting the transition to an integrated school system, Mr. Marshall added, we need the assistance of these men and women who have a scientific understanding of the way community processes work.

Professor Lee has defined the need for the consultants' work Mr. Marshall said. He believes that long - standing prejuidices, misconception, fears and superstitions can only be relinquished through a careful process of reconditioning to new conceptions. He feels it is necessary to work with community processes in developing patterns of co-operation which can have general applicability.

This is an area of community action about which there is little precise knowledge and for which new procedures are needed.

Forty-four American social scientists, headed by Alfred McClung Lee, chairman of the department of Sociology and Anthropology at Brooklyn College, have formed a committee of consultants which will seek to prevent outbreaks of racial tension in integration of public schools, it was announced yesterday by Thurgood Marshall, director and counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's Defense and Educational Fund, 107 W. 43d St.

Alfred McClung Lee, chairman of the department of Sociology and anthropology at Brooklyn college, heads the committee of consultants, Marshall said.

Negro Suit On Schools Is Delayed

Constitution

'Study Needed' Following Vote

By M. L. St. JOHN

Negroes who have a segregation suit pending against the City of Atlanta school system will have to make an "exhaustive study" before proceeding with the petition, A. T. Walden said Thursday night in commenting on passage of the private school amendment.

The amendment is designed to make it possible for Georgia to change from a public to a private school system in event the federal courts should order integration in Georgia public schools.

ORIGINAL DELAY

The Atlanta Negro attorney and political figure said the suit in federal district court here had been delayed originally until the United States Supreme Court rendered a final decision in the South Carolina case. The high court has additional hearings on the cases from South Carolina and four other states (not including Georgia) for December.

"I don't think passage of the amendment will have any ultimate effect on the pending suit involving Atlanta," Walden said. "However, so many changes have taken place since the filing of the suit, that we will have to amend the petition."

WILL RECONSIDER

Walden said they would have to "reconsider the whole situation" and make an "exhaustive study."

Meanwhile, Durwood Pye, secretary of the Georgia Commission on Education, predicted it may be years before private school legislation becomes necessary.

He said he, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and commission counsel B. D. Murphy are drafting bills to strengthen the present free, segregated public school system—in accordance with recommendations of the full commission Sept. 19.

These bills will be keynoted by a pupil assignment plan, such as was suggested by gubernatorial candidate Charlie Gowen. When Gowen made his suggestion to the commission, however, he was given a rough time by proponents of the private school plan.

Pye said Thursday that the fact that Georgia now has the amendment would discourage any tests on segregation. He said it isn't the proper time now to go any further in drafting legislation than the proposed strengthening of the present school system.

Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin has said he won't ask the Legislature to act on private school plans until the federal courts actually force the closing of a Georgia school.

The commission's staff is drafting recommended legislation for the January session which would strengthen present laws on assignment of pupils in public schools, laying out of public school district lines, granting authority to local school trustees and giving local school boards power to contract for the education of their children in adjoining school districts.

Latest Associated Press returns from Tuesday's vote on the school amendment showed the plan leading by a vote of approximately 25,000. They showed 198,828 for and 173,672 against with only 28 of the 1,810 precincts not reported.

Atty. Walden Says:

Pvt. School Plan Does Not Affect School Suit Here

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 11-5-54 p. 1

The passage of the "private school" amendment by a slim majority of Georgia voters Tuesday will have absolutely no effect on the segregation suit against the Atlanta School System, according to A. T. Walden, NAACP legal counsel.

Mr. Walden stated that the suit now pending in Federal Court, would be "exhaustively studied" in light of whatever decision is made by the Supreme Court to implement the May 17 decision that public school segregation was a violation of the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court opens hearings on implementing the suit on December 6.

Atlanta World
Atlanta, Ga.

The need for this study said Atty. Walden, was evident at the time of the high court ruling and the decision to make the study was arrived at independently of any consideration of the "private school" plan.

It may be, he continued, that the original petition will be so affected by the coming Supreme Court ruling that amendment of it will be necessary. However, he stated, that it cannot definitely be stated until the time comes.

Lokey, Bell Debate on School Plan

Charges of "smear campaign," "smoke screen" and "tyranny" filled the air Wednesday night as Fulton County Rep. Hamilton Lokey and John Sammons Bell state Democratic chairman crossed swords over the "private school" amendment.

Speaking in a two-man panel discussion at the E. Rivers School, Lokey rapped the "smear campaign against every person opposing the amendment." He said the true merit of the bill could not be determined because the real issues were beclouded with "smoke screens" put up by advocates of the amendment.

Lokey called the "private school" amendment a "vicious measure" and likened it to the Yazoo frauds case, in which a major issue was buried under a provision which sought approval of buying cuspidors.

"UNANSWERED"

The Fulton representative hit at what he termed unanswered questions about the "private school" amendment, asking, "Who will get the schools in Atlanta? What can we do if we don't like the operator? Who will regulate him? Who will bail the operator out if he goes in the red?"

Lokey said further that the "private schools" would not be beyond the control of the Supreme Court as long as there is any state action. "Pretending there are no public schools won't work," he told the gathering.

Bell charged the Supreme Court decision was tyranny in its worst form and that the proposed amendment will best enable the state to maintain segregation in the schools.

STUDENT OVERFLOW

The state Democratic chairman said an overflow of 400 students at a Negro school in Atlanta would be assigned to a white high school if segregation ends. He described a pending case involving a Negro student seeking admittance to a white school in Atlanta and said no funds would be available to run any schools if segregation ends.

Bell said the amendment was to be used only as a last resort to preserve segregation in the schools and that it had been worked out by the best legal minds in the state.

"Some of the people opposing the amendment are doing so in good faith, but they are mistaken," Bell said. "The amendment will not bring about state aid to any parochial school," he added.

Herbert A. Ringel, chairman of the E. Rivers PTA Study Committee, served as moderator of the discussion, with PTA President Robert Wood welcoming the speakers and guests.

Talmadge Says Big Vote Needed on School Plan

By BILL DIEHL
Constitution Staff Writer

MILLEDGEVILLE, Oct. 27—Gov. Talmadge predicted here today a victory for the private school amendment "if there is a heavy vote" but said that if the vote is light, "the efforts of the CIO, NAACP and radical elements of the GEA may result in its defeat."

More than 50 members of the Georgia Legislature, many of them newly nominated, heard Talmadge's forecast as they began a two-day tour of the state's facilities here.

SEEKS SUPPORT

The tour, hosted by Sen-Nominate Arnold Parker and Reps-Nominate Joe Duke and W. E. (Billy) Massee, all of Milledgeville, began at Georgia State College for Women where the governor delivered a luncheon address which, in effect, sought support of the legislators for the private school amendment to be voted upon next Tuesday.

Talmadge was introduced by Duke, who cited educational and other progress made during the outgoing governor's administration.

This visit to GSCW, the boys training school and the State Hospital was organized to give the legislators a chance to study the three facilities and determine their existing and future needs.

Wednesday night the visiting lawmakers toured the Training School for Boys and were entertained at dinner by Bill Ireland, superintendent of the school. Thursday the entire day will be spent at the hospital where Dr. T. G. Peacock, its administrator, will act as host.

The governor discussed the controversial private school amendment in what he called a "blunt and frank" statement of facts. He said those opposing the amendment constantly "go off on some side alley. They bring up every other little side issue they can think of and create some myth, then shoot at that myth."

COBWEBS

He said that unless some provision is made for compliance with the state constitution which requires segregation in the schools, that "cobwebs will soon be drawn across every door to ever school in Georgia."

Talmadge said that if the school amendment passes "you of the Legislature will be granted the weapon which will keep segregation in our schools."

Author of Amendment On Session Opposes It

One of the authors of the constitutional amendment proposing annual sessions of the Legislature is urging Georgians to vote against the amendment next Tuesday.

Rep. Bernard Nightingale of Glynn County said Friday he doesn't believe the amendment, as drawn, will be workable because it won't permit bills introduced one year to be carried over for action the following year.

SEEKS CARRY-OVER

He said the General Assembly should pass another amendment in January to make it possible to continue the practice of carrying over legislation for the second year of a legislator's term.

It is impossible to complete action in 40 days on the hundreds of bills introduced, Nightingale stated. Unless these pending bills can be kept on the calendar for the second year, much legislation will die, he added.

Rep. Fred Bentley of Cobb County, chief author of the amendment, declared this provision was "no oversight," and he urged voters to ratify the amendment Tuesday.

"SPEED ACTION"

"It would speed up action on important bills," Bentley said. "It would clear the docket each year. If any bill still on the calendar when the session closed was important enough, it could be reintroduced the second year."

At present, the General Assembly is authorized to meet 70 days biennially. However, for the past decade, it has been splitting these biennial sessions into annual meetings of 35 days. The proposed amendment calls for annual sessions of 40 days. A legislator is elected for a two-year period.

Cook Opinion Termed Highly Debatable; Additional Groups Take Sides on Issue

An opinion by Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook that has been used as a big talking point for passage of the private school amendment was directly challenged Saturday.

The opinion challenged is his argument that the Supreme Court segregation decision will nullify Georgia's constitutional provisions for public schools.

Atlanta attorney C. Baxter Jones Jr. called the opinion "highly debatable."

And he questioned chances of the state coming out better than second best in any debates with the nation's highest court.

THE OPINION has been used by Talmadge-Griffin administration leaders to back up arguments that there will be no schools at all if the private school amendment is not passed.

It says in effect that when the Supreme Court gets around to ruling on Georgia segregation, the ruling will nullify all of Article 8 of the State Constitution.

Article 8 starts out by saying "Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races." It then goes on to provide for maintenance of the public school and university systems.

Mr. Jones said it is likely that the high court decision will leave all the provisions for schools intact, and merely knock out the segregation provision.

And he said that even if all of Article 8 should go, there is reason to believe the state could go on supporting schools under provisions of Article 7 of the constitution.

THIS SAYS that the state can levy taxes for a number of purposes, including education. Under it, with no further constitutional provisons, the state runs such agencies as the highway, health and welfare departments.

Attorney for the Fulton County Board of Education, Mr. Jones is a member of the Save Our Schools Committee against the amendment. Mr. Cook is on record favoring passage of the amendment.

In the meantime, the amendment's proponents stepped up their campaign to bring it before the people in the dwindling time between now and Nov. 2. John Sammons Bell, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, disclosed the Georgia party is sponsoring a series of television panel discussions in behalf of the proposal.

He said they are designed "to bring the facts" on the amendment to Georgia voters. Mr. Bell said TV stations in Atlanta, Rome and Columbus would carry the programs Monday, Oct. 25; Friday, Oct. 29, and Monday, Nov. 1.

THE FIRST PROGRAM, set for 7:30-8 p.m., will originate from station WAGA-TV in Atlanta and will be carried by stations WLW-A, Atlanta; WBRL-TV of Columbus and WROM-TV of Rome.

Taking part in the discussions will be Gov. Herman Talmadge, Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin, Lt. Gov.-Nominate Ernest Vandiver, Atty. Gen. Cook, Executive Secretary Durwood Pye of the Commission on Education, B. D. Murphy of Fayetteville and Mr. Bell.

The second program will originate from WSB-TV, Atlanta, Oct. 29 at 10 p.m. An hour forum, it will be carried the first half hour by WAGA-TV, WLW-A, WRBL-TV and WROM-TV. Talmadge, Griffin, Vandiver and Cook will be joined in the discussion by Mrs. Iris Blitch of Homerville, national Democratic committeewoman from Georgia and representative-elect from the Eighth District; Mrs. Julius Y. Talmadge of Athens, member of the State Board of Education, and Mrs. T. K. Kendrick, Columbus civic leader.

THE ELECTION-EVE program will be 1½ hours long.

The pro and con argument continued on the measure Saturday. On the against side, two new sources were heard from:

1. William H. Shaw, superintendent of Muscogee County schools and an announced candidate for president of the Georgia Education Assn., announced his opposition to it.

Mr. Shaw said: "Industry never came South until we got a public school system that would educate the masses of the people. Private schools have never been able to educate the masses. And poor people would just not be able to have as good schools as the rich under the private school amendment."

2. The Atlanta Retired School Teachers Assn., saying members had spent their lives building up the public school system, urged its defeat. Among other things, a resolution said the wording of the amendment "is vague, inadequate and misleading and would give to the legislative assembly power paramount to the constitution of the State of Georgia."

IT ALSO ASSERTED the proposal "opens the way for establishing a church-state relationship by subsidizing children whose parents may have the right to select denominational schools."

The League of Women Voters, which has been opposing the amendment all along, took a new swing at it. The organization said its passage could bring "tremendous losses" to farm families through the shutting off of federal subsidies.

These, said the league, total about $15,000,000, and include salaries of county and home demonstration agents, school lunch programs, and the new milk subsidy. A statement said pay for county and home agents "comes through the agricultural extension work of the university, and by federal law will cease if and when the university is no longer a land grant college."

Talmadge Plan

Ga. Schools All Private

BY WILLIAM A. FOWLKES

ATLANTA—Georgians last week passed Gov. Talmadge's so-called private school amendment aimed at circumventing the Supreme Court anti-segregation public school ruling.

However, the vote was no walk-away for the proponents of the defiance measure which would allow the Governor and legislature to abolish public schools and distribute funds to pupils for use in "private" institutions.

Unofficial tallies showed the Talmadge amendment won by a 30,000-odd majority in an election which saw upwards of 375,000 ballots cast.

GOV. TALMADGE, Governor-elect Marvin Griffin and principal state officials used all advertising media lavishly to build up their contention that ratification of Amendment 4 would be the only way to guarantee segregation in Georgia public schools.

Opponents of Talmadge's plan promised a legislative fight if either Talmadge or Griffin try to put it into effect.

State School Superintendent M. D. Collins, who led opponents to the so-called private school plan, announced they would "continue to fight for an increasing educational oppor

Ga. Voters OK Plan To Wreck Schools

ATLANTA — A constitutional amendment that paves the way for Georgia to abolish the public school system to forestall desegregation was passed by a comfortable margin, but faces still another hurdle in the state legislature.

Thursday with practically all returns in, the vote was 208,399 for versus 181,850 against. The victory was attributed to the wool hats in the rural areas who ran up large enough majorities to cancel out the big negative votes of the urban centers like Atlanta and Augusta.

The surprisingly large anti vote, however, could not be interpreted as favoring integration of schools. Part of it was a political fight between Rep. Hamilton Lokeman Talmadge and his hand picked successor Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin.

In addition, many white adherents of segregated schools were opposed to tampering with either the constitution or the public school system.

The Negro vote was definitely a factor. On Sapelo island in McIntosh county where there are only 30 eligible voters, five cast ballots, four Negroes and one white. The vote four against and one for the amendment.

Atlanta's Negro precincts voted almost enmasse against the amendment.

In the fifth district congressional race, incumbent Democratic representative, James C. Davis, a state's righter, won with an almost two to one vote over GOP opponent Charles A. Moye, jr.

The re-election of Senator Sparkman in Alabama was helped by a heavy Negro vote. Sparkman was Democratic running mate of Adlai Stevenson in the last presidential race and spoke forthrightly for civil rights in 1952.

The return of Big Jim Fulsom to the governor's seat in Alabama was also regarded as a happy circumstance by Negro voters. "Big Jim," a school teacher declared, "is for the little people like school teachers and farmers and he's not a Negro hater. For a southern white man he is all right with most all Negroes here."

In Mississippi an easy victory for Sen. James O. Eastland was accompanied by an overwhelming approval of a constitutional amendment tightening voting restrictions to cut down the Negro vote.

Under the amendment, an applicant will be required to read and write (to the satisfaction of the registrar). The only requirement before was that an applicant be able to read, or understand the constitution when it was read aloud.

School Amendment Passes As Rural Count Is Made; US Senate Race Close

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thur. 11-4-54 P. 1

Legislature Fight Predicted As Majority Vote Not Overwhelming

A legislative fight will probably result, observers say, if the state administration tries to effect the Talmadge-backed private school amendment that passed by a narrow marain Wednesday

Tabulations listed 208,399 votes "for", and 181,850 "against" the proposal with 1,803 precincts counted, according to a United Press report

Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin and Gov. Talmadge attempted to allay fears that are apparent for the public schools by saying their "big stick" would not be used without giving the matter careful study.

"No action will be taken under this amendment except through careful study of my administration, the Georgia Commission on Education and, finally, through debate and consideration by the people's duly-elected representatives in the General Assembly," Griffin said. He said he hoped the Supreme Court would never "force" them to use it.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT

Meanwhile, M. D. Collins, state school superintendent, who fought the amendment vigorously, declared in conceding its passage, "We are going to continue to fight for an increasing educational opportunity for the children and teachers of Georgia."

Gov. Talmadge had quite a different tune. "This should put the Supreme Court of the United States and the people of the nation on notice that the people of Georgia are determined to preserve segregation," he said.

Although the "ayes" and "nays" on a city-rural basis were not as sharply divided as had been anticipated, it was a heavy rural vote for the amendment that gave it victory. Rural counties in north Georgia polled a particularly heavy vote against the amendment, although they did go in favor of it.

While 19 of the four-unit counties favored the plan, 11 opposed it. As returns neared completion Wednesday, 108 of the small two-unit counties favored the amendment and 13 opposed it.

Chiding the proponents of the measure for using state tax funds in campaigning for the amendment, Supt. Collins said:

"We the opponents did not have access to the taxpayers' money and I am a taxpayer). We did not have access to the funds of the Georgia Democratic Party (and I am a Democrat.) We have no regrets for the fight we made for free, segregated, public schools. We fought for the children, the teachers, and the taxpayers of Georgia, and we would do so again under the same circumstances."

Continuing, he said:

"This fight shows that most teachers and school administrators think more of the educational opportunities of Georgia's children than they do of their jobs. I am going to remain on the side of the school children."

Another opponent of the amendment, Rep. Hamilton Lokey cautioned the General Assembly that the returns showed almost 50 percent of those voting "don't want the Legislature to interfere with their public schools."

'Big City' Tally Surprises Many

By M. L. ST. JOHN

The private school amendment to try to preserve segregation was trailing by a small margin early Wednesday morning as returns continued to come in from Tuesday's general election.

The latest Associated Press figures showed 118,411 votes for the proposal and 121,268 votes against it. The opposition held a 2,827-vote lead at this time, after trailing most of the night.

The returns were from 753 of the state's 1,810 precincts. The election was on a popular vote basis.

Gov. Talmadge, sponsor of the proposal, predicted it would be ratified by "a substantial margin." He said that most of the "city boxes" were in, and that the votes from the unreported rural precincts would make the victory even greater.

FOES HOLDING OUT

Fulton Rep. Hamilton Lokey, a leader of the opposition, declared he was pleased that the amendment is trailing.

"Whether the amendment wins or loses, however," Lokey commented, "the closeness of the vote will make the Legislature realize that thousands of Georgians prefer to have the General Assembly keep its hands off the school system."

Gov.-Elect Marvin Griffin was more cautious than Talmadge in claiming victory. He said he was surprised at the good vote the amendment received in Fulton and Chatham counties.

GOOD IN BIG CITIES

Latest election figures showed that the school amendment was getting a good vote in all the "big city" counties (the six-unit counties in the primary), in contrast to the votes received by Gov. Talmadge's unsuccessful efforts on county unit amendments. Led by the predominantly metropolitan areas, Georgians twice defeated the unit amendments.

The school amendment got off to a two-to-one lead in early returns from rural areas. However, the returns from metropolitan sections made a close battle out of it with the amendment leading in most of the consolidated reports.

If the amendment is ratified on the final count under the popular vote system, the State Law Department and the Georgia Commission on Education will proceed to draft legislation designed to change the public school system into a private school system.

UNLIKELY IN JANUARY

Apparently, this legislation will not be introduced at the January session. Griffin has said he plans to make no legislative move until the federal court orders the mixing of Georgia schools. Then, he said, he would call an extra session of the Legislature to map a plan to furnish Georgians with "free, segregated schools."

Other political news in Pages 9, 10, 19 and 26.

Fulton county's complete, unofficial vote was against the amendment, 32,669 to 23,535.

With two precincts missing, including the Decatur precinct, DeKalb was opposing the amendment by a vote of 12,651 to 8,625.

(Early returns in Louisiana Tuesday night gave a constitutional amendment which would continue public school segregation under the state's "police power" a margin of 18,373 to 4,043.)

Reports from other heavily-populated counties showed:

Cobb, 2,084 for and 3,336 against, in 3 of 19 precincts.

Bibb, 3,289 for and 3,587 against, in 5 of 9 precincts.

Chatham, complete, 6,635 for and 7,480 against.

Richmond, complete, 2,836 for and 5,555 against.

Floyd, 18 of 19 precincts, 2,896 for and 3,582 against.

Muscogee, 12 of 43 precincts, 1,451 for and 940 against.

Griffin, who visited The Constitution office to see latest election returns, reported that his home county of Decatur supported the amendment by a vote of 3,382 to 277.

Despite cold weather, brisk winds and some hitches, a fair turnout of voters was reported for a general election, the Associated Press said. Interest in the election, which included other constitutional amendments and two congressional races, was centered on the private school amendment battle.

The first precinct to report, Sapelo Island in McIntosh County, gave three votes to one against the school plan. The voting place there closed early — election officials could return to the mainland on the only boat available. There are only 30 eligible voters on the island. Five voted, but one ballot was voided.

Those casting ballots on the island, four Negroes and one white person, voted four to one for Amendment No. 5, authorizing taxation for firemen's pensions.

Georgia voters also were deciding on statewide constitutional amendments which would:

1. Authorize home rule for cities.
2. Provide for 40-day annual sessions of the Legislature.
3. Exempt church parsonages from taxation.
4. Authorize taxes for firemen's pensions.
5. Authorize the purchase of property for slum clearance.
6. Permit raising the 15-mill limitation for school purposes.

Splits Upset Merger Plan For Schools

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Thur. Nov. 4, 1954

City, County Rifts Blamed in 3 Losses

By ANNE GOWEN

City-county differences led to defeat of three of five local school mergers proposed in Tuesday's election, while seven statewide constitutional amendments Wednesday appeared safely on the way to ratification.

The statewide amendment to allow counties to raise the 15-mill school tax limit, which trailed in early returns, had a comfortable majority Wednesday, leading 74,574 to 63,433 after 982 of the state's 1,810 precincts had reported.

PRIVATE SCHOOL AMENDMENT

CLOSEST OF SIX

The vote on this amendment, No. 7 on the ballot, was the closest of the six statewide amendments submitted to the voters Tuesday along with the private school amendment which was heading for approval.

Amendments providing for home rule, annual legislative sessions, tax exemptions on parsonages, firemen's pensions and slum clearance were holding comfortable leads.

Final returns showed voters approved Athens-Clarke County and Douglas-Coffee County school mergers, but rejected Canton-Cherokee County, Thomasville-Thomas County and Elberton-Elbert County consolidations.

An amendment which would have created a single government for Albany and Dougherty County was trounced 4,103 to 1,684 by voters in that city and county.

State and local voters approved amendments which gave broader powers to the Bibb-Macon Health Board and created one school district for Tift County.

EASY PASS

The Clarke-Athens school consolidation passed easily in both city and county, but the Coffee-Douglas merger, favored by Douglas voters 1,039 to 286, squeaked by in the county by 22 votes, 473 to 451.

Out-of-city voters balloted down Thomas-Thomasville and Elbert-Elberton school mergers, but it was the city of Canton which stopped the Cherokee-Canton merger.

The vote in Thomasville was 1,730 to 278 for the merger. Thomas County went 1,399 to 639 against it. The Elberton vote favored consolidation by a two-to-one majority, but the county voted on the same ratio against it. The vote in Athens was 2,859 to 343 for merger and Clarke County approved it, 443 to 127.

Cherokee County went 1,051 to 366 for school consolidation, but Canton killed the measure with a 322 to 219 vote against it.

OUT IN FRONT

Impressive leads held by statewide amendments were 116,046 to 34,870 for home rule (No. 1) in 902 precincts; 94,282 to 38,226 for annual legislative sessions (No. 2) in 901 precincts; 97,116 to 37,402 for tax exemption on parsonages (No. 3) in 874 precincts; 75,323 to 48,469 for firemen's pensions (No. 5) in 848 precincts, and 92,386 to 46,985 for slum clearance (No. 6) in 901 precincts.

The Bibb-Macon Health Board amendment received a majority in every local ballot box and the total vote favored it, 5,346 to 1,561. Tifton voted 1,341 to 248 in favor of one Tift school district and the county approved it, 331 to 293.

Fulton County voters gave overwhelming approval to a local amendment allowing the county to participate in public works projects in towns of not more than 5,000 population. The vote was 17,829 to 5,817 for it.

Segregation Proposal Trailing in Georgia

By the Associated Press

ATLANTIC, Nov. 3—A constitutional amendment designed to preserve racial separation in Georgia schools fell behind early today.

Returns from 747 of the state's 1,810 precincts showed the amendment trailing 114,122 to 113,430.

Most of Georgia's big counties were complete or nearly complete ,however, and many of the missing precincts were believed in rural areas where proponents of the amendment were piling up big majorities.

Only two of the State's 10 Democratic Congressmen had opposition and both won reelection. Reprenesntative Preston polled 14,553 votes to 4,797 for Frank O. Downing, an independent write-in candidate, in returns from 94 of the 1st district's 181 precincts. Representative C. Davis topped Republican Charles Moye, 48,538 to 26,610, in 110 of 11 9precincts of the populous 5th district which includes Atlanta.

The controversial school amendment, favored by Gov. Herman Talmadge and Gov.-nominate Mervin Grifin, would permit Georgia to discharge its educationa lobligations by granting funds to private citizens for their schooling.

Gov. Talmadge and Mr. Grifin declared the school amendment was the only means by which segregatio ncould be preserved. Opponents argued on the other hand that instead of keeping segregation it would hasten mixed schools.

GEORGIA CAUTIOUS ON SCHOOL PLANS

Times P.29

Talmadge Hopes Amendment to Balk the Integration of Pupils Will Not Be Used

Sun. 11-7-54

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Nov. 6 — Georgia will take no immediate action to carry out the provision of the Private School Amendment, ratified on Tuesday by the electorate, state officials declared today.

The complete text of the ratified amendment follows:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution, the General Assembly may by law provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes, in discharge of all obligations of the state to provide adequate education for its citizens."

Ratification of the amendment was followed by a statement from Governor-elect Marvin Griffin that Georgia's schools would continue to operate as they do now until such a time that he found it necessary to carry out the provisions of the amendment. He expressed the hope that he would never have to use the amendment.

"However, if the United States Supreme Court is so unrealistic as to attempt to enforce this unthinkable evil [unsegregated schools] upon us, I serve notice now that we shall resist it with all the resources at our disposal, and we shall never submit to the proposition of mixing the races in the classrooms of our schools," Mr. Griffin said.

Hopes to Avoid Action

Gov. Herman E. Talmadge voiced the hope that it never would be necessary to use the amendment.

"This [amendment] should put the Supreme Court of the United States and the people of the nation on notice that the people of Georgia are determined to preserve segregation," said Governor Talmadge.

These statements indicated that Georgians need not expect any change in the present operations of the schools or in their financing.

In leading the fight for the amendment, both Mr. Talmadge and Mr. Griffin stressed the fact that under Georgia's Constitution it would be illegal to appropriate any funds toward the operation of any school in which integration was ordered.

Proponents of the amendment pointed out that it did not give the General Assembly authority to abolish the public schools. They argued that its one purpose was to guarantee a continuance of segregated education.

The Attorney General, Eugene Cook, in a pre-election statement, declared:

"Under this amendment, if the United States Supreme Court knocks out one of Georgia's enabling acts, the Governor-nominate [Mr. Griffin] says he will call the Legislature and pass another one. Thus we can keep substituting plans until doomsday."

Argument of Opposition

Opponents of the amendment contended that it would not maintain segregation, but would in effect abolish the state's public schools.

The State Superintendent of Education, Dr. M. D. Collins, who spearheaded the fight against the amendment, rallied the opposition with the statement that "I'm not going to sit idly by and see the children of Georgia sold down the river even if they try to lynch me."

Commenting editorially after the election, the Atlanta Constitution said:

"Never before have the people voted so great a concentration of power in the State Capitol," he declared. "The solemn fact is that the future of education in Georgia no longer belongs to the educators or to the people."

In the final analysis it was racial traditions that swung the tide in favor of the private school amendment. The rural vote overcame a small lead built up in the big cities, which did not back the amendment as strongly as was anticipated.

Final tabulation of the vote on the amendment shows that it passed with a 22.555 majority, with some 370,000 votes being cast.

SEGREGATION FIGHT FAR FROM OVER IN GEORGIA

Daily Tribune

Amendment's Foes to Continue Battle

Chicago, Ill.
P. 14

Atlanta, Nov. 15 [Special]— Georgia's fight to keep its public schools is not over, altho voters have ratified a constitutional amendment that would permit the legislature to set up a system of private schools as a means of circumventing the United States Supreme court decision to abolish segregation in public education.

Opponents of the segregation amendment, who lost their fight by only about 25,000 votes, have announced they will continue their battle in the legislature if the administration of Gov. Elect Marvin Griffin seeks to put the amendment into effect.

Vows to Continue Fight

"We are going to continue to fight for an increasing educational opportunity for the children and teachers of Georgia," said State School Supt. M. D. Collins, leader of the opposition forces.

This statement indicated that Collins and his opposition team will attempt to get the legislature to turn thumbs down on the proposal.

Whether the amendment will be sought when the general assembly convenes in January has not been made clear. Griffin continues to call the amendment a "last resort" measure

Promises "Careful Study"

Even after the general election, he expressed hope that the Supreme court would never force Georgia to use the amendment to prevent mixing of the races in the schools.

"No action will be taken under this amendment except thru careful study of my administration, the Georgia commission on education and, finally, thru debate and consideration by the people's duly elected representatives in the general assembly," he promised.

Gov. Herman Talmadge, who teamed up with Griffin to put the amendment over, threw down the gauntlet in his victory statement following the election.

Analysis of Returns

"This should put the Supreme court . . . and the people of the nation on notice that the people of Georgia are determined to preserve segregation," he said.

Analysis of returns on the amendment shows that it was the rural vote which actually clinched victory, after a seesaw battle in the vote counting which frequently had the opposition in the lead.

However, the so-called "big city" counties gave a larger vote for the proposal than had been expected, even tho most of them actually went against it. And, paradoxically, a number of rural counties, particularly in North Georgia, voted against the amendment and many others turned in a heavier opposition vote than was anticipated.

Talmadge, Harris Split Over Plan

By M. L. ST. JOHN

A hot dispute raged Friday night over whether mixed schools would come to Georgia because of the passage, or because of the defeat of Amendment No. 4 in next Tuesday's election.

The arguments saw Gov. Talmadge warn Atlantans that delayed action could mean Negroes and whites in the same schools within a year, after Fulton County Rep. Hamilton Lokey had appealed to the voters not to pass the amendment and thereby "commit educational hari-kari in advance of court orders."

HARRIS WARINING

Regent Roy Harris of Augusta, a champion of segregation, warned that passage of the amendment would legalize mixed schools in Georgia. He said it also would make it legal for the state, indirectly, to contribute to church schools.

Gov. Talmadge, Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin and others contended that the amendment is the only solution to the preservation of segregated schools.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and Harris disputed whether the General Assembly already has the powers which proponents say the amendment seeks—the power to make educational grants to individuals and to create private schools.

CITES GRANTS

Harris said the regents have been making educational grants to Negroes for years to attend colleges in other states. Cook said these were not scholarships, but were contracts with the out-of-state colleges for services. Harris said the Legislature has the power to establish private schools and cited Mercer University as an example. Cook said the state merely granted Mercer a charter, that it already was a religious school and that even the charter - granting power has been transferred from the Legislature to the superior courts now.

TV SHOW

The Georgia Democratic Party presented a television network in support of the amendment Mrs. Iris Blitch of Homerville, Memocratic national committeewoman and congresswoman - nominate from the Eighth District; Mrs. T. K. Kendrick of Columbus, vice chairman of the Georgia Democratic Party and a PTA leader; National Democratic Committeeman Robert Elliott of Columbus; Mrs. Julius Y. Talmadge of Athens, member of the state board of Lt. Gov.-Nominate Ernest Vandiver, Gov.-Nominate Griffin and Gov. Talmadge.

The Georgia Education Assn. presented Harris and former GEA president Kankakee Anderson in a TV broadcast. Earlier in the day, Fulton Reps. Lokey and Hoke Smith, Paul West, Fulton school superintendent, and Devereaux McClatchey, president of the Atlanta Board of Education, opposed the amendment at a luncheon sponsored by the Atlanta League of Women Voters.

Supporting the amendment, Mrs. Blitch said if Georgians defeat the proposal, the enemies of the Southern way of life will take it as a signal to "ram anything down our throats." Those enemies will say "they talk a lot, but they don't do anything about it," Mrs. Blitch warned.

Elliott urged the people to follow the "tried and true" Georgia leaders and not a small group of "professional agitators from outside the state and misguided individuals inside Georgia who are trying to destroy segregation."

ESSENTIAL

Vandiver said it is essential that the legislature be given the widest latitude possible to deal with the segregation problem.

Talmadge said lawyers of the opposition admit the public school system will break down when the court orders schools mixed. They would leave the schools wrecked, he said. The amendment would make it possible for free, segregated schools to continue, he added.

Earlier Friday, Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin appealed to 20,000 persons at Cairo to support the amendment.

Addressing a three-county "REA Appreciation Day" program, Griffin said: "The people elected me their governor upon my pledge that there would be no mixed schools in Georgia, and I shall do everything in my power when I am governor to keep that pledge inviolate. However, we must be given the tools with which to carry out that pledge, and the tools must be provided only by the voters in the adoption of Amendment 4."

Lokey declared that Georgians some day may have to decide whether they want their children to attend non-segregated schools or no schools at all, but it is foolish to abolish public schools before that decision is faced. Georgians will have plenty of time to decide after litigation goes through the courts, he added.

The South DeKalb High School PTA was on record Friday opposing the amendment. So was Stephens County Ministerial Assn. Thirteen members of the group, however, signed a resolution later saying they were in favor of its passage.

GEA SPONSOR

Dean George Manners of the School of Business Administration said the local chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors, which is against the plan, doesn't speak for the entire faculty. He said he and other professors favor the plan. The chapter has only 15 members in a faculty of 220, he added.

In his television appearance sponsored by the Georgia Education Assn., Harris said the present law shutting off funds for mixed schools is the only plan that will preserve segregation. The NAACP won't push tests if it prevents Negroes from getting any education, he contended. Harris said the court cannot force the Legislature to make appropriations.

(The private school plan won't work, Harris declared. It isn't a private school when state funds and state property are used.)

Opposition To Amendment Four, Six To Be Stressed

A final voters mass meeting, prior to the much-talked-abou November 2 election, will be held Monday night, 8 P. M. at the Ebenezer Baptist Church, Rev. M. L. King, pastor.

The meeting which will herald a final appeal at opposing Constitutional Amendments Four and Six, will be held under the sponsorship of the Atlanta Negro Voters League, and will be presided over by Co-Chairmen Atty. Austin T. Walden and Rev. W. M. Jackson.

Highlights of the meeting will include demonstrations on a voting machine facsimile and explanations of the import of the constitutional amendments and how they will affect the Negro public.

A highlight of the meeting will come when the Rev. L. M. Terrill, pastor of Mt. Zion Baptist Church, will speak on Amendment Number Six.

LED COMMUNITY CRUSADE

Rev. Terrill who two years ago led a community crusade against the city relocating the so-called McDaniel Street area, and selling the property to private enterprise instead of building housing units for the displaced people, is vigorously opposing the Sixth Amendment which apparently will give the city additional power to relocate Negro residential districts.

Rev. Terrill declared recently that "If any Negro or low income white man votes for Amendment No. 6 he is voting to give every town, city and county in Georgia the power to condemn and sieze (at a very low price) their private property and resell it to rich private individuals or rich private corporations for their own private use."

Opponents of Amendment 4, the so-called private school amendment will oppose for the a final time, the idea of Negroes aiding Georgia officials to break what has become a national law, via the U. S. Supreme Court decision, outlawing school segregation.

Warren Cochran will demonstrate how to use the voting machine to the public to aid the voter in avoiding a possible baffling situation at the polls.

Other speakers will include: Roderick Harris and C. A. Scott of the Atlanta Daily World.

Here Are The Ten Amendments Of Direct Interest To Fulton Co.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Only ten of the 19 amendments on the November 2 ballot will have direct effect on Atlantans and residents of Fulton County. Because the ballot is huge and possibly misleading, the WORLD seeks to aid the voter by quoting each Constitutional Amendment of interest to this area.

AMENDMENT ONE

A vote for or against "Ratification of amendment to the Constitution so as to authorize the General Assembly to provide for self government of municipalities."

AMENDMENT TWO

A vote fo ror against "Ratification of amendment to Article III, Section IV, Paragraphs I and III of the Constitution as to provide for annual sessions of the General Assembly not to exceed forty (40) days."

AMENDMENT THREE

A vote for or against "Ratification of amendment to Article VII, Section 1, Paragraph IV, of the Constitution of Georgia providing for the exemption of all property owned by religious groups for residential purpses and from which no income is derived."

AMENDMENT FOUR

For or against "the amendment to Article VII of the Constitution adding a new section relating to education."

AMENDMENT FIVE

For or against "ratification of amendment to Atricle VII, Section II, of the 1945 Constitution of Georgia, so as to provide that taxation may be exercised for the purpose of paying pensions under a firemen's pension system."

AMENDMENT SIX

For or against "Ratification of amendment to the Constitution of the State of Georgia by adding a new Article to be designated Article XXI, Slum Clearance and Redevelopment."

AMENDMENT SEVEN

For or against "Ratification of amendment to the Constitution so as to provide for a procedure by which a county may remove or increase the limitation of the tax levy for education."

AMENDMENT THIRTY-ONE

For or against "Ratification of amendment to Paragraph III of the amendment to Article XI of the Constitution of the State of Georgia of 1945 ratifies on the 4th day of November, 1952, permitting Fulton County to participate in the contruction and repair of highways and appurtenances in municipalities located in whole or in part in that county."

AMENDMENT THIRTY-TWO

For or against "Ratification of amendment to Article VII, Section I, Paragraph IV, of the Constitution, providing that the homestead exemption shall not apply to taxes limited to the Fulton County School District for the support and maintenance of education as recommended by the Fulton County Board of Education."

AMENDMENT THIRTY-THREE

For or against "Ratification of amendment to Article VII, Section VII, Paragraph I, of the Constitution, providing that the debt incurred by the Fulton County Board of Education for the Fulton County School District shall not exceed 10 per cent of the assessed value of all the taxable property therein."

Noted Local Ministers Speaks Out Against Amendment No. Six

By Dr. L. M. Terrill
Pastor of Zion Hill
Baptist Church

In our justifiable anxiety to save the public schools of Georgia, we have concentrated our opposition to Amendment No. 4 and have lost sight of the hidden, far-reaching and subtle dangers in Amendment No. 6. The two main groups who live in what has been classified as "Slum Areas" in our state are Negroes and low-income white people. If any Negro or low-income white man votes for Amendment No. 6 he is voting to give every town, city and county in Georgia the power to condemn and seize (at a very low price) their private property and resell it to rich private individuals or rich private corporations for their own private use.

In my opinion there is too much of the flavor of Communism and Socialism in this procedure and thus takes away individual freedom. A Negro will not be free to get the best price for the sale of his property, but will have to take what he can get for it. The same holds true for the Negro businessman and the Negro church. I don't believe that low-income white people and Negroes would get enough from the sale of their businesses, churches and homes to relocate anywhere

The classified "Slum Areas" in Atlanta are the Auburn Avenue Area, the Summerhill area, Pittsburgh-Mechanicsville area, and the Magnolia Street area. How could any Negro vote for an amendment like No. 6, whch gives the city of Atlanta power to condemn his own home, his own business or his own church against his will. This amendment seems to destroy his freedom to bargain for the sale of property for which the Negro has worked so hard and long.

The other strong objection that all Negroes should voice against Amendment No. 6 is that it makes room for the continuation of segregation. Can any Negro afford to vote for any amendment that attempts to continue him as inferior and a second-class citizens? Here is what I mean and here is why I say that Amendment No. 6 is subtle and dangerous. Since housing is closely related to the public school system in Georgia, Amendment No. 6 gives the city power to condemn property that Negroes live in that are close and near to white schools and force Negroes to seek homes elsewhere. This would not be difficult to do since practically all Negro dwellings in a situation of this sort could be classified as "Slum Dwellings."

These two objections are enough to cause every right-thinking Negro to go to the polls on November 2, 1954 and vote against Amendment No. 6.

Co[illegible] to hear arguments Dec. 6—

At least six states prepare to ask high tribunal for gradual mixing in classes

ATLANTA, Sept. 25—(AP)—Despite a stern warning from South Carolina's elder statesman, Gov. James F. Byrnes, at least six states are prepared to ask the U. S. Supreme Court for gradual [illegible] of white and Negro children in classrooms.

The court will hear arguments [illegible] on means of putting into [illegible] its ruling of last May 17 [illegible] public school segregation.

[illegible] Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Maryland, Kansas and [illegible] will appeal for sufficient time and some degree of [illegible] in working out the [illegible] of complying with the [illegible] decision. [illegible] already under way peacefully in many of the 20 areas where segregation was practiced.

But it has proved painful in a few instances and segregation figured as an issue in Ohio where racial separation long has been [illegible].

TAKING NOTE of disturbances which accompanied integration in Delaware and West Virginia, and the Ohio incident, Byrnes said Friday that such events in areas with small Negro populations are strong arguments in favor of the continuance of segregated schools. If there is such feeling in the border and Northern states with their slight Negro populations, he said, far more serious situations will arise "in such counties as Clarendon in this state" where Negroes outnumber white about 10 to 1.

Meanwhile, pressure for immediate steps to end segregation mounted as new demands for admission to previously all-white schools came from Negroes in Alabama and Oklahoma.

AND THE INCIDENTS to which Gov. Byrnes referred appeared ot be subsiding in face of quick and determined action by authorities.

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware personally took a hand. Boggs demanded that the Milford High School, center of mounting tension after a racial flareup, be reopened Monday "without incident," to both white and Negro students. "I must say frankly," he declared, "that law and order will be preserved under the law and the American way."

Delaware has ordered integration of its schools, but the state school board said Milford did not comply with a directive requiring state board approval of integration plans.

Strikes by students in several West Virginia high schools over admission of Negroes apparently were all but over with no new incidents. West Virginia makes integration optional with local boards and several counties have de-segregated with no trouble. Others are awaiting final Supreme Court action.

IN OHIO, GOV. Frank Lausche said there are some instances of segregation and added "every child is entitled to be treated on an equal basis in our schools." He commented after a suit was filed accusing Hillsboro of segregating Negro children by a new zoning order.

Most of the segregation states will not participate in the Dec. 6 arguments before the Supreme Court, a survey showed today. But two of them, Arizona and New Mexico, which had partial segregation, have eliminated even that.

Kentucky will not appear, but officials have said the state would make every effort to comply with the court ruling when it is final.

Missouri is eliminating its few areas of segregation without incident and also will not appear. Kansas likewise is integrating, but will ask the court to recognize its program and afford time for completion.

OKLAHOMA IS preparing to end segregation, but needs a constitutional amendment to change its complex tax structure and will ask the court to recognize its financial difficulties. Meanwhile, three El Reno Negroes have filed suit seeking admission to their hometown state junior college.

The suits on which the Supreme Court based its decision came from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

South Carolina will not participate in the arguments, Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison holding that the suit was against Clarendon County school district and that the state is not a party by name.

Virginia will appear, but Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., would not disclose the nature of his remarks. He has said however that he believes no school child in Virginia will be compelled to attend school with another race. And Gov. Thomas B. Stanley has frequently declared he would use every legal means to preserve segregation.

SOMEWHAT in the same situation is Texas, whose attorney general, John Ben Shepperd, will either file a brief or appear personally. But Gov. Allen Shivers, who recently won renomination, has pledged that no white and Negro children will attend school together so long as he is governor.

Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia also will boycott the hearing on the ground that to participate might morally bind the state to comply with the final decree.

But North Carolina Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan said he was notified by Supreme Court Clerk Harold B. Willey that such was not the case. He said Willey wrote that "I can assure you that neither the filing of a brief by you nor your participation in oral arguments will have the effect of making North Carolina a party to this litigation. Your role and that of the other states appearing will simply be that of an amicus curiae (friend of the court)."

ONE OF THE STATES which will ask for time, North Carolina has taken no steps to integrate public schools, but Catholic schools in Raleigh and Charlotte are admitting both races. But Gov. William B. Umstead has received a petition from Pender County, with a 51 per cent Negro school population, urging continuance of segregation.

Another state asking time is Arkansas, where segregation has been ended in at least two public schools. Atty. Gen. T. J. Gentry will ask the court to go slow in forcing integration at the request of groups in East Arkansas which has a large Negro population.

Florida has attempted no integration and presently has no plans to try to circumvent the [illegible] court decision.

TENNESSEE originally planned to participate in the arguments, suggesting integration be undertaken gradually beginning with the first grade. But Gov. Frank Clement has since decided the best course is to remain out of the case.

No integration has been attempted in Tennessee, but a small Catholic Negro school in Nashville was consolidated with a white school without incident. In the only official state action thus far, the state education board denied five Negroes admission to Memphis State College.

LEADERS WHO DISCUSSED the proposed private school plan, amendment four over station WLW-A TV, Channel 11 at 6 P. M. The group called on Georgia citizens to vote against the amendment "which endangers the future of public education in the state of Georgia." Left to right are Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta University, and member of the Atlanta Board of Education; Rev. Samuel W. Williams, Dr. William Boyd, Dr. Harry V. Richardson, moderator; Mrs. Cathryn Johnson, Professor C. EDUCATION 1954 GEORGIA TENSION

CAPITOL NOTEBOOK

Private School Plan 'Pig in a Poke'

If Georgians vote for a private school amendment, they will "buy a pig in a poke." There is no way around it. The question is whether they trust their legislators to have a good pig in the sack—and whether the legislators are able to produce a pig at all.

Opponents have made much of the lack of information on Amendment No. 4. Some have requested the impractical in the way of information to be placed in the Constitution itself.

They have asked to see the entire plan before voting on it—instead of after voting on it. Their insistence has led Durwood Pye, secretary of the Georgia Commission on Education, to outline a "private school plan." But that doesn't mean the Pye plan is the plan which will be adopted. It isn't written into the proposed amendment.

TALMADGE JOB

It is impractical to write so much detail into the basic law. The men who rewrote the State Constitution in 1945 sought to freeze into the basic law only general policies, and leave the details to statutes passed by the Legislature. Laws can be changed easily to meet changing conditions; amending the Constitution is a slower process.

Gov. Talmadge has declared that Amendment No. 4 is not a "private school plan" in that it is no "plan" at all, but merely a permit for the Legislature to draft a plan. Giving the General Assembly a permit is "buying a pig in a poke," since even the legislators themselves don't know what they will do.

Pye said his plan will change the schools from a public to a private base without intterrupting the education of the children. The private schools would be licensed, regulated, accredited and controlled by the state government. Pye thinks this would work without bringing the system back under the United States Supreme Court decision on segregation in public schools.

COLLINS QUESTIONS

State School Supt. M. D. Collins has fired a multitude of questions at this plan. Former Federal Judge Neil Andrews and former City Judge William Ingram of Cartersville have said it won't work. They say the state cannot finance and supervise schools without these schools being "public" under the decision of the court.

The Pye plan isn't necessarily the plan the voters would be buying. The Pye plan hasn't been drafted in detail by the law department. It hasn't been approved by the 21-member Georgia Commission on Education. It hasn't been submitted to the General Assembly.

Regardless of how many questions are asked about the Pye plan, and how many answers are given before the election, nothing will be proven for certain. Because the 259 members of the Georgia Legislature will have the responsibility of writing the plan—if the people decide to give permission to change the State Constitution and make grants in discharge of all obligations to provide an education to the citizens.

Reject Request of Teachers' Union

The police department rejected yesterday a request of the Chicago Teachers union that a uniformed police officer be assigned to each of Chicago's 48 public high schools "for the protection of pupils and teachers."

Thomas V. Lyons, acting chief of the uniformed force, notified district police commanders he had refused the request because "the demands for police services are so great that it would be impossible to comply without neglecting other essential duties."

Orders Conferences

Lyons ordered districts to instruct patrolmen walking posts and assigned to squad cars to check these high schools frequently and to visit the "candy and school supply stores." He also ordered supervising sergeants to confer with school principals frequently to learn "their problems and take the best means of effecting an improvement."

A spokesman for the union, an AFL affiliate with more than 9,000 members in the public school teaching force of 15,000 persons, confirmed the request had been made and said the assignment of a uniformed officer in each high school would have "a preventive effect on juvenile delinquency."

The spokesman said the union had been attempting since last September to get this police protection. Altho he refused to outline in detail reasons why such protection is urgent, it was learned that attacks on pupils and rowdy conduct have increased.

Won't Identify Schools

Lyons said the new order does not affect the present assignment of a policeman to each of three high schools in the city where there have been racial disturbances "or particular problems." He refused to identify these schools.

Lyons said the practice of stationing a uniformed man in a high school without a "pressing reason" was halted last September by Commissioner O'Connor when the 44 hour week went into effect.

Evansville Indiana Parents Picket School For Admitting Negroes

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (ANP) — Desegregation is having troubles in the North as well as the South.

Forty parents picketed in front of a Harwood school just north of Evansville last week protesting because 30 Negro pupils have been admitted to the school.

The big difference, however, is that school officials intend to make the parents behave.

Prosecutor Paul Wever said he will write the parents of absent students (40 per cent out of 675 showed up last week) warning them the students will face truancy charges.

The grade school, operated by Center Township, opened Sept. 7, admitting Negroes for the first time.

A state law, outlawing race segregation in schools, has been taking effect gradually, progressing through the grades, since it was passed in 1949.

Negroes attend all city high schools and most grade schools in Evansville, Indiana's southernmost major city.

Indiana Parents Picket At Desegregated School

EVANSVILLE, Ind. —(AP)— A picket line of 40 parents paraded Monday in front of the Harwood School in nearby Center township protesting the admission of 30 Negro pupils.

The picketing was orderly as a sheriff and two deputies watched.

Officials said the grade school, which opened Sept. 7, has 675 pupils. About 40 per cent were absent Monday.

Negroes attend all high schools and most grade schools in Evansville, but this is the first time they were admitted in the Center township school just north of Evansville.

Prosecutor Paul Wever said he will compile a list of the names of all absent pupils and will write their parents explaining the state law and the possibility of truancy charges.

Indiana's desegregation law has gradually been enforced since 1949.

Temporary Truce Made in School Row

MILFORD, Del. —(AP)— The segregation issue reached the near-boiling point in this Mason and Dixon Line community Monday night, then simmered down temporarily.

The Rev. Randolph Fisher, local head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, announced 11 Negro students will be withdrawn from school until Monday.

The board of education, which conducted an emergency four-hour meeting Monday night punctuated by the shouts and door-pounding of aroused residents outside the meeting hall, announced the town's two schools would open as scheduled Tuesday.

William V. Sipple, Jr., member of the board, said the board decided to open the schools Tuesday and that a spokesman for the Negro pupils would be asked to keep them away until after the local board meets with the state board of education Thursday night.

Sipple added, however, the board received assurances from the spokesman for the Negro students that such would be done.

"We still don't know whether we will have trouble Tuesday or not."

The recommendation for a meeting of the local board of education and the state board came from Gov. J. Caleb Boggs, who urged that the schools be opened if at all possible.

GARY GIVES VIEW ON SCHOOL PLAN

Says Formula Submitted by Jackson's Office

Leon Gary, mayor of Houma and a member of the state board of education, said Tuesday that the equalization formula approved by the board Aug. 27 was recommended by the office of the state department of education.

"This is the plan that we adopted," said Gary, "on the recommendation of the office of State Supt. Shelby M. Jackson, which he now charges is 'playing politics with the school children in Louisiana.'"

Jackson made the accusation in Baton Rouge Saturday after the board, in a 6-5 vote, refused to reconsider its previous approval of the plan. His remark was obviously directed to the six members of the majority.

"At our state board meeting Aug. 27, there was submitted the original equalization formula for the 1954-55 school session," Gary said in a long distance telephone conversation from Houma.

"The plan was submitted by Mr. Jackson, with a letter accompanying dated Aug. 24, from Mr. Jackson's office, submitted by his supervisor of finance, George B. Benton Jr.

Calls Plan 'Soundest'

"Benton's comments on Plan No. 5 were as follows:

"'Plan No. 5 is one which, in my judgment, would be the soundest method of distributing state funds.

"'During 1929 and 1930, several interested superintendents, along with the governor and Supt. (T. H.) Harris, decided that some additional support would have to be given the poorer parish school boards unable to carry on a full nine-months program for its white schools.

"'This group came up with what is known as an equalization plan. As you know, over the years this program has to all intents and purposes lost its identity as an equalization fund and has become just another state distribution of funds.

"'Proposal No. 5 takes into consideration not only the per educable distribution but also the teachers' salary fund distribution and the bus operators' salary fund distribution in the support program of the equalization fund.

"'In other words, since these two new salary funds are more or less in the same category as the per educable distributions, and since we charge the per educable distribution against parish school boards in the support program, there is no reason why we should not charge the two new salary distributions in a like manner.

Asks Gradual Effectiveness

"'Another feature to this proposal would mean that if any parish received more than its proportionate share in either of the new salary funds distribution, the adjustment would automatically be made in any funds received by that parish in the equalization fund and, by the same token, if a parish is not receiving what it should in proportion, from either of these salary fund distributions, then this adjustment would likewise be automatically taken into consideration through the equalization fund.

"'I wish to point out that if the merits of this proposal are such that the state board of education would want to put it into operation, that it do so over a period of not less than three years.

"'Any time a major change is made in a state distribution of funds, some parishes will gain money, and other parishes will lose money. In order that no parish will be seriously handicapped by changing to such a plan, one-third of the salary fund distribution should be set up in the support program the first year, two-thirds should be set up in the second year.'"

Lawyers Who Tried To Register Students Face Disbarment

BATON ROUGE, —(ANP)— The lon garm of white supremacy threatened to reach out and disbar the attorneys who attempted to register 39 Negroes at a white school here.

On the recommendation of the state's joint legislative committee to maintain segregation, the East Baton Rouge school board called on the Louisiana Bar association to investigate actions by Attys. Alex Pitcher and Johnny Jones.

The school board asked whether the two lawyers have violated a bar association canon which prohibits "fementing litigation or strife." The legislative group's general counsel, William Shaw, said ethical canons prevent lawyers from promoting strife or drumming up business.

The attorneys, if found guilty, can be disbarred by the state supreme court upon recommendation of the bar association's committee on ethics.

The two lawyers represent the NAACP here. Pitcher took 39 Negro children to a white elementary school on Sept. 2 and unsuccessfully attempted to register them.

Sixteen parents subsequently signed statements that they had not given permission for their children to try to register at the white school.

SCHOOL CHANGES TO BE VOTED ON

Would Put System Under State Police Power

(This is one of a series of stories on the proposed constitutional amendments which will be voted on Nov. 2.)

By B. L. KREBS

Proposal No. 16 on the constitutional amendment ballot in the November election, probably the most controversial of the proposed changes in the state's 33-year-old constitution, seeks to place the public schools of the state under the police power, as a means of circumventing the recent supreme court decision invalidating the "equal but separate" formula for segregation in the schools.

It is one of four proposed changes affecting the educational system operated by the state, and is the most important of the four.

Three other proposals of statewide interest affecting the public schools are:

Proposal No. 7 on the ballot, changing the method of disposing of the proceeds of the 2 per cent state sales and severance tax.

Proposal No. 11 on the ballot making a minor change in the minimum age of children to the public schools.

Proposal No. 29 authorizing school districts to bond taxable property up to 25 per cent of the assessed valuation, with the consent of a majority of the qualified property taxpayers.

The proposals in amendments 11 and 16 relate to the same section (10) of article 12 of the constitution, which article covers the field of public education. As first amended in 1944 to provide for the admission of children to elementary schools before their sixth birthday, this section now reads:

"The educational system of the state shall consist of all public schools, and all institutions of learning supported in whole or in part by appropriation of public funds. Separate public schools shall be maintained for the education of white and colored children between the ages of six and 18 years; provided that children attaining the age of six within four months after the beginning of any public school term or session may enter such schools at the beginning of the school term or session, and provided further kindergartens may be authorized for children between the ages of four and six years."

Proposal No. 11 merely adds a phrase to this section, authorizing parish school boards to restrict the admission of under-age children to those attaining five years for kindergarten, and six years for elementary on or before Dec. 31.

Proposal No. 16 on the ballot, however, which is the keystone of the segregation program, rewrites Sec. 1 entirely, so as to read as follows:

"The Legislature shall provide for a public educational system of the state to consist of all public schools and all institutions of learning operated by state agencies, and enact laws on all matters regarding the terms and qualifications for admission to the public schools.

"Children attaining the age of six within four months after the beginning of any school term or session may enter such schools at the beginning of any school term or session, and kindergartens may be authorized for children between the ages of four and six.

"The Legislature may designate and provide for a special election

PETITION IS HELD BY SCHOOL BOARD

Forty Caddo Negro Families Ask Integration

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

SHREVEPORT, La., Sept. 11—A petition presented by the Shreveport branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asking for integration of the races in the Caddo parish schools will be considered at the October meeting of the school board.

Marvin W. Bass, president of the board, said Saturday that a special meeting will not be held unless the board members request it.

The petition containing the signatures of 40 Negro families with children in school was circulated by the Shreveport branch with the assistance of the state executive secretary in Baton Rouge.

Leonard Avery, the executive secretary, said Saturday that the signatures were obtained throughout the city without regard for attendance districts. None was circulated in the rural schools. Avery said the signers were not obtained in attendance districts where lack of equal facilities might be used for appeal.

Bass pointed out that the state law provides a severe penalty against a school board that brings about desegration of the races. One section of the law fixing a penalty provides that a board risks the danger of having all state funds withdrawn from the school board. In the case of Caddo this amounts to between $3 and $4 million.

Bass noted that the action here is similar to a widespread movement through the South by the NAACP to propagandize the efforts to gain desegration in the schools.

The petition is based upon a United States supreme court decision May 17 declaring segregation in the schools to be unconstitutional. The court delayed a ruling on a method of desegregation until this fall when the various states may prepare themselves for an answer to the decision.

Avery said that the petition was prepared to bring to the attention of the school board the "problem that is apparent to the public" and let the board sit down with a committee from the NAACP and work out a solution. He said the organization will stop at nothing short of realizing integration.

Segregation, War Bonus Issues Highlight Election

BATON ROUGE, Nov. 1.—(AP)—Louisiana plays a cut and dried Democratic role in Tuesday's national election struggle for Congress, with the state's voting centered on school segregation, a Korean war bonus and annual legislature.

News, 11-2-54

United States Senator Allen J. Ellender and all eight House incumbents are assured of returning to office in this one-party state, although one congressional race is contested.

p. 3

The Lone Democrat with a rival is Representative F. Edward Hebert of New Orleans, whose opponent is Republican George W. Reese Jr. The veteran Mr. Hebert defeated Mr. Reese two-to-one in 1952.

With 31 constitutional amendments on the ballot, Louisiana voters will have their hands full.

The key amendment, No. 16, proposes a way to get around the Supreme Court move to oust segregation in public schools.

Other top amendments include No. 12, a 10-million-dollar bond issue to give Korean veterans bonuses ranging from $50 for being in uniform to $250 for combat zone duty. Death benefits of $1,000 are provided for survivors.

While state law call for separation of the races in schools, the segregation amendment would continue segregation in elementary and secondary schools "in the exercise of the state police power to promote and protect public health, better education and the peace and good order of the state, and not because of race."

Another highlight — a vital one — would allow the Legislature in special session to call a quickie election on new ways to dodge the Supreme Court ruling, if necessary.

Survey shows most parents favor keeping School 200

BALTIMORE

Initial reports of a survey have revealed that the majority of the parents of pupils enrolled in Elementary School No. 200, desire to have their children remain at the school.

At present the school has 168 white and 107 colored pupils.

The school, which has been the center of a storm since its opening last week on an integrated basis, is located at Broening Highway and Holabird Ave.

Last week a group of white parents asked that the school be abandoned because of what they termed "unsanitary condition and poor construction."

They also asked that their children be transferred back to the O'Donnell Heights School No. 240 at O'Donnell and Gusryan Sts., or to the John Surrah School No. 228, Rappolla St. and Foster Ave.

BEFORE INTEGRATION the school was used by over 200 colored pupils. It was the first portable unit to be constructed and is located in a condemned area near the Holabird housing project.

After the complaint of the parents, the Department of Education sent questionnaires to parents in the area asking them if they wanted their children moved from School No. 200.

Of the 349 answers received, 178 asked to remain at the school, 113 wanted to transfer to No. 240, and 24 asked for moves to School No. 228. Thirty-four answers listed no clear preference.

On Thursday, Miss Ida Gerber, teacher in charge of School No. 200, said the school was operating at full capacity and all the conditions criticized by the parents had been corrected.

—o O o—

THE CORRECTIVE measures included:

Abandonment of the annex building, painting of the school, covering of a cesspool, cutting of the grass, removal of dead tree and filling in of all ruts and gulleys.

In a letter to parents in the area which announced these corrections, Dr. John H. Fischer said:

"The classroom conditions in School No. 200, because of the large size of the rooms, the excellent lighting and the refinished floors, provide an educational environment for children superior to that which now exists in many Baltimore chools."

Suit Seeks to Compel Baltimore to Retain Segregated Schools

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE, Sept. 8.—A mandamus action seeking to compel the Board of School Commissioners to maintain segregated schools in Baltimore was to be filed in Superior Court today.

The action was submitted yesterday as city schools reopened with Negro and white students in the same classes for the first time in history. However, Judge John T. Tucker rejected the suit because he said it was improperly drawn in that it did not name the School Board members individually.

Two Groups Back Suit.

Attorney Robert M. Furniss, jr., of Rockville, Md., representing the complainants, said the action would be corrected and filed today.

He said the suit was brought by seven parents and six children, the Maryland Petition Committee and the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

Mr. Furniss said the committee already has signatures of 3,400 persons, including many Negroes, who are opposed to integration in the schools.

At least 16 Baltimore public schools had mixed classes on the first day of the fall term yesterday.

There were no incidents as the 143,000 Baltimore public school children began classes in a new era of race relations.

Dual Setup in Counties.

Segregation continues in Maryland's 23 counties under a different interpretation of the Supreme Court's ruling banning segregation in public schools.

Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins has ruled that Maryland's counties should continue segregation until the high court spells out how it wants its edict carried out.

Thomas N. Biddison, city solicitor for Baltimore, held that the Supreme Court ruling made unconstitutional a segregation provision in the city code.

2,000 March On Baltimore City Hall

BALTIMORE, — (INS) — Two-thousand high school students from the north and northeastern sections of Baltimore marched on City hall Monday and then headed for the scene of last Friday's rioting over the end to racial segregation.

They remained outside City hall for only a short while, shouting their demands that Negroes be barred from previously all-white schools. Baltimore ended school segregation in September, but protests did not being until last week.

The high school demonstrators carried placards reading "Help Save Our Schools" as they travelled by foot and automobile to Southern high school, where six were arrested and several slightly injured in a riot last Friday.

Two arrests were made near the school Monday as police, armed with night sticks and re-enforced by 600 additional officers, stood guard throughout the city.

There were no incidents of violence when classes resumed Monday after the week-end recess. However, anti-segregation picketing spread and at least 2 schools were affected by a stay at-home campaign that resulted in thousands of absentees.

Near Southern high, a Negro boy was picked up on charges of carrying a knife. A white man described by police as an "agitator" was nabbed when he showed up at the school despite warnings last Friday not to come back again.

Only 200 of Southern high school's 1,780 pupils were at their desks Monday morning.

Segregation Is Md. Issue

Special to The Inquirer

SALISBURY, Md., Oct. 30.—Segregation, is the major issue in the current election campaign on Maryland's Eastern Shore, a survey of the peninsula's 22 weekly newspaper editors showed today. Eighteen of the editors declared that integration of public school pupils is the biggest issue, and of that number, many pointedly added, "it's the only issue," and will be reflected in Tuesday's voting.

In the Gubernatorial race, nine of the editors said they are supporting Dr. H. C. Byrd, the Democratic candidate. Byrd favors segregation and has suggested a Constitutional amendment giving local school boards or counties broad powers on the question. None of the 22 editors questioned has indorsed Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin, whose answer to integration has been: "I'll enforce the law." McKeldin is seeking his second term at Annapolis.

Three of the weeklies are supporting Rep. Edward T. Miller, Talbot county Democrat, who is running for his fifth Congressional term, while six are behind his Democratic rival, State Sen. Edward Turner, of Queen Anne's county. Turner has taken the same stand on the integration question as Byrd while Miller holds that local option would be all right, but that Congress is powerless to act in view of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated schools.

HOME RULE PLAN OF MARYLAND EDUCATOR WOULD BE DIRECT DEFIANCE OF SUPREME COURT

Demands Retention of Age Old Customs and Traditions of Tidewater Country

CANDIDATE IS FORMER PRESIDENT OF STATE UNIVERSITY

BALTIMORE — (ANP) — Dr. H. C. Byrd, Democratic candidate for governor of Maryland, last week officially gave a measure of respectability—if that's possible to the cause of defying the U. S. Supreme court.

The former president of the University of Maryland offered a "home rule" plan to solve the school problem, saying he feels it would be "unwise" to bring about an immediate end to segregated schools in the state.

Byrd's "home rule" plan would rely on school boards of each county "to operate such programs in their communities that will best meet the educational needs of all citizens."

His statement came after he made a speech Monday night, in which he said:

"You will want members of the school board appointed who will be able to deal and act in accordance with the age-old customs and traditions that have been a part of your way of life."

Immediately after the speech, The Baltimore Afro-American submitted a list of questions to the gubernatorial candidate in an effort to make his position "crystal clear" on the integration issue.

One of the questions asked Dr. Byrd was if it was true he made the "aged-old customs" remark, and if so, what did he mean by it. Another asked if he favored a new state law to circumvent the Supreme court ruling.

The final question read:

"On May 18, right after the Supreme court outlawed segregated schools, you were asked to comment on the decision and you told the Afro, 'I will obey the law if I am elected governor.' Have you changed your mind?"

While the Afro was trying to pin down the elusive Bryd, who never did answer the questions, Time magazine was calling some of his speeches "veiled demagoguery."

In off-the-cuff speeches on his campaign tours, Dr. Byrd has assured Voters that he "will keep them out," as he told one inquiring constituent.

Byrd apparently was giving up trying to walk two different directions at the same time and was giving up Baltimore's "Negro bloc" in an attempt to pick up the rural vote.

With the expected swing to the Democrats this Fall, he could be swept in. Meanwhile, Republican Gov. Keldin has replied to Byrd's ranting with "I stand for the law."

Besides Maryland, Time magazine says that desegregation could be a balance-changing factor this year in nine congressional races in Delaware, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, Missouri, Florida, and Virginia.

"In each case, it works against the Republican candidate even though for the most part, the Democrats are not pushing it publicly," the magazine says in its current issue. Time noted that in Delaware, candidates have been dragged into the segregation issue "despite themselves."

Segregation Policy

HAGERSTOWN, Md., Aug. 31 (U.P.)—Schools Superintendent William H. Brish said yesterday that segregation would continue in Washington County public schools until the Supreme Court issued formal instructions on ending segregation. The court ruling is expected in October.

Desegregation Program Underway

Supreme Court Edict Agreed To by Balto.

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 10-30-54 P.11

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA JR.

BALTIMORE, Md.—Officially the city of Baltimore began its program to desegregate public schools on May 25, 1954, when the Board of School Commissioners sent a letter to City Solicitor Thomas N. Biddison asking his opinion of the Supreme Court decision.

After a careful study of the high court's ruling, the city solicitor gave his reply on June 1: "It is the opinion of this office that the Supreme Court, by its decision, has determined that segregation in education, as provided for by Article 32, Section 22, of the Baltimore City Code, is in deprivation of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, and is, consequently, unconstitutional and invalid."

ON JUNE 3, the Board of School Commissioners adopted unanimously the following resolution:

"In view of the decision of the Supreme Court regarding our public schools, and in view of an opinion given us by the Baltimore City Solicitor, dated June 1, 1954, it is the opinion of the board that our system should be conformed to a non-segregated basis to be in effect by the opening of schools in September of this year.

"In doing so, we would ask our staff to prepare material outlining the practical steps to be taken and that this material be presented at our next meeting."

On June 10, the Board of School Commissioners approved unanimously a policy directive drawn up by the Board of Superintendents. Here is the directive:

"In view of the policy on the elimination of racial segregation in the Baltimore public schools enunciated by the School Board on June 3, the Board of Superintendents presents the following recommendations to implement that policy:

"1. All of the standards and criteria which are now in force with respect to the admission of pupils to schools, grades or curricula shall continue in force except that the race of the pupil shall not be a consideration.

"The present policy of the school system with respect to pupil transfers shall be continued. Under this policy, transfers because of changes of residence are routinely approved. Transfers for other reasons may be approved by the two principals involved or by the appropriate assistant superintendent.

"2. As in the past, no child shall be required to attend any particular school. Baltimore has never adopted a districting policy which requires attendance. There is to be no change in the present rule of the School Board for establishing school districts. This rule says, in effect, that where a building is overcrowded, specific district lines may be established as required by building capacity and neighborhood population. No pupil who lives beyond such a line may enter the districted school. All pupils enrolled in any school prior to the establishment of a district line about that school are permit ted to remain there.

"On the other hand, any pupil who lives within such a district and whose parents desire him to attend a more distant school may be admitted to that school if it is not districted and if the reason for seeking a transfer is considered satisfactory. As population increases occur, it may become necessary in the future, as it has in the past, to district additional schools.

"3. In the assignment, promotion, and transfer of staff members, the present policy of respecting relative merit shall be scrupulously observed. As in the past, it shall be the purpose of the Department of Education to assign each employe to that position which he is likely to render his best services to the school and to the community. No person shall be denied any opportunity because of race."

This directive was signed by Superintendent Fischer.

On June 14, Superintendent Fischer called a special meeting of Baltimore public school teachers and briefed them on the approaching integration program.

SAID DR. FISCHER: "Without fear and without subterfuge, our board has met its responsibility. Paraphrasing the words of Robert E. Lee, we cannow now do more than our duty, we shall not want to do less."

Continuing, he said: "What happened in Washington on the 17th of May, 1954, was not unusual for America. The whole course of our history as a nation is marked by such actions—actions which one by one have destroyed barriers that stood between the ordinary man and a richer life.

"When our school face such a mission as the one we are now assigned, I value more than ever the knowledge that ours is a great army of volunteers. Of our own choice we have enlisted to serve all our people and the cause of education. We are, therefore, entitled to share the quiet pride that only the volunteer may feel."

Population Patterns Vital, Says Holmes

Ghettoes Affect Implementation Of Integration

Courier Pittsburgh Pa
Sat. 10-30-54 P.11

By A. M. RIVERA JR. and ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE

BALTIMORE, Md.—"If a big black cloud doesn't descend on a white school all of a sudden, we're not likely to have any great difficulty," declared Dr. Dwight Holmes.

The former president of Morgan State College, and now the only Negro member of the State Board of Education, told the Courier in an exclusive interview that "because of the residential distribution of population, and the fact that schools have been placed in accordance with this pattern, there isn't going to be a great wave of students going from colored to white schools."

THE VETERAN educator stated that as much as he deplored the ghetto-like arrangement, it must be recognized in any consideration that threatens to alter the status-quo.

He said that the racial composition of the counties will determine the speed and success of integration outside the cities.

Dr. Holmes described the people of Maryland as "a mighty proud group of folks." He predicted that after a period of letting off steam "we won't have much trouble."

He said that many people expressed their disapproval and even their disgust of the anti-segregation ruling, but denied that there was any thought of resisting integration in Baltimore until Bryant Bowles and his National Association for the Advancement of White People stirred up the trouble.

"Baltimore has been tip-toeing into integration for almost eight years," he said, and pointed out that under the administration of the late and much lamented William Lemmel, former superintendent, city teachers had already been integrated right up to the classroom door. He called to our attention the fact that as many as twenty Negro students had been enrolled at the Polytechnic High School and had participated on the athletic teams.

DR. HOLMES asserted that "the people of Maryland don't want integration any more than the people of Virginia want it and it's going to be a problem wherever it (integration) is tried." Maryland has twenty-three counties with the Negro population increasing proportionately as you travel West to East.

"We are expecting integration to begin in the counties next fall," Dr. Holmes said, "and we don't expect much opposition." He gave as his reason for this optimistic outlook three facts:

1. The finality of Supreme Court decisions;

2. The fact that complete integration will not be realized for many years to come, and

3. Maryland has done quite a bit of equalizing in recent years.

He expressed the belief that the county boards of education will determine the rate at which integration will take place.

"It is the hope that the counties will take the same attitude that Baltimore has taken," he said.

This will depend largely upon the local community, and in areas where the Negro school is equal to the whites there is not expected to be much of a changeover. In areas where the Negro school is a shack and the white school a modern facility, however, the parents of Negro children are expected to insist that they be integrated.

DR. HOLMES cited Annapolis as an example where integration might be difficult to achieve simply because the white and the Negro schools are both modern and located very near each other.

He said, "I don't believe that Negroes are going to walk out of their school and go to the white school just to be changing."

In Baltimore, where integration is still optional, Negro students pass many white schools and travel two miles to get to the schools traditionally designated as Negro schools.

Transferred—Teachers in Baltimore have been integrated right up to the classroom door for several years, and they were integrated into the classrooms this fall. Teachers study integratio

BALTIMORE

Teachers' approval of statewide integration in public schools may come Saturday.

A resolution, submitted Thursday to the educators meeting this week for the 87th annual convention of the Maryland State Teachers Association, calls for desegregation of schools in a "fair and lawful manner."

Members will also vote on a bylaw change which would admit colored teachers' associations to the MSTA in counties where chapters are closed to them.

—o O o—

AT PRESENT the state organization has integrated local chapters in Baltimore City, Allegany, Washington, Carroll and Baltimore counties.

The bylaw would not enforce integration at the local level in the 19 remaining counties, but does provide for the automatic disbanding of colored groups when local membership is open to all teachers.

Text of the resolution is as follows:

"It is a matter of public record that this organization has welcomed all educators in Maryland into its membership for the past three years.

"This experience has been entirely positive and has enabled the association to move ahead toward its objective of serving all youth and closer to the ideal of representing the entire, united profession.

"In accordance with the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which declared racial segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional, the MSTA believes that integration in this State should be effected in a fair and lawful manner.

"We recommend that teachers pupils, and other citizens throughout the state cooperate in effecting this change.

—o O o—

THE BYLAW change reads in part:

"The Corporation may, on resolution of the executive committee, provide at any time for the affiliation of additional local teachers' associations . . .

Where "membership in the presently affiliated local units is not open to all teachers in that school system."

And "in the event that a second association is affiliated within a given school system, such affiliation shall be terminated automatically whenever membership in the (original) . . . local unit is opened to all teachers in that school system."

Author of the book "Inside Africa," John Gunther told his audience of 10,000 educators Thursday at the Fifth Regiment Armory that "although Colonialism has done a lot of good in Africa, it is now as dead as Nebuchadnezzar."

Africa, he said is growing more and more resentful of the discrimination, limited education and economic exploitation it suffers in various degrees under the English, French, Belgian, Spanish and Portuguese administrations.

—o O o—

HE RAISED two questions then: Is Africa capable of self government? and, if Colonialism is going out, what will replace it?

His answer was, "No." Despite the tremendous strides which Africa has made, it is not ready for complete self government; but even so, this fact doesn't make much difference. Africa would much prefer its own indifferent manner of rule than any government by the Colonial administration.

Speed Racial School Bill

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 10 [Special] — Mississippi's proposed constitutional amendment to circumvent the United States Supreme court ruling on racial segregation in public schools got its final approval in the house today and was sent to the senate.

The house passed the measure, technically a house resolution, by a vote of 105 to 14 on third reading and then voted unanimous consent to send it immediately to the senate.

This last action prevented possible delay on any motion to reconsider. However, opponents said they had given up hope of beating the bill.

Provides for Referendum

If passed by the senate, as considered certain, the bill will provide for a state-wide referendum Dec. 21 on whether to enable the legislature to abolish the state's public school system. Approval in the referendum is forecast by observers.

Once the amendment becomes part of the state constitution, the legislature could abolish the entire Mississippi public school system or authorize local governmental units to abolish their public schools piecemeal. The buildings could be sold or leased to private groups. Appropriations could be made to "aid educable children" paying tuition to private schools.

Whipped Thru House

Backers of the proposal have indicated their intention to use this authority only as a last resort. Opponents objected to it not because they oppose racial segregation but because they considered the proposal too drastic.

The measure whipped thru the house with all possible speed. It was passed on first reading Wednesday and on second reading yesterday. The lawmakers, who usually begin their week-end on Thursday afternoon, made the sacrifice of reconvening today to pass it for the third and last time. There was no debate.

Awaiting it in the senate constitutional committee is a companion bill authored by 33 of the 49 senators. The fact that nearly everybody in the senate wanted to sign the bill is viewed as a guarantee of its rapid passage there next week.

VOTER SUPPORT DRIVE FOR SCHOOL ACT SEEN

Mississippians To Map Plans In Jackson Oct. 12

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 4. — Strategy for a campaign to gain voter ratification of an asserted "last resort" constitutional amendment for abolition of public schools to prevent integration will be outlined here Oct. 12, Gov. Hugh White said Monday.

The governor announced he has called a meeting of the 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee which recommended the amendment recently approved by the legislature in special session for submission to the electorate in a special election Dec. 31.

Sponsors of the amendment, which include school authorities, contend it will be used as the last step to prevent a breakdown of the state's racially segregated school system. It will be the only issue on the special election ballot.

Governor White is chairman of the committee created at the 1954 regular legislative session to devise a plan for preserving segregation, nothwithstanding the Supreme Court's desegregation decision last May.

The recent special session refused to vote the advisory group funds for a campaign to gain voter ratification. Despite that, the committee is expected to conduct a statewide drive in support of the amendment.

Mississippi Senate Approves Private School Proposal

JACKSON, Miss —(INS)—The Mississippi Senate, following similar action in the house last week, has approved a proposed Constitutional Amendment which would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools in order to maintain segregation.

The vote was 42-2 for the resolution. It must now be voted upon two more times in the upper chamber.

Following approval by the Senate, Gov. Hugh White, who called the special session, will sign the bill and it will then go to the State's voters for ratification in a election, Dec. 21.

White called the lawmakers into session to seek a means of skirting the U. S. Supreme Court decision last May which outlawed segregation in the nation's public schools.

School Abolition Plan OK'd; Up to Mississippi Voters

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 16 (AP)— Stand-by authority to abolish public schools to keep Negroes and whites separated cleared Mississippi's legislature today.

The amendment to the state constitution faces a vote of the people on Dec. 21.

Gov. White predicted the people would ratify the amendment. But state leaders admit there is a strong undercurrent of opposition.

The house yesterday whipped a move to use state funds to inform voters of the purposes of the amendment.

Called "Last Resort"

Sponsors labeled the amendment a "last resort" measure to be used only if other methods fail to keep segregated schools, despite the United States Supreme court decision outlawing public school segregation.

The sentae gave the amendment the last of three required approvals today, one week after the house overwhelmingly passed it.

The amendment is the first product of the legal educational advisory committee, created by the 1954 legislature to find ways of getting around the Supreme court decision. Later, the LEAC will recommend specific laws it hopes will make the "last resort" unnecessary.

Back Building Program

LEAC members promised to support a public school building program to improve schools if the amendment is ratified. They agreed that better Negro facilities would help keep segregated schools on a voluntary basis.

If the people ratify the amendment, it will be inserted in the state constitution.

Under the amendment, the legislature could:

1. Abolish schools thruout Mississippi by a two-thirds vote.

2. By a majority vote, set up a local option plan whereby individual counties and school districts could abolish their schools.

3. Sell, lease or rent state owned property to private individuals or corporations.

4. Pay tuition for students to attend private schools.

MFL Urges Members to Vote Against Move

P. 36

BILOXI, Miss., Oct. 6 (AP)—The Mississippi Federation of Labor urged its members today to vote against the constitutional amendment allowing the Legislature to abolish public schools and set up a system of private schools.

The Legislature approved the amendment at a recent special session and the people will vote on it Dec. 21. New Orleans

State leaders have said schools would be abolished only as a last resort to maintain segregation in the face of a Supreme Court decision outlawing the practice in the schools.

In a resolution adopted today, the state labor federation said it believed "a more effective education program with public financial support and supervision" was the answer instead of abolition.

A better educational program with better school facilities for all children is the greatest need in the state, the resolution said.

The federation also expressed misgivings over the effect abolition would have on the school lunch and free text books programs.

It said that in all probability, the school lunch program would be thrown out if the system became private instead of public.

"There is also considerable doubt as to the future of the free school text books program and the teacher retirement program, if we change to a private system," the resolution said.

The resolution pointed out that Mississippi's per capita income in 1953 was $843, the lowest of all the states, compared with the national average of $1,709.

"It is a bad time to tamper with the state's educational program," the resolution said. "To lift this economic index, the state needs more and better education."

The resolution also said that under a private school system, teacher's salaries would be even lower than they are now.

The federation also voted to oppose the proposed constitutional amendment effecting citizens qualifications for registering and voting.

It said in another resolution the amendment would "place in the hands of the clerks of the various circuit courts of the several counties certain arbitrary powers.

Under the amendment, the resolution said, clerks would have the exclusive right to determine the eligibility of registrants and that "pressure groups" could "prevent the registration of numerous persons" through pressure on the clerk.

Exclusive control of all registered voters within the county would be limited "to the pleasure of the clerks or pressure groups," the federation said

Miss. 'Private School' Proposal Poses Huge Financial Problem

'Separate, but Equal' Facilities Program Pushed by State Regime

By KENNETH TOLER
Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 2—Voter ratification in December of a "stand-by" constitutional amendment for abolition of public schools if integration is attempted will present Mississippians their biggest financing problem in history.

Gov. Hugh White and members of the legislature are on record for enactment of a Negro school-building program to provide the long overdue "separate but equal" opportunities guaranteed that race by the constitution of 1890. Provided, of course, the amendment is approved by the electorate.

On top of that an additional $18,000,000 must be raised through new taxes for continuance of the new Negro-white salary, administration and transportation equalization program put in effect last July. That is an immediate problem because without those funds schools will be unable to open for the 1955-56 term.

Long-Term Obligations

As for the building aspect of the effort to equalize the dual system as an inducement to Negroes to accept voluntary segregation, the United States Supreme Court's desegregation ruling notwithstanding, the funding must be stretched out over a period of years—possibly 20 years.

Officials believe the tax structure will be able to stand the added burden for the immediate money needs. But, as to those for school facilities, it is likely to mean that this bonded-debt the state is in for a return to long-term obligations. Even then, there is no guarantee that once the facilities are equalized they will continue to be segregated. Officials are not too concerned as to the source of the $18,000,000 immediate new revenue needs. A schedule of tax increases for that amount has already been mapped out, but the big question is getting the necessary three-fifths vote to gain their enactment.

Since members who blocked the tax raises at the 1954 regular session of the legislature are now on record as favoring overall equalization, those who sponsored the increases then feel they can gain their passage if the amendment goes over.

Source of the $18,000,000 has been outlined as follows:

Raise the state's 2 per cent sales tax to 3 per cent for an additional $15,225,000 annually; up the cigarette levy from 4 to 5 cents a package for $1,450,000, and boost the oil and gas severance taxes from 6 cents a barrel to 8 cents, for the other $1,325,000.

As for the start of the building program which school authorities estimate will take between $115,000,000 and $120,000,000 to provide minimum requirements in the next five years for both white and Negro schools, there lies the immediate problem. Those figures represent the inequalities between the facilities now provided the whites and those for the Negroes.

Negroes Need Facilities

Three-fourths of the added facilities are said to be needed for Negroes, principally in the rural areas.

The estimate could be far below actual needs when construction costs are put down in bid form. The present estimate is based on construction at $7.50 a square foot, which compares with the national average cost between $11 and $13 per square foot.

In one county alone, the need approximates $2,500,000 for 12 Negro schools. That is Bolivar County, where is located the state's all-Negro town of Mound Bayou and where Negroes make up about 60 per cent of the total county population. The disparities in some of the other 81 counties are almost as wide.

The magnitude of the school construction problem exists despite the large amount of construction that has taken place since 1946. In that period, $62,700,000 in schools have been built. Of that expenditure, $44,170,000 was for white schools, and only $18,500,000 for Negro facilities.

Most of the construction since 1946 was done with local funds. The state put up about $10,000,000 of the amount. Nearly all the building has been in the municipalities, with exception of a little state aid for added classrooms for Negro schools in rural areas.

However, in the past 18 months nearly all school construction has been more or less at a stand still. That results from the uncertainty at the time of the Supreme Court decision, and just what sort of a permanent school program the legislature would adopt.

Failed to Provide Funds

The 1954 regular session of the legislature adopted a building program, but it did not provide any funds for its inauguration. It calls for an annual expenditure of $6,000,000.

State funds, figured at $12 per student, are set up in the program that awaits activation. However, some leaders want it changed to provide funds for schools where they are needed, rather than have the "credits" set aside for areas where facilities are fairly well equalized. The big white areas want it like it is, because they feel the plan of providing the funds where they are most needed will result in nearly all the money going to Negroes.

STATE COUNCIL OF NEGRO LEADERSHIP TELLS PARENTS NOT TO FILE SCHOOL INTEGRATION PETITIONS UNTIL AFTER A FINAL AND CONCLUSIVE DECISION OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

Action Of Group Aimed At Growing Signs Of Interracial Tension In State

Representatives From Forty Counties Attend Meeting In Mound Bayou Sunday

Mound Bayou, Miss., Sept. 28.—(DSN)—The Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, called into a special session by its chairman and founder, Dr. T. R. M. Howard, of Mound Bayou, who has recently come into national prominence as a leader of his people in the state, in the session here Sunday adopted a statement advising Negro parents in the state not to file petitions for integration of the public schools until after there has been a "final and conclusive" decision with respect to integration by the United States Supreme Court.

The action of the organization was seen as aimed at the growing tension between the races in the state following demands for immediate integration that has led to threats of violence and bloodshed, threats of economic sanctions, and the organization of Citizens Councils throughout the state—local organizations of white groups—pledged to use every "legal means" to prevent integration and to keep the Negro citizens of the state from registering and voting.

The adoption of the statement signalizing a sharp break between the Regional Council of Negro Leadership and the State Conference of NAACP Branches, brought about the immediate resignation of Dr. E. J. Stringer of Columbus, men already engaged in sales and public relations.

Each year Tennessee A. and I. State University invites well known young Negro men and women in the fields of sales, advertising and public relations to serve as consultants and advisers in the university's career conference. Last year, the Tennessee institution inaugurated a marketing clinic which is open to young men and women already engaged in sales promotion and allied fields.

In addition action at the Pittsburgh board meeting, the NAMD approved a constitution and articles of incorporation, while it set its second annual meeting for Tennessee A. and I. State University, Nashville, next March. Between now and its March meeting, the marketing group will have an intense campaign for members and the affiliation of local branches. vice chairman of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership, and president of the State Council of NAACP Branches. In a statement announcing his resignation as an officer of the council immediately following the adoption of the statement in regard to the petitions for immediate integration, Dr. Stringer said that it would be unethical for him to serve as an officer of both the State Conference of Branches of the NAACP and of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership since the development of such a sharp difference in the programs of the two organizations. He said however that he would continue as a member of the council and promised to present a written resignation at a later date.

In other actions the council adopted a set of resolutions in regard to recent statements coming from members of the Citizens Councils regarding economic sanctions and the denial of the right to vote to Negro citizens of the state. Sat. 10-2-54

The meeting was held in a big tent imported from Memphis in a last minute effort to provide a meeting place for the session. Dr. Howard in addressing the public session said that it was necessary to bring in the tent when the all-Negro Board of Trustees of the Mound Bayou school, and the officer of the AME Church refused to allow those places to be used for the meeting.

A crowd estimated at about 1,000, including representatives from forty counties attended the meeting.

SCHOOL PROGRAM BACKED BY LEAC

Full-Scale Construction Plan Approved

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune State Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 12 — The State Legal Educational Advisory Committee Tuesday unanimously agreed to launching a full-scale Negro and white school construction program backed by a $60 million state bond issue if the proposed school abolition amendment passes.

Approval of the financing of the school construction program by the LEAC, one member said, will wipe out opposition to the school abolition amendment, particularly among professional educators.

The 25-member LEAC—created by the Legislature to map plans for keeping school segregation, however, made it clear Tuesday that all bets are off if the proposed amendment is rejected at the polls on Dec. 21.

Adoption of the amendment, giving the Legislature power to do away with public schools and go to a system of private tuition payments for children if segregation is threatened, is considered a vital weapon by the educational body.

Meanwhile Tuesday, the LEAC, told by Gov. Hugh White that opposition to the amendment is already evident on the Gulf Coast and in Northeast Mississippi, moved to send out speakers and provide information urging passage of the proposal.

The group agreed to form a speakers bureau among themselves to appear at public and private gatherings to explain the aims of the amendment.

House speaker Walter Sillers, Rosedale, credited with originating the amendment, said he feared that "many newspapers and others are stressing that this is an amendment to abolish the public school rather than to bring our constitution into conformity with the supreme court decision which nullified our constitutional provisions for maintaining separate schools for Negroes and Whites."

The committee adopted a series of 25 questions and answers which will be used throughout the state in an effort to answer objections which will be raised to the proposal.

Approval of the school construction plan by the LEAC came with unexpected swiftness.

The finance plan is the same — broader in fact, in some respects —than the program which the Legislature outlined but refused to finance in special session last November and December and again in regular session early this year.

A minimum of $120 million in new schools and improvements to present schools is needed in Mississippi, according to a survey of the state department of education. Some three-fourths of the amount is needed for Negro schools.

CAMPAIGN IS MAPPED FOR MISSISSIPPI VOTE

Proponents Of Public School Aboltion Plan Drive To Win Approval

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 12.—Admitting "a lot of work must be done" if a constitutional amendment for abolition of public schools as a last resort against integration is ratified, the Legal Educational Advisory Committee Tuesday outlined a campaign to win voter approval in a Dec. 21 special election.

Gov. Hugh White, chairman of the group which contends ratification will permit continuance of segregation, said strongest opposition to the proposal is in Northeast Mississippi and along the Gulf Coast. He said that stems from "reports being spread that the Delta wants to abolish public schools."

Not The Objective

"We must get over to the people that that is not the objective," he said. "No one wants to abolish public schools."

James Ewing, president of Copiah-Lincoln Junior College at Wesson and former head of the Mississippi Education Association, said committee approval of a school building program "will do more than anything else to offset that feeling."

Later, the committee approved immediate inauguration of a 60 million dollar building program to remove the estimated 117,477,978 disparity in the segregated system. Although funds are not earmarked for Negro schools, a 1954 act provides that the two systems must be equalized before monies are spent to widen the gap now existent between them.

Questions Answered

A "question and answer" brochure was approved to answer opposition to the amendment. It will be mailed statewide and used by volunteer speakers.

The pamphlet outlines six steps it estimates will take from 10 to 20 years to exhause before it becomes necessary to bring the abolition amendment into play.

In answer to opponents that ratification of the amendment is "premature" in view of the delaying proposals, the committee's brochure states that voter approval "will serve notice that the people of Mississippi mean to maintain segregation at all cost."

It further states that "while a large number of Negro leaders have repudiated the separate but equal philosophy of school operation, it is believed that, by and large, Negroes want equal advantages for their children under a segregated tax-supported plan."

The pamphlet also states that voter ratification "will be a warning to alien organizations that we intend to preserve our way of life."

To Hear Arguments

Although Mississippi will not file a brief in the hearing called by the Supreme Court for Dec. 6 on plans for implementing its desegregation decision of May 17, the committee authorized four of its members to attend the argumene "as observers." They will be Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman, Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, House Speaker Walter Sillers, and T. J. Tubb, attorney of West Point and chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee.

Committee members agreed to volunteer their services as speakers in presenting the amendment to the people prior to the Dec. 21 election. That action was taken after a proposal to accept "private funds" was rejected.

Speakers Sillers said "citizens councils" had agreed to help finance the campaign, and that he would contribute $1,000. He said spokesmen for 25,000 members of the councils had offered financial assistance.

However, Atty. Gen. Coleman questioned acceptance by the committee of private funds, and the group voted to offer speakers when called on and to have the private group to handle the expenses with the individuals involved.

The recent special legislative session refused to authorize campaign funds for the committee.

Joint Debates OK-ed

The committee also approved joint debates with the opposition after Mr. Tubb said "We have no fear from public debates on this gravest issue facing us since reconstruction days."

The committee was unanimous in supporting "in principle" the building program presented by Mr. Ewing. It will be recommended to a contemplated special legislative session in January which Governor White has said will be called "if the protective features of the constitutional amendment" are ratified.

Under the building program, each school district will receive a state allocation of $12 per child in average daily attendance per year, plus $3 for each Negro child (the latter for 10 years only), against which they can issue bonds up to 100 per cent of their estimated accruals for a 20 year building program.

Senator Earl Evans of Canton, chairman of the finance committee, said the $3 extra for Negro children would speed up equalization and aid districts with a heavy Negro population without burdening local taxpayers.

"We have helped poorer counties with the equalizing fund, and this will give those counties an opportunity to help others facing big building costs to equalize Negro schools," he said.

Fulltime Secretary

Other provisions of the committee-approved building program include:

No allotment of state funds could be used to retire an existing indebtedness of a local school district for the first five years of the construction program; however, at the end of that time all accruals would be available.

Local districts would be required to provide at least 25 per cent of the funds to be used for the construction of school facilities.

Any amount of bonds up to 60 million dollars could be issued at any time.

The limits in the existing general laws that no district could issue bonds in an amount more than 15 per cent of the assessed valuation of the district would be removed insofar as concerned bonds or negotiable notes issued by the school district to provide its 25 per cent of the cost of construction.

The committee authorized fulltime work for Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County, its secretary, pending the December election. He will work with a four member special promotions committee, composed of J. M. Tubb, state superintendent of education; Icey Day of Kosciusko; James Baxter of Meridian, and Mr. Tubb of West Point. They will set up a speaker's bureau and mail out committee reports to various groups in support of the amendment.

Speaker Sillers said the section in the amendment "overlooked" provides for "public schools" without reference to race. He said if students are assigned according to race, then attack would be on the individual school and not the state system.

The six "delaying steps" before resort to the amendment, as outlined by the committee are:

Continuance of segregation under the present state constitution notwithstanding the Supreme Court's integration decision; assignment of pupils by districts; gerrymandering of school districts; application of military or police power; other applicable statutes, and new statutes.

degree murder charges in Lawrence County Circuit Court. Circuit Judge Andrew Ponder will preside.

Hickman recently was removed to the State Hospital at Little Rock where he was under observation. Prosecuting Atty Bill Arnold of Batesville has received a report from physicians of the State Hospital but has not revealed its contents.

Lee County Rallying Against School Plan

TUPELO, Miss., Oct. 14 (U.P.)—Battle lines were forming today in Lee County to oppose a constitutional amendment authorizing public school abolition.

W. A. Roper, county superintendent of education, said Tupelo and Lee County Parent-Teacher Assn. members will meet Nov. 2 to discuss the amendment up for a statewide vote Dec. 21.

Roper, an outspoken opponent of the amendment, said school leaders with whom he has conferred in Northeast Mississippi are opposed to the amendment.

The Tupelo Junior Chamber of Commerce went on record this week in opposition to the proposed amendment, termed a "last resort" option by state leaders to maintain segregated schools.

State Rep. Byron Long of Lee and Itawamba Counties said he doubted that the amendment would pass in Lee County unless additional support is rallied.

MISSISSIPPI MOVES TO CLOSE SCHOOLS

Constitutional Change Offered in Legislature—Governor Lays Blame on Negroes

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7 (UP)—Gov. Hugh White today submitted to a special legislative session a proposed state constitutional amendment that would permit abolition of the state's public schools if necessary to preserve segregation of white and Negro pupils.

The amendment, siged by forty-four House members, was sent immediately to a House constitution committee, which approved it 9 to 2.

It was expected to be voted on tomorrow in the Lower House, but must be approved on three separate days before being sent to the Senate for action.

Governor White also submitted two othr measures designed to strengthen the state's stand on maintaining a dual school system. One would prohibit agitation of litigation against the present school system and another would require out-of-state lawyers to be screened before practicing in the state.

The measures are aimed at blocking court action by such organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to bring about desegregation.

White Blames Negroes

Representatives and Senators many of them in shirtsleeves because of 90-degree heat, roared approval when Governor White said the State would resist the Supreme Court's recent ruling against public school segregation "with every legal means at our command."

Governor White said the State's Negroes had created the necessity for adoption of the amendment providing for abolition of public schools.

Governor White said that after the Supreme Court had outlawed public school segregation last May 17, Negroes of the State refused to pledge themselves to voluntary segregation. They now must suffer the responsibility for their action, he told the Legislature.

Negroes, he said, "not only repudiated what they had told us in private conference but demanded things that even the Supreme Court decision had not pretended to try to give them."

The proposed amendment which would have to be ratified by the voters in the November general election, would empower the Legislature to abolish public schools should Negroes make an organized effort to crack the color line.

"Sacrifices" Cited

The State's twenty-five-member Legal Education Advisory Committee which drafted the amendment, Mr. White said, "expended considerable time and effort to learn the true attitude of the Negro leadership of the State, in the hope that they would appreciate the sacrifices that have been made to equalize their opportunities without integrating the races."

He said the committee was "most postively and unexpectedly disappointed" in the reaction of Negroes.

As a result, he said, "no hope for a solution can now be predicted upon the cooperation of these men."

"We can go forward, however," he said, with the clear conscious of knowin gthat we gave them the opportunity to cooperate for the best interest of all, including themselves, and they spurned the offer.

"Upon them, not us, must rest full responsibility for rejection."

The Supreme Court, however, Mr. White said, "has deliberately proposed to tell us how we must operate our schools, although it has not spelled out the details."

"We know it cannot force us to operate schools if we do not desire to do so," he added.

Mr. White said in Mississippi there was "universal resolution not to abide by such an unreasonable decision" if lawful means could be found by which to avoid it."

The proposed amendment would permit the Legislature by two-thirds vote to abolish public schools state-wide or by a majority vote authorize local option. State money would be appropriated for students to attend private schools.

"There is no intention of abolishing the schools," Governor White said. but "there likewise is no intention of being unjustifiably forced to mix the races in our schools."

"We Shall Resist"

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7 (AP)—"We shall resist * * * by every legal means at our command," said Governor White, referring to the Supreme Court segregation decision.

"I want to say," said Governor White, "that there is no intention to 'defy' the Supreme Court; we are simply exercising the same legal right to resist this most unfortunate decision that the N. A. A. C. P. [National Association for the Advancement of Colored People] exercised in contesting the unanimous court decisions of over a half century."

RESOLUTION URGES SUFFICIENT SCHOOLS

Mississippi House Cites 'Sense Of Legislature'

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 21.—The House of Representatives went on record Tuesday as favoring an adequate building and support financing program for schools if a constitutional amendment authorizing their abolition as a "last resort" to integration is ratified by the people.

Speaker Walter Sillers was joined by eight other members in the resolution which was steered to adoption by Representative James Baxter, chairman of the Education Committee. It now goes to the Senate.

The resolution states it is the "sense of the Legislature, in event the amendment is ratified, that an adequate and progressive support and building program shall be enacted so as to provide ample school facilities for the school children of Mississippi."

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 8.—Mississippi's first official step towards abolishing its segregated public schools to prevent integration as mandated by the Supreme Court was taken Wednesday by a one-sided vote in the House of Representatives.

Proponents of a constitutional amendment, to be used after all other legal efforts have been exhausted to preserve the dual system, won its adoption on the first of three required approvals by a vote of 109 to 24. Seyen members were "absent or not voting."

Votes To Spare

Adoption of the amendment, which still faces Senate approval and ratification by the people in a special election Dec. 21, was voted with 20 votes to spare over the required two-thirds of those taking part in the balloting.

Confident of the necessary votes, backers were successful in beating down four amendments to increase the vote by which the Legislature would be authorized to abolish public schools and vote funds directly to students for attendance at schools, private or otherwise, of their choice.

Efforts are planned Thursday when the issue comes up for its second test to provide that whatever substitute school plan may be later blue-printed by the Legislature, its enactment be contingent on approval by the voters. Leading that move are Representatives Sam Johnson of Tippah County, Joel Blass of Stone County and Joe Owen of Union County.

Opposition Listed

Chairman Paul Measell of the Constitution Committee called up the resolution embodying the amendment, and on motion of Representative Icey Day of Attala County, the rules requiring that it be laid on the table for one day following the committee report, were suspended.

Voting against the amendment were:

Beckett of Colhoun, Blass of Stone, Brown of Calhoun, Burks of Pearl River, Cato of Jefferson and Claiborne, Cherry of Kemper, Day and Gay, both of Pontotoc, Hale of Lafayette, Johnson of Tippah, Lecroy of Prentiss, Lee of Alcorn, Long of Lee and Itawamba, McCarver of Itawamba, McGehee of Marion, Medford of Alcorn, Owen of Union, Smith of Choctaw, Southward of Tishomingo, Tackett of Monroe, Weatherford of Lee, Williams of Hinds, Wroten of Washington and Young of Wayne.

Absent or not voting (7)—Fountain of Harrison and Jackson, Holmes of Montgoery, Kibbs of Jackson, Ramsey of Warren, Robertson of Jasper, Stephens of Union and Williams of Monroe.

Rather than take up its own similar amendment, the Senate decided to wait until the one from the House reaches it. That plan was adopted after Senator Earl Evans of Canton said such procedure would speed adjournment of the special session which convened Tuesday.

Senate approval is anticipated in view of authorship of its amendment by more than the required two-third of the 49 members.

Proponents of the amendment, headed by Gov. Hugh White, insist its use will be a "last resort" step. They said every legal means to bypass the court's integration decision is planned before falling back on the abolition proposal.

Local Option Last

The amendment to be presented to the voters for majority approval authorizes the Legislature by a two-thirds vote to abolish the tax-supported public schools statewide, or by majority vote to permit counties and local school districts to take that action.

Legislation implementing the decision would be taken at a contemplated second special session in January if it is ratified.

A group of members headed by Representative John Farese of Benton and Tippah Counties, lost, 68 to 62, to have the local option authorization based on a two-thirds vote. Other authors of the amendment were Mrs. John Farese of Benton County, Mr. Blass, Mr. Hale, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Long and Robert Scott of Franklin County.

The house then voted down, 86 to 41, an amendment by Mr. Southward, Mr. Long and Mr. Smith to require a two-thirds vote of the elected membership (94) fo rthe local option authorization, and followed without a record vote in rejecting the proposal by Mr. Blass and Mr. Hale for a three-fifths vote.

The final amendment by Representatives William Winter of Grenada County and George Rogers of Warren County to requir elocal option abolishment by a majority of the 140 members, likewise was voted down without a record tally.

Speaking against the amendment, Representative Owen said he resented the Supreme Court decision but did not see "how we can help ourselv sby abolishing public schools." Hee said his constituents wanted continuance of the public school system and felt they could continue segregation on a local basis.

'Up To People'

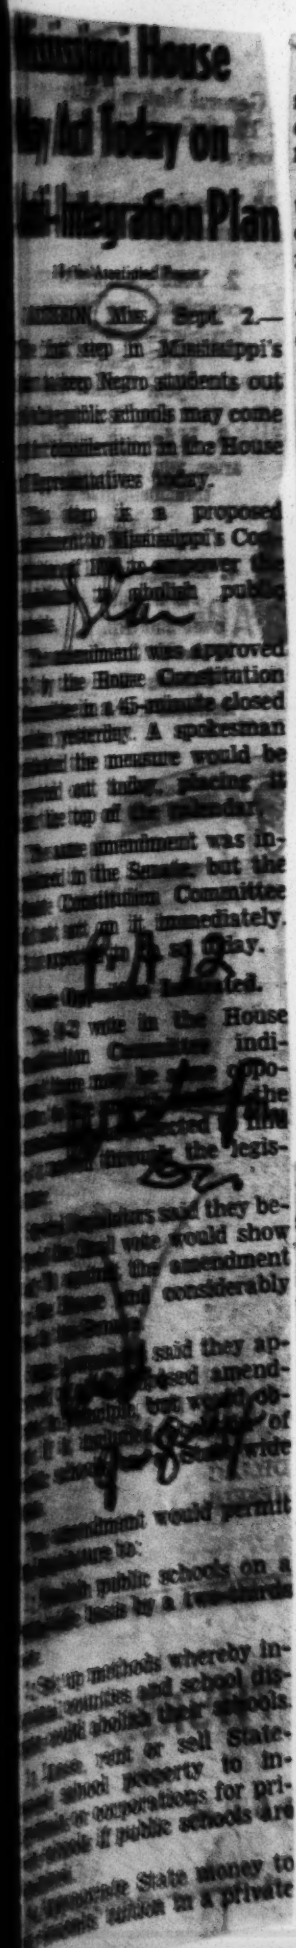
Representative Blass questioned who would determine the problem of invoking the terms of the amendment as a "last resort." He said the white children stand to lose more than Negroes since he said the Federal Government will "move into the education field if it is vacated by the state."

The South Mississippian said the "real choice is between public and private schools in some counties and between public schools in some counties and between public schools and no schools in others." He said without tax support for schools, many poorer counties would suffer since they now depend on the richer polittcal subdivisions for equalizing funds.

Representative Day said the purpose of the backers is not to do away with public schools.

"All this resolution does is place the matter up to the people," the Attala Countian said.

The House and Senate both meet at 10 Thursday morning.



Mississippi House May Act Today on Anti-Integration Plan

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 2— The first step in Mississippi's plan to keep Negro students out of the public schools may come under consideration in the House of Representatives today.

The step is a proposed amendment to Mississippi's Constitution which would empower the Legislature to abolish public schools.

The amendment was approved by the House Constitution Committee in a 45-minute closed session yesterday. A spokesman called the measure would be voted out today, placing it on the top of the calendar.

The same amendment was introduced in the Senate, but the Senate Constitution Committee has not yet acted on it. It could act today.

Governor Urges Passage.

Gov. Hugh White, in his message to a joint session yesterday, did not show preference in the method.

He urged passage, not only of the amendment, but also of two other statutes to help retain segregation.

One would prohibit agitation of law suits by outsiders. The other would require out-of-State attorneys to be cleared through the Mississippi Bar Association before they could practice in this State.

The Governor told the joint session the action the Legislature was about to undertake was not an attempt to defy the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

"We are simply exercising the same lebal right to resist this most unfortunate decision that the NAACP exercised in contesting the unanimous court decisions of over half a century," he said.

"We Shall Resist."

"We shall resist (the decision) . . . by every legal means at our command."

Makin ghis stand clear, the Governor said, "I say, and I say again, there is no intention of abolishing the schools."

On the other hand, he said, "let me make it clear that there likewise is no intention of being unjustifiably forced to mix the races in our schools."

MISSISSIPPI ACTS ON SCHOOL MOVI

House Group Approves Proposal, 9 to 2

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 7—Mississippi's Legislature, handed a challenge by Gov. Hugh White to throw up a constitutional safeguard against integration of the races in public schools, moved quickly Tuesday to start the proposal toward passage.

The House constitutions committee took the first step by quickly approving, 9 to 2, the proposed constitutional amendment and sending it to the floor for action.

The constitutional amendment gives the Legislature broad power to abolish the public school system on a statewide basis or give local districts the authority to abolish their systems.

It goes further to permit sale of the schools and their properties, and the use of public funds for children to obtain private education.

White, who called the lawmakers into special session to consider the constitutional proposal, told a joint assembly Tuesday that the state must give notice "to all the world," that it is prepared to abolish its public schools if necessary to keep segregation.

At the same time, White told the lawmakers that "there is absolutely no desire to abandon our public schools; there is absolutely no present intention to do so."

The governor said, however, that "there likewise is no intention of being unjustifiably forced to mix the races in our schools."

White emphasized that the move the state is making "is no intention to 'defy' the supreme court."

He said that the state was "simply exercising the same legal right to resist the May 17 decision of the supreme court outlawing school segregation that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had used to overturn the previous "separate but equal" school doctrine.

The 73-year-old governor gained applause when he told the legislators that the state of Mississippi would resist the supreme court ruling "by every legal means at our command."

The theory of the amendment for abolition of the schools, White said, was "unanswerable both as to logic and merit."

He said that the supreme court "has deliberately proposed to tell us how we must operate our public schools," but that it "cannot force us to operate schools if we do not desire to do so."

Requirement in the proposal that a two-thirds majority in the Legislature would be necessary to abolish the schools on a statewide basis, White said is "tangible evidence" that the leaders of the state propose to use it only as a "last resort."

White made it plain that in proposing the amendment, his administration has "no intention of abandoning or even reducing our public school program."

Conversely, he declared, many of those who had opposed the launching of a school building program for Negroes have pledged their support to the program if the amendment is adopted. The amendment must be approved by the Legislature by a two-thirds vote and then submitted to the voters for ratification in a statewide election in December.

The governor said that the Legislature was called to face a "crisis which we did not seek but which we alone can solve."

He commended the Legislature on creating the 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee which went to work and drafted the constitutional proposal after the supreme court decision.

The committee, he said, "expended considerable time and effort to learn the true attitude of the Negro leadership of the state."

These leaders, the governor went on, "not only repudiated what they had told us in private conference but demanded things that even the supreme court decision had not pretended to try to give them."

White said that "no hope for solution can now be predicated upon the co-operation of these men," but added that the state could proceed "with the clear conscience of knowing that we gave them the opportunity to cooperate for the best interest of all, and they spurned the offer."

The constitutional amendment meanwhile was introduced in both houses of the Legislature, with 54 sponsors in the House and 33 in the Senate.

The 33 sponsors in the Senate virtually assured its passage, since it is a two-thirds majority of that body.

In both branches the amendment was referred by presiding officers to the constitution committees.

As the lawmakers moved through the first day of the season, they put quick approval on a $97,000 appropriation to pay their expenses and legislative help for three weeks.

After the joint session at which governor White outlined the main objective of the session, the two branches also received a supplementary message outlining 19 minor subjects which can be considered.

These include:

Constitutional Amendments

1. Empower the Legislature to abolish public schools and set up methods whereby individual counties or school districts could abolish their schools.

Statutes

1. Curb, control, and more perfectly define champerty and the stirring up of litigation.

2. More adequately regulate the practice of law within Mississippi by attorneys not licensed to practice law here.

3. Make adequate appropriations to fight court cases involving segregated schools.

4. Clarifying laws concerning public printing.

5. Fix the site for the gas chamber to be used in executions.

Raise salaries of circuit and chancery judges.

New Solons Sworn In at Special Meet

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Two new senators and one new representative were sworn in as the 1954 special session of the Legislature got under way today.

The new senators were Barney Bramlett, Oxford attorney, and John S. Throope of Water Valley. The representative was Richard Burchett of Yazoo City.

Bramlett replaces Sen. Thomas Ethridge of Oxford who resigned to become U.S. attorney for north Mississippi.

Throope replaces Sen. Murray Williams of Water Valley who resigned to become assistant U.S. attorney for north Mississippi.

And Burchett replaces Rep. Harry Applebaum of Yazoo County who resigned to become mayor of Yazoo City.

Mississippi Will Attack Validity of 14th Amendment to Constitution

Call p. 3 Fri. 10-1-54
Kansas City, Mo.

JACKSON, Miss. —(ANP)— Mississippi, frantic in an attempt to keep Negroes in their own schools and away from whites, has decided to attack the U. S. constitution, or at least a part of it.

Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman, addressing he Tri-County Bar association at Brookhaven last week, revealed plans for the far-reaching action which in his words: "Will give Mississippi its first opportunity to challenge the validity of the 14th amendment."

Coleman said two-thirds of the members of each house of congress did not vote to propose the amendment nor was it ratified by three fourths of the states until Souhern states had been forced under military rule to ratify.

He said the right to attack the validity of a constitutional amendment has already been established in the courts.

The Tri-County Bar association, voted unanimously to endorse Coleman's stand.

He said the recent school segregation cases heard in the court were predcited on the 14th amendment and tested the applicability of the amendment, but not its validity.

the recess was then voted. It was returned to the House and signed by Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County.

The resolution was returned to the Senate Friday morning and signed before a quorum in "open" session. To make certain that legal technicalities had been followed, Lt. Gov. Gartin informed the senators he was signing the resolution and asked whether any of them had any questions. That is required.

There was none and the document was signed and sent to Secretary of State Heber Ladner for publication. J. V. Carr, assistant secretary of state, was credited with catching the near mixup.

Ratification or rejection of the amendment is now up to the voters in a special election Dec. 21. Under the Constitution, the voters must be notified through legal publication of the election three months in advance of its being held.

The only other action of the Senate was acceptance of House amendments to its bill clarifying a 1954 regular session act providing state aid for inland port counties for development of their harbors and port facilities.

The House changes provide all revenue acquired from the port and from bond issues shall be first used for retirement of county general bonds issued for their development.

Under the bill, Bolivar, Washington, Warren, Adams and possibly Tishomingo Counties may retain a half mill of the state's two-mill property tax collected within them for development of port and harbor facilities provided they put up an equal amount of their funds. Operation

ONE-SIDED APPROVAL GIVEN SCHOOL PLAN; ANOTHER VOTE TODAY

'Last Resort' Integration Bar Faces Second Reading In The Senate

ACTION TERMED PLEDGE

Mississippi Amendment, When Adopted By Legislature Goes To Citizens For Ratification Of Segregation

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 14.—The Senate by a one-sided vote of 42 to 2 Tuesday adopted on the first of three required readings a House - approved constitutional amendment authorizing abolition of public schools as a "last resort" step against their desegregation.

Approval of the proposal, which must be ratified by the voters, followed admonitions from some supporters that such action was tantamount to a pledge to later vote sufficient funds to bring Negro schools to an equal with the whites. A special session in January is planned for that purpose provided the amendment is ratified in a Dec. 21 special election.

Truly Momentous

Senator Willis Matthews of Magee, chairman of the Constitution Committee, steered the amendment to adoption with the assertion, "This is one of the most momentous events in the history of our state." He said he did not believe it will be necessary to resort to the amendment as "sufficient economic pressure" can be applied on Negroes to agree to continuance of the segregated system, notwithstanding the Supreme Court's integration decision.

"It may not be a complete answer to our problem, but at least it will delay integration and we are willing to pay almost any price to prevent that," he said.

It was Senator W. B. Alexander of Cleveland, in the heavily Negro populated Delta section, who said "everybody who votes for this amendment has a co-equal responsobility to finance a program of adequate schools for the Negro citizens of this state."

In Effect, A Pledge

"The only way to maintain segregation is to give the Negro people equal schools and if we vote for this amendment we are in effect pledging to do that when we meet again," he said.

Echoing Senator Alexander's sentiments were Senators Ed Simmons of Tylertown, and Quitman Lott of Purvis. Senator Lott said, "The State doesn't have a leg to stand on until we give Negroes some good schools."

An effort to amend the proposal to restrict authority for abolition of schools on the local level by taking that authority from the Legislature, as well as for final ratification of a substitute plan by the people, was unsuccessful.

Senator George Owens of Pontotoc, school leader who said he was "just as much against integration as anyone else," said authority for the "last resort" step would not be voted until other efforts to prevent integration have been taken. He said forces seking adquate school support in the past "have been defeated by the crowd now calling for protection."

Amendments Walloped

Five amendments were offered by Senator Owens and downed by one-sided votes. He proposed:

1. That legislative authority to abolish schools statewide be eliminated and that authority restricted to counties and school districts. It was downed 40 to 2.

2. Eliminate the section authorizing the Legislature to permit counties and school districts to abolish their schools, voted down without a record vote.

3. A new section providing that before it is necessary to abolish public schools that assurance be given that adequate funds for their present segregated operation be given. It lost, 38 to 7.

4. A new section providing that areas abolishing public schools under the "local option" feature of the amendment be required to continue their support of schools from the state level. Rejected 41 to 3.

5. That abolition not be effected until the substitute plan is first approved by the people in a referendum. It was lost, 41 to 2.

On final roll call the amendment as approved by the house was adopted, 42 to 2. Voting against it were Senators Owens and Howard McDonnell of Biloxi.

Senator Booth Simpson of Blue Mountain, who was present and against the amendment "paired" with absent Senator Ray Price of Brookhaven, a proponent.

Windup By Thursday

The Senate is expected to complete action o nthe amendment Thursday.

Later, the Senate passed several other measures and then voted for final adjournment Sept. 23 of the current special session which convened Sept. 7. The resolution, by Senator L. B. Porter of Union, provides that work will cease this Friday and the journals left open until next week.

The adjournment resolution, however, was kept in the Senate on a motion to reconsider.

Other Senate actions included passage of a bill appropriating $1,500,000 for old age pensions to restore cuts made in July because of inadequate funds; transferred $1,850,000 from a special loan fund for livestock and poultry development to the general fund; authorized the building commission to sell seat of government lands in Jackson, and created a new chancery court district of Adams, Claiborne, Jefferson and Wilkinson counties.

Meanwhile, on the House side an appropriation of $50,000 for a newly created Water Resources Policy Commission was approved, along with salary raises from $7,500 a year to $9,000 for the Circuit and Chancery Court judges. The House also released to the Senate its bill creating the water resources commission of seven members.

Other House actions included: Increased traveling expenses for parole board members; provided that scholarship loans for Negroes for out-of-state study can be made; appropriated $3,000 additional for administration of the school lunch program, and increased salaries for engineers of the Mississippi Levee Commission.

Representative Joe Wroten of Washington County said the levee commission bill raises the chief engineer from $8,000 to $10,000 a year; adds the office of assistant chief engineer at $8,400 a year, and ups the assistants from $6,000 to $7,500.

The Senate meets at 10 Wednesday morning, and the House at 2 p.m.

82 'Secret Councils' Organized To Uphold Segregation in Miss.

Spokesman Says Violence Barred, Groups Will Act Along 'Legal Lines'

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 11—Organization of secret "Citizens Councils" in Mississippi's 82 counties to uphold racial segregation through cooperative efforts—or otherwise—has been confirmed by one of the leaders in the movement.

The spokesman—a member of the state legislature—insists the councils are not "hooded or vigilante" groups and that violence is not one of the "otherwises" in the program to keep the races separated. He said whatever courses are taken will be along "legal lines."

For obvious reasons, the spokesman said, names and connections of the members will not be divulged.

"The councils are composed of freedom loving Mississippians who believe in separation of the races with liberty for both," the leader said. "We are organizing and uniting all patriotic white citizens to direct and support our local and state officials."

Keystone in the movement to preserve "Southern customs and traditions" centers around the application of economic pressure to trouble-makers.

One of the four committees in each council is a "Legal Advisory Committee."

Guard Against Agitators

According to a prospectus sent those invited to join, the function of the legal group is to "anticipate moves by agitators and devise legal means for handling any problem that may arise." It also will "provide legal council for all members" and will "recommend application of economic pressure to trouble makers."

There is no confirmation as to whether "economic pressure" has already been applied. However, in three widely separated sections of the state certain actions would indicate that course may have been taken.

In one instance, a place of business in which the president of the Mississippi branches of the Natonal Association for the Advancement of Colored People is interested, has been closed because it has been labeled "a public nuisance." Protests against the cafe were filed by other Negroes and not whites.

In another section, Negroes who presented a petition for integration of the races in the county schools withdrew it reportedly after the white employe of one of the leaders complained he was losing business "as long as the signer worked" for him. The Negroes explained they withdrew the petition, a form recommended by the NAACP, because they "did not understand what it called for." They said they thought it was a petition for "equal facilities."

NAACP Petition Dropped

The other instance didn't get beyond the "borning" stage. It was another of the NAACP form petitions for integrations. White leaders contacted the leaders and the matter was dropped.

Reports are that councils have already been set up in over half the counties and that organization work is scheduled and under way in the others. Organization of certain central Mississippi counties is scheduled next Tuesday night at Louisville.

The invitation to prospective members states that "we must stand together and present a united front in the days of crisis ahead." It states that the annual dues are $5.

It also states that "we will be in a position to support any national organization that we feel sanctions our ideals." In that connection, the spokesman said councils have already been formed in some states above the Mason-Dixon line.

System of 'Education'

Indicative of the asserted plan to seek cooperation is the creation of an "Information and Education Committee" in each council. It will gather information pertaining to segregation and the dangers of integration.

Each council also has two other committees, besides the legal and education groups. They are:

1. Political and Elections Committee—Its purposes are listed as follows: Screen all candidates in local and state elections against those who might be seeking the Negro vote. If necessary, organize a white private election within the council to combat the Negro bloc vote. Discourage Negro registration by every legal means.

2. Membership and Finance Committee—It seeks white patriotic voters for membership on the basis "we must mobilize public opinion."

Segregation Plan Gains In Mississippi

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 14 (AP)—The Mississippi Senate today approved, 42-to-2, on first reading a House-approved constitutional amendment that would allow the Legislature to abolish public schools as a means of retaining segregation.

The amendment is scheduled to come up for its second reading tomorrow. It will be voted on by the electorate December 21.

SCHOOL MEASURE OKAYED, 42 TO 2

Senate Passes Proposal on First Vote

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 14—Mississippi's Senate, expressing concern over the grave need for construction of Negro schools, Tuesday went on to give lopsided approval to the proposed constitutional amendment for abolition of public schools as a segregation safeguard.

By a vote of 42 to 2, the proposed amendment won its first of three required passages by the Senate. The measure last week cleared the House in three successive days by wide margins.

But some senators who backed the constitutional proposal declared on the floor that they felt the lawmakers have a great responsibility to fulfill their pledge to launch a program of Negro school construction.

The only two senators to vote against the proposed constitutional provision on final passage were Sens. George Owens, Pontotoc, and Howard McDonnell, Biloxi.

'Has Responsibility'

Sen. W. B. Alexander, whose home town of Boyle is in one of the predominantly Negro counties of the state, said he felt that "everybody who votes for this amendment has a co-equal responsibility to finance a program of adequate schools for the Negro citizens of this state."

He declared that "the only way to maintain segregation is to give the Negroes of this state schools."

The Legislature in special session and regular session early this year had outlined a program of equalized school opportunities for Negroes along with construction of equal school buildings with whites. But the lawmakers were unable to decide on financing the new program, which will require some $30 million in new taxes.

January Session

A special session in January is anticipated to carry out the financing of the new program and to insert the amendment for abolition of public schools in the constitution.

Alexander said that "as Christian citizens, we must bear in mind when we meet again that we must finance a program of adequate schools for the Negro citizens."

His sentiments were echoed in speeches by Sens. Quitman Lott, Purvis, and Ed Simmons, Tylertown.

Lott said that the state "doesn't have a leg to stand on until we give them (Negroes) some good schools."

A rear-guard fight against the amendment was waged by Sen. George Owens, Pontotoc, who was soundly beaten on five amendments to the proposal which he offered from the floor.

Owens' Stand

Owens sought to spell out in the amendment that the final decision for abolition of public schools would be left to the local and county school districts.

One of the Owens' amendments would have provided that before any act of the Legislature abolishing schools would become operative it would be submitted to a popular vote.

Rejected in his bid to revise the proposal, Owens charged on the final vote that he felt the abolition power in the hands of the Legislature will degrade the white schools of this state."

He said that he would be "ungrateful to the great white belt of this state which I represent if I did not oppose this amendment."

Sen. Willis Matthews, Magee, chairman of the constitutions committee who handled the measure on the floor, said that he did not regard the amendment as "the complete answer to keep segregation, but it will be a delay in the integration of the races."

'Economic Stress'

He said he believed the 'final answer as to whether or not there will be segregation or integration" would depend on the use of "economic stress" upon Negroes at the community level.

Returning to session during the afternoon, the Senate cleared the decks for quitting work for the special session Friday by adopting a resolution providing sine die adjournment of the session on Sept. 23.

The last five days is normally allowed for completion of clerical work and permit the governor to take action on all bills passed. The adjournment resolution must still be approved by the House, however.

Also during the afternoon session, the Senate with only one dissenting vote approved reappropriation of the $1,500,00 which lapsed in the state welfare funds on July 1.

Welfare Grants

Gov. Hugh White had asked the Legislature at the special session to put the lapsed funds back into the program in order to restore cuts averaging $1.78 per month in the old age welfare grants effected in July.

Sen. Burkitt Martin, Vicksburg, expressed concern over the welfare appropriation in view of a report issued Monday by the state budget commission indicating an anticipated deficit of more than $1,250,000 at the end of the current biennium.

"We're just spending money we haven't got," Martin asserted.

But Sen. Earl Evans, conservative chairman of the Senate finance committee, said that "this may be a good investment, if we permit a decrease in the old age grants at this time, it will make this a chief political issue in the campaigns coming up next year."

Fund Transfer

Immediately afterwards the Senate without a dissenting vote approved the transfer of $1,850,000 left over in the fund for the 1952 livestock, poultry and egg production loan program to the state treasury.

Also given Senate passage after a sharp hour-long debate was a measure to permit the state building commission to dispose of seven lots of state owned lands in downtown Jackson which are under 99 year leases.

The measure was sponsored by Sen. Mitchell Robinson, Jackson, who said that neither the owners nor the state of Mississippi "is getting any benefit out of these lots as the situation now stands."

He urged that they be sold "so improvements can be made on them and they will be put on the tax rolls."

The House meanwhile Tuesday coasted through its session, passing seven measures.

Water Resources

Included in the House actions were passage of a $50,000 appropriation for the proposed new state water resources commission and corrective measures affecting the state medical education loan program, the school lunch program and the parole board expense items.

The House put final approval on the Senate-passed bill raising the salaries of circuit and chancery court judges from $7500 to $9000. Gov. White had requested the action by the special session.

Here is how the state Senate voted on the first passage of the constitutional amendment for abolition of the public schools.

SCHOOL AMENDMENT APPROVED BY HOUSE; SENATE OK IS CERTAIN

Upper Chamber To Consider 'Last Resort' Action At Session Monday

ADOPTED BY 105-14 VOTE

Mississippi Voters Will Go To Polls Dec. 21 For Special Ballot If Charter Change Is Cleared

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 10.—A history-making constitutional amendment for abolishment of Mississippi's segregated public schools as a "last resort" legal move against their racial integration Friday was cleared by the House for assured Senate adoption next week.

It will then go before the voters in a special election Dec. 21.

The amendment was adopted Friday on the last of its required three readings by a vote of 105 to 14, or 25 votes more than the required two-thirds.

Motion By Opponent

"I think we now know the will of the majority and any attempt to hold it until Monday, as permitted under the rules, would be a delaying tactic and would prolong this special session," Representative Johnson said. "I therefore ask for unanimous consent that the amendment be immediately sent to the Senate so it can be considered there Monday."

No objection was raised.

Opposing the amendment on the first reading Wednesday were 24 members, with 22 listed Thursday. Those who stood pat on the final roll call Friday were:

Representatives Blass of Stone County, Brown of Calhoun County, Day and Gay of Pontotoc County, Johnson of Tippah County, Lecroy of Prentiss County, McCarver of Itawamba County, Smith of Choctaw County, Southward of Tishomingo County, Tackett of Monroe County, Weatherford of Lee County, Williams of Hinds County, Wroten of Washington County and Young of Wayne County.

Four "Paired" Against

Four of those against the amendment who "paired" with absent proponents were Representatives Cato of Jefferson-Claiborne Counties, Burks of Pearl River County, Long of Lee-Itawamba Counties and McGehee of Marion County. There were 13 members, other than the four who were paired, absent or not voting.

Representatives Joe Owen of Union County and Dexter Lee of Alcorn County, who had opposed the proposal on the two previous roll calls, voted for it Friday with an explanation.

They said their action was taken "in order that the amendment may be submitted to our people so that they may have an opportunity to share this tremendous responsibility with us."

Asserting that the May 17 decision of the Supreme Court in effect reduced the present constitutional requirement for separate, but equal, educational opportunities in Mississippi "to a scrap of worthless paper," the two northeast members said:

"We do not propose, at this time, to be a party to the abolition of our free public schools or to the striking down of our laws on segregation and the repealing of our State Constitution insofar as our public schools are concerned. For us to go along with this idea at this time would mean that we endorsed the action of our courts and that we were trying to hasten the day that we would feel the full effect of their intended action, for after all, that is the whole purpose of the court, to nullify our Constitution and destroy our laws."

Blass' Reasoning

However, Representative Joel Blass of Stone County, said he could not favor the proposal because he felt to change his position "will be a recommendation to my people to accept it when it is submitted to them."

Representative A. Y. Keith of Sharkey County, another opponent who voted for the proposal on the final reading, said he was "yielding to show the world that we believe in our segregated system."

The amendment, if ratified, will give the Legislature authority to abolish the statewide public school system by a two-third vote or by a majority vote empower local districts to take that step.

In event the abolition amendment is used, it also authorizes the Legislature to vote funds directly to students to attend schools of their choice, private or otherwise.

Representative Don Colmer of Forrest County has raised the question whether the amendment nullifies another section which prohibits the use of public funds for parochial schools.

Proponents, headed by House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, feel that since the funds will go to the children and not the schools, that constitutional prohibition is not affected.

The amendment was recommended by a 25-member legal Educational Advisory Committee created at the 1954 regular session to work out a plan to preserve segregation. It anticipated an unfavorable Supreme Court ruling.

The advisory group recommended the current special legislative session which convened last Tuesday after failure of a bi-racial conference called by Gov. Hugh White in July to get Negro leaders to agree, on a "voluntary" segregation plan, conditioned on Negro schools being immediately equalized with the whites.

Proponents insist, as does Governor White, that there is no desire to abolish public schools. They believe with the amendment in effect, Negro leaders will be willing to continue equalized segregation and that they will not attempt integration.

UNION GROUP OPPOSES STATE SCHOOL ACTION

Mississippi Labor Unit Asks Members To Fight Move

BILOXI, Miss., Oct. 6. — (AP) — The Mississippi Federation of Labor voted Wednesday to oppose the proposed constitutional amendment which would allow the Legislature to abolish the public schools and set up a private school system.

The amendment was adopted by a recent special session of the legislature to be used as a "last resort" weapon against desegregation in the public school system.

A resolution adopted by the federation at the closing session of its annual convention, urged its members and members of affiliate organizations to vote against the amendment in the Dec. 21 referendum.

"We believe the one correct answer to our problem is a better, larger and a more effective education program with public financial support and supervision," the resolution said.

"The greatest need in Mississippi today is a better educational program, with better school facilities for all children of the state. We submit that if this problem could be solved, many other problems that face us today, would automatically be solved."

The resolution said that in all probability, the school lunch program would be thrown out if the system became private instead of public.

"There is also considerable doubt as to the future of the free school text books program and the teacher retirement program, if we change to a private school system," the resolution said.

Mississippi is losing many of its best teachers because of a low salary schedule, the resolution said, adding that under a private school system teacher's salaries would be even lower.

SCHOOL SOLUTION LIES IN BUILDING PROGRAM

Mississippi Education Boss Sees That Solution

TALKS TO EXECUTIVES

Memphis,

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

Date.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 20.—J. M. Tubb, state superintendent of education, told school administrators in annual convention here Wednesday night that equalization of Negro buildings with those of the whites will minimize efforts to break down the racially segregated system.

He called a proposed 60 million dollar building program more important in the state's program to preserve segregation in the face of the Supreme Court's integration decision than a constitutional amendment proposed by the Legal Educational Advisory Committee authorizing the Legislature to abolish public schools as the last step to prevent desegregation.

'All Need Classroom'

The advisory group, headed by Gov. Hugh White, has endorsed the building program "conditioned" on ratification of the abolition amendment by the voters in a Dec. 21 special election.

"I believe that the most important thing yet proposed by the advisory committee is the school building program," Mr. Tubb told the Association of School Administrators. "It is our belief that every child, regardless of race, creed or color, should have a good classroom in which to study."

"If there is a classroom for only the whites then it is logical that the Negroes will seek as a last resort admittance to the schools," he said. "If they are given classrooms in which to study we are far less likely to have any trouble about the Negroes seeking admittance into the white schools. Mississippians must realize this and provide adequate school buildings at the soonest possible time."

The State Department of Education has estimated it will take 118 million dollars to equalize school buildings in the 82 counties.

As to the abolition amendment, Mr. Tubb said the Legislature would never use the authority until the state constitutional provision for separate, but equal, opportunities has been stricken down and other "delaying" steps exhausted.

Needs Two-Thirds Vote

"In other words, the Legislature by two-thirds membership of both houses would not act upon this matter until the choice came to be between integration and the trying of another system of schools," he said. "The people then would exercise their choice through two-thirds or more of the members of the Legislature."

Under the proposed amendment, it will take two-thirds vote of both branches to abolish schools statewide, and a majority vote to authorize local communities to abolish their schools.

Mr. Tubb pointed out that other phases of the dual system have already been equalized — teacher salaries, transportation and administration. He also said Mississippi has spent 65 million dollars since 1946 on school buildings, and had improved the transportation system to where there are only 100 sub-standard buses now in use.

Asserting that race relations in the state have been extremely good, Mr. Tubb said "it is the opinion of most of the white people, and it is thought by many (a majority of the Negroes) that it would be for the best interest of all the people to continue our segregated schools."

Meanwhile, at the convention an undercurrent of uncertainty over the amendment was evident. However, no official action has yet been taken.

'Anti' Group Formed

It was learned that an organization was formed at Hattiesburg Tuesday night to present speakers and distribute literature in opposition to the amendment. Attending the meeting was State Representative Joel Blass of Stone County, who opposed the amendment at the recent special session, and county superintendents of education of Covington and Forrest Counties.

The group will seek to offset the campaign authorized by the Legal Educational Advisory committee to gain voter ratification of the amendment. Members of the LEAC have agreed to volunteer their time for speech-making.

George E. Myers of Crystal Springs, president of the administrators association, is scheduled to be succeeded Thursday by N. L. Walker of Shelby, in the latter's elevation from vice president.

R. B. PATTERSON HEAD OF SEGREGATION MOVE

LIVED AT GERMANTOWN

Memphis,

By The United Press

Date.

INDIANOLA, Miss., Oct. 22.—A 32-year-old redheaded planter who once captained the Mississippi State football team has been selected to call the signals for Mississippi's Citizens' Councils, county organizations dedicated to preserving segregation.

Robert B. Patterson, an ardent exponent of white supremacy, is executive secretary for the councils, and will open a full-time office in Winona next month. He has been active for some weeks now in getting council members ready to fight for continued separation of the races.

Formed In 25 Counties

Councils, composed of white male citizens, are now organized in 25 counties, Mr. Patterson said. Every county in the Delta except Coahoma has an organization. The belt of organized counties extends eastward to the Alabama line. Only three in South Mississippi are listed. So far it is chiefly a Delta organization.

Mr. Patterson, a 200-pounder who stands 6 foot 2, rents 1,585 acres of Sunflower County land on which he has been growing cotton for the last four years. He has two daughters and a 4-month-old son. Before moving here he farmed at Germantown, Tenn. He is a World War II veteran, and was captain of the Mississippi State football team in 1942.

He has 35 Negro tenant families on his plantation.

Mr. Patterson has been sending council members statements on organization of the councils and on segregation itself. In a letter of Aug. 31 he sent out a list of reading matter to which he suggested that one member of each council subscribe.

"The following authors are interested in the segregation problem," he said. "Some of these groups are anti-semitic. However . . . all religious groups, including all Protestants, have been pushing the anti-segregation issue, and it is time for all of us to speak out for separation of black and white races."

Even though some of his recommended reading is anti-semitic, and some anti-Catholic, Mr. Patterson denied the councils follow those teachings.

"Some of our best members are Jews," he said.

Reading List Given

The reading list includes publications by the National Association for the Advancement and Protection of the Majority of White People, Inc., Griffin, Ga.; For America, Chicago; The Defenders, Wichita, Kans.; National Association for the Advancement of White People, Washington; The Cross and the Flag, Los Angeles; National Citizens Protective Association, Inc., St. Louis; the Christian Nationalist Crusade; Los Angeles; and Pro-Southerners, Fort Pierce, Fla.

Mr. Patterson also recommends "Black Monday," a book written by Circuit Judge Tom P. Brady of Brookhaven asserting that the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision was a step toward communism.

Various council members have said among their chief aims are keeping elections in control of white voters, endorsing political candidates who will fight for segregation and aplying economic pressure if necessary on Negroes to keep them segregated.

Mr. Patterson, who does not trust newspaper reporters, has a prepared statement on the purposes of the councils — they are "dedicated to maintenance of peace, good order and domestic tranquility within our communities and state, and preservation of our states' rights.

"Our primary objective is preservation of racial segregation."

Pontotoc Senator Expresses Fears At Tupelo

Memphis, Tenn.

STATE TO VOTE DEC. 21

Publ. 11-3-54

From The Commercial Appeal Tupelo Bureau

TUPELO, Miss., Nov. 2.—Opponents and proponents to the proposed constitutional amendment that will be the subject of a special Mississippi election Dec. 21, aired by their views at a meeting sponsored by the Tupelo Parent-Teachers Association here Tuesday night.

Educators from Lee and surrounding counties, plus numerous other persons attended the meeting at the Tupelo High School.

Owens, Gore Speak

State Senator George Owens of Pontotoc, an outspoken opponent to the proposed amendment, and State Representative Ney Gore of Quitman, secretary to the Legal Education Advisory Committee were guest speakers.

Senator Owens said, "There is no assurance that abolishing the public school system in Mississippi would maintain segregation, as the amendment is designed to do."

He said he feared, "Enemies of public schools in Mississippi would turn the so-called last resort measure into a first resort and take advantage of the power the legislature will have should the amendment be passed by the voting public in Mississippi."

"The legislature would have the power to abolish our school system if the amendment is passed and it scares me to think of what might happen he said.

"I want each voter to study the referendum, before he votes and help disapprove this amendment that could destroy our schools and our entire educational system in the state," Senator Owen said.

We have heard and read that if the voting public does not approve the proposed amendment the legislature will not be called back into special session to appropriate money for schools. I believe this is only one of the ways the proponents are trying to influence the voters, he said.

We have 16 million dollars and that will run the schools for about four months, by that time we will have a new governor. Voters should not be discouraged at these threats because we will get the money to operate the schools, the state senator said.

No Worry Now

"At this time I see no reason for the Legislature needing the power to abolish the schools. A special election can be called within 90 days and as of now we do not need to worry about segregation.

"We do not know what the United States Supreme Court will rule even if the schools are abolished. They may say that private schools financed with public funds are unconstitutional.

Let me say, right now, he added "If our schools are abolished what will we do if the Supreme Court rules against the school system, the proposed for our children.

"Once they are sold, it may be impossible to get them back," Senator Owens concluded.

After the two speakers, W. D. Allen, superintendent of the Tupelo Public School System acted as moderator for a panel discussion. On the panel were, Floater Representative William Byron Long Jr., Representative A. V. Weatherford and Miss Jessie L. Reese, both of Lee County, Senator Royce White of Itawamba County and arry Rutherford, editor education.

Negro Leader Asks All-Out School Drive

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 6 (AP)—A New Orleans Negro leader urged members of his race to intensify their program for mixed schools in Mississippi.

Constitution

"We want not only integration of pupils but also integration of teacher personnel, principals, school workers, superintendents, from the top to the bottom," Daniel E. Byrd, New Orleans field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the Mississippi NAACP branch at their annual convention.

* * *

BYRD TOLD the 75 delegates that, as far as segregation is concerned, Mississippi should "change with change or be consumed by change."

Gazette

"If it is time for you to pay taxes," he said, "it is time for you to use all public facilities paid for by taxes. The nine U.S. Supreme Court justices say it's time."

On the problem of change, Byrd commented that some people say attitudes cannot be changed by laws. But the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, according to Byrd, does not try to change attitudes.

"It affects action," the field secretary said.

Sun. 11-7-54

BYRD ADDED that there is a natural aversion to change of any kind. He said this aversion could be adding to the fear generated by the court's May 17 decision.

Byrd said whites fear the races will be mongrelized. But that's been done in some cases, Byrd claimed, adding:

"When I see these light-skinned Negroes throughout the nation . . . what do they mean, "don't mix the races'?"

In his plea for a stronger integration drive, Byrd told the delegates to put the University of Mississippi, Mississippi State College and the county colleges in their goal.

SCHOOL MEASURE GAINS SUPPORT

Constitutional Amendment Endorsed by Group

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 21—Mississippi's Association of School Administrators ironed out some apparent "dissension" Thursday and endorsed by a voice vote the ratification of the proposed public school abolition constitutional amendment.

The vote endorsing the amendment came after the group rejected a proposal by Dr. L. O. Todd, Meridian, to also spell out that the school officials considered a public school system "indispensible" to "personal and national well-being."

Todd's proposal brought a protest from Supt. A. L. James, Drew, that it would make the association appear to be opposed to the adoption of the school abolition amendment.

J. M. Ewing, president of Copiah-Lincoln Junior college, Wesson, provided the keynote that brought final approval of the resolution favoring adoption of the constitutional amendment.

Ewing, a member of the 25-member legal education advisory committee under Gov. Hugh White, told the association that adoption of the amendment was necessary in return for getting support of "persons in strategic positions" for the school construction program.

He said that he would not be willing to be for the amendment unless we have a building program."

Some leaders of the committee and the Legislature, he said, "are also not willing to go ahead with the building program unless they are provided with assurances that segregation can be maintained."

He said that they believed the adoption of the abolition amendment is the best assurance of continued segregation.

"It is no political trade or threat," he said. "The others are just as sincere in thinking that unless the amendment is approved they cannot go along on the building program."

Ewing said he still felt that the construction of adequate schools for Negroes "is the only way to maintain segregation."

SCHOOL AMENDMENT OPPOSED BY SENATOR

Owens Asks Assurance That 'Last Resort' Will Work

ADDRESSES LEE TUTORS

By JAMES KINGSLEY

From The Commercial Appeal Tupelo, Miss., Bureau

TUPELO, Miss., Oct. 22.—State Senator George Owens of Pontotoc County asked here Friday that if public schools are abolished as the last resort in the proposed constitutional amendment, who will give us assurance that there will be no integration in our private schools?

Speaking before the first fall meeting of the Lee County School Teachers at the Church Street School, Mr. Owens charged that if the people give the Legislature the power to abolish the public school system of Mississippi in the Dec. 21 special election the Legislature may turn their "last resort" into the "first resort" by doing away with schools.

No School Funds Call

"You are hearing and reading, if the people do not approve the proposed amendment the Legislature will not be called back into special session to appropriate monies for the schools.

"Well, there is 16 million dollars. It will run for about four months and by the time that money is spent we will have a new governor and if there is no more it is possible there will also be a new Legislature," Mr. Owens said.

"The attorney general has said ehe present laws are sufficient to keep our separate schools for at least 20 years. So I see no reason for the Legislature having the power to abolish the schools at any time they desire. A special election can be called in 90 days," he said.

When the governor had his choice to pick the L.E.A.C. committee he did not pick a single person from the state senate and also there is no one on the committee from northeast Mississippi, he said.

Snce the legisuature adjourned, however, I have been greatly encouraged because as long as I am a member of the legislature at Jackson, I will be fighting anything that may destroy our schools, he said.

He charged that proponents have in the referendum amendments that will change the constitution, if at any place that conflicted with the referendum.

Five Proposals Failed

"If the proponents did not have something up their sleeves, they would not be so anxious to get this proposed amendment passed. When the legislature was in session, opponents proposed five amendments to alter the referendum and not one was passed.

"I want each of you to study the referendum before you vote and help disapprove this amendment that could destroy not only our public schools, but also our entire educational system in the state, Mr. Owents said.

About 200 teachers attended the meeting. They elected Douglas Bean, superintendent of the Belden School, president of the group for 1954-55 and Wallace Gooch, superintendent of Plantersville vice president.

SCHOOL AMENDMENT MAY CONTAIN HITCH

Preface OK Held Necessary For State To Run Any System

By JOHN HERBERS

United Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 28. — Mississippi may find itself without authority to operate any kind of school system unless the amendment permitting abolition of public schools is approved, the Legal Education Advisory Committee said Thursday.

The amendment, up for public vote Dec. 21, is being presented as a last resort means of retaining segregation by permitting the Legislature to abolish the public school system and set up a State-supported private system.

With A Preface

But it is prefaced by a statement saying that all other provisions in the State Constitution regarding school operation not withstanding, "the Legislature may authorize the establishment support, maintenance and operation of public schools."

This provision, said the committee, is needed to continue operation of the present dual school system.

When the Supreme Court ruled against segregated schools that ruling made sections of the Mississippi Constitution relating to school operation subject to being stricken down as Federally unconstitutional.

Possibility Studied

Suppose, members said, a taxpayer went into court and contended he was being taxed for school support under the State constitutional provision that says separate schools shall be maintained for whites and Negroes.

Obviously, this provision is in violation of the Supreme Court ruling. Other provisions requiring operation of public schools likely would be stricken down with it, the statement said.

Therefore, members said, the amendment is needed to keep the State in the school-operating business in event present school provisions in Mississippi's Constitution are voided.

Most discussion Thursday centered around how to beat down strong opposition to the amendment. Gov. Hugh White is expected to make a statewide radio address urging its passage early next month.

ONE-FIFTH OF VOTERS OK-ED AMENDMENTS

Mississippi Changes Passed 75,488 To 15,718

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 13. — Less than one-fifth of Mississippi's estimated qualified electors gave a one-sided ratification o two constitutional amendments ir the recent general election, Secretary of State Heber Ladner announced Saturday upon tabulation of returns from the 82 counties.

A total of 105,760 voters participated in the election, with a vote of 52,881 necessary for ratification of the amendments submitted by the Legislature.

The amendment raising the educational requirements of qualified electors received 75,488 favorable tallies and 15,718 against. It requires applicants to be able to read and write and to give a "reasonable" interpretation in his own hand-writing of any section of the state Constitution pointed out by the county registrar (circuit clerk), and also demonstrate to that official's satisfaction the requirements of citizenship under a constitutional form of government. The applicant is also required to explain the responsibilities of a qualified elector.

The other amendment, permitting corporations to issue preferred stock without voting rights, was ratified, 71,151 to 14,149.

Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) was easily elected over James White, Republican of Durant. The vote was: Eastland, 100.848. and White, 4,678.

Todd Not Against School Abolition Amendment

MERIDIAN, Miss., Oct. 24 (U.P.) —L. O. Todd, superintendent of Meridian public schools, said yesterday he had no intention of registering opposition to the school abolition amendment at a meeting of the Mississippi Association of School Administrators in Jackson.

The association endorsed the proposed constitutional amendment to give the Legislature power to abolish public schools as a "last resort" means of maintaining segregation.

Todd suggested that the group add to the resolution of endorsement a statement that would "reaffirm our historic position that public schools are our best guarantee of personal and national well-being in education. It was not accepted.

Todd's action at the meeting was interpreted by the United Press as meaning he was opposed to the constitutional amendment.

SCHOOL AMENDMENT DEBATED AT TUPELO

Schoolmasters Hear Friend, Foe Air Views

SPECIAL VOTE ON DEC. 21

From The Commercial Appeal Tupelo, Miss., Bureau

TUPELO, Miss., Nov. 10.—For the second time in eight days proponents and opponents to the proposed constitutional amendment that faces a special election in Mississippi on Dec. 21, aired their views at the Tupelo High School Wednesday night.

Speaking before about 125 members of District One, Mississippi High School Activities Association of Northeast Mississippi, West Point Attorneys Thomas Tubb, member of Gov. Hugh White's Legal Education Advisory Committee and State Senator George Owens of Pontotoc were guest speakers.

Tubb Backs Proposal

Mr Tubb, supporter of the amendment,. assured the schoolmasters he was opposed to abolishing the Mississippi Public School System and also opposed to intergration into the schools.

"However," he said, "if I have a choice of self-respect and intergration, then I shall favor abolishing the schools.

"The proposed amendment if approved by the public vote will give the State Legislature the power to abolish the public schools and I feel sure," he said, "the schools will only be abolished as a last resort."

"There are no plans to do away with the public school system in Mississippi. But the Legislature needs the power to keep our Southern tradition of segregation in effect," he said.

"It is not known," he said, "whether the Legislature has the constitutional authority to maintain any type of school system in Mississippi, since the decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court on May 17."

Owens Fears Power

Senator Owens, an opponent to the proposed amendment, said he feared the Legislature would use the power as a first resort to abolish the public school system.

"And the only way I know to assure us that the Legislature will not destroy our school system is to disapprove the amendment in the Dec. 21 election," he added.

"I see no reason for the hurry on an election to give the Legislature the power the amendment will give them. A special election can be called within 90 days if the occasion ever arises where we need to abolish the public schools," Senator Owens said.

"And what assurance do we have that the Supreme Court will not rule that private schools financed with public funds are unconstitutional?" he asked.

issippi." Banks pointed out that Negroes should be appointed to "all policy making boards dealing with human relations."

One of the 100 Negroes present advocated continuing separate schools. J. W. Jones of Union county said his people voted for a "continuance of segregation." Jones said, "whenever the state atempts to force white and Negro children to go to the same schools it will be detrimental to the Negro child."

However, Gov. White was visibly affected by the newly unanimous rejection of his plan presented at the state's first top-level bi-racial conference.

White told newsmen, "I'm stunned. I had believed that a certain element respecting a vast majority of the Negroes would go along. Now I am definitely of the conclusion you can't put any faith in any one of them on this proposition."

The governor said "it is evident" those he had counted on "changed under pressur e from members of their own race."

The governor said he will not prepose a building program for Negro schools unless it has the protective feature of the proposed constitutional amendment.

Along with members of the advisory group, the governor said he does not believe it will be necessary to abolish public schools but that the "authority" should be in the legislature in case an effort is made to break down segregation.

MISSISSIPPI NEGRO LEADERS TURN "THUMBS DOWN" ON GOVERNOR'S SEGREGATION IDEA

Will Not Consent to Any Attempt by State Officials to Bypass Supreme Court Decision

ONE "UNCLE TOM" CHIRPS UP AT MEETING

By Frank Stanley

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — Mississippi Gov. Hugh White's "voluntary segregation program"—product of his 25 man (all white) Legislative State Education Advisory committee—received an unprecedented "thumbs down" last week from some 100 Negro leaders in the state.

Organizing themselves before conferring with Gov. White and his commitee, the leaders told Mississippi officials they would accept nothing short of mixed schools.

Gov. Hugh White, who had called the conference at which the statement of the Negro leaders was issued, said following the meeting:

"I have completely lost confidence in the Negroes and will deal with the Legislature hereafter."

The governor has issued a call for the Mississippi legislature to go into an extraordinary session Sept. 7 to take up a proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the common schools as a last resort to preserve segregation.

White turned down the request of Negro leaders for a 25 man colored committee. He claimed he had "no authority to name such a group."

Voicing the position of Mississippi Negro leade , Dr. T. M. R. Howard, militant civil rights champion of all-Negro Mound Bayou, said, "Negroes who have come here today have not come to circumvent or by-pass the decision of the U. S. Supreme court. It is a humane decision. We could not endorse any program of legal or voluntary segregation."

E. W. Banks, Jackson Mortician, observed, "A satisfactory solution of the school problems is the keystone to the solution of many other vital problems in Miss-

Both Mississippi Candidates Back Race Segregation

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — Mississippi Democrats went to the polls Tuesday to select a senator and veteran political observers in the Magnolia state think incumbent Sen. James O. Eastland will be re-elected, although the vote may be close.

Opposing Eastland is Mississippi's Lieutenant Governor Carroll Gartin, who has waged one of the most vigorous campaigns in Mississippi election history.

A Democratic nomination is tantamount to victory in Mississippi.

Both Eastland and Gartin have pledged during their campaigns to fight to retain segregation in all forms in the state.

Gartin has been on the road, shaking hands and making speeches for more than two months, claiming "a change is definitely needed in the senate as far as Mississippi is concerned."

Gartin has constantly charged that Eastland's lack of attendance in the senate on vital legislative matters shows a "shocking lack of interest in the affairs of the nation."

Eastland, who got off to a late start campaigning, has charged that Gartin "runs and hides" every time the Taft-Hartley act is mentioned.

Mississippi's senior senator said he was "proud to have voted for the act."

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — A survey by the state department of education shows that the cost of new school construction under a [illegible] plan to keep segregated schools would cost Mississippi $117,477,987.

It would take at least 23,793 classrooms to adequately provide separate but equal facilities for Negro and white pupils, 6,793 more than presently available.

T. M. Naylor, director of transportation and school buildings, reported the results of a three-year survey to the state legal advisory committee, which last week proposed a sweeping building program for both races as a means of keeping segregation.

UNITED SOUTH URGED TO KEEP SEGREGATION

Brookhaven Judge Decries High Court's Decision

Special to The Commercial Appeal

INDIANOLA, Miss., Oct. 29. — The urgent need of a united South, firmly dedicated to resisting the encroachment of the Federal Government upon the rights of states and individuals was the theme of an address by Tom Brady of Brookhaven, judge of the 14th Circuit Court District, to members of the Indianola Citizens' Council and their wives Thursday night at the grammar school auditorium.

The South Mississippi jurist advocated a national federation of sovereign states with citizens in every county pledging their life, their fortune, and their sacred honor to the preservation of segregation of the races. He decried the excitement and violence that is accompanying forced integration in the Maryland schools, recommending that efforts to combat the Supreme Court's May 17 decision proceed slowly, calmly and judiciously.

The speaker reviewed his recently published book, "Black Monday," in which he traced the origin and history of the races of man. He cited great civilizations of the past whose downfall came about with miscegenation of the races.

"The Supreme Court's decision of segregation was as erroneous as the Fourteenth Amendment," he declared, "and was based on sociological theories and not law. It set aside laws of eugenics and biology and the basic laws of God and man, as well as prior decisions of the court."

The Citizens' Councils were described as "representing the highest type of law abiding, intelligent leadership in the South, free of renegades and hot heads, and operating on a high plane."

Robert Patterson of Indianola, executive secretary of the Citizens Councils in Mississippi, presided, and Gordon Lyon, Indianola attorney, presented the speaker.

'NAKED POLICE POWER' CALLED INSUFFICIENT

Coleman Says More Needed To Keep Segregation

ASSIGNMENT 'ADEQUATE'

By The United Press

PHILADELPHIA, Miss., Aug. 10.—Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman told Neshoba County Fair goers Tuesday night the use of "naked police power" by a Mississippi governor could not alone assure segregation in Mississippi.

The state's top legal officer said police power, guaranteed states under the Constitution, "has long been subject to the 14th Amendment. While the governor is immune to injunction," he said, "every commissioned officer in the state militia could be promptly enjoined and thus rendered useless" in maintaining separate schools.

Use of the police powers was suggested by former Gov. Fielding L. Wright in a statement two weeks ago. Gov. Hugh White said he would use the powers to enforce segregation laws in an emergency, but indicated such action might not be necessary during his administration.

Mr. Coleman said a bill by state Representative Ney Gore of Quitman to assign pupils to schools on bases other than race "is fully adequate to meet the situation for years to come."

The attorney general advocated withdrawal of a reciprocity law which permits out-of-state attorneys to practice law within Mississippi without first being screened by the State Board of Bar Admissions.

He also endorsed a proposed bill by Representative Byron Long of Lee and Itawamba Counties that would make illegal "outside stirring up of litigation" in the public school field.

Both measures, he indicated, would prevent attorneys for such organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People from arguing cases in Mississippi.

Mr. Coleman was one of several speakers scheduled during the week-long fair, traditional sounding board in Mississippi politics.

Miss. Governor Calls Special Session To Defeat Integration

JACKSON, Miss.—(NC)—Mississippi's Governor Hugh White has announced he will call a special session of the State Legislature for September 7 to consider a constitutional amendment to empower the abolition of the State public school system in order to prevent racial integration in the schools.

The Governor made the announcement after a meeting with the 25-member Legal Educational Advisory Committee and a group of 35 Negroes from all parts of the State. After the meeting, House Speaker Walter Sillers said: "Instead of 95 per cent for segregation, we have 99 per cent against it." It was Mr Sillers who originally proposed the plan for a Constitutional amendment to abolish the public school system.

Governor White said he would not advocate launching a building program of Negro schools as advocated by Negro leaders at the conference "without some protective measures, because it will not succeed."

It said that in all probability, the school lunch program would be thrown out if the system became private instead of public.

"There is also considerable doubt as to the future of the free school textbooks program and the teacher retirement program, if we change to a private system," the resolution said.

BAD TIME TO ACT

The resolution pointed out that Mississippi's per capita income in 1953 was $843, the lowest of all the states, compared with the national average of $1,709.

"It is a bad time to tamper with the state's educational program," the resolution said. "To lift this economic index, the state needs more and better education."

The resolution also said that under a private school system, teachers' salaries would be even lower than they are now.

Mississippi Labor Urges Defeat of School Proposal

BILOXI, Miss., Oct. 6 (AP)—The Mississippi Federation of Labor urged its members today to vote against the constitutional amendment allowing the legislature to abolish public schools and set up a system of private schools.

The Legislature approved the amendment at a recent special session and the people will vote on it Dec. 21.

State leaders have said schools would be abolished only as a last resort to maintain segregation in the face of a Supreme Court decision outlawing the practice in the schools.

In a resolution adopted Monday, the state labor federation said it believed "a more effective education program with public financial support and supervision" was the answer instead of abolition.

BETTER FACILITIES

A better educational program with better school facilities for all children is the greatest need in the state, the resolution said.

The federation also expressed misgivings over the effect abolition would have on the school lunch and free textbooks programs.

MISSISSIPPI ENDS SPECIAL SESSION

School Proposal Now in Hands of People

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 24 — The Mississippi Legislature Friday wrapped up an 18-day special session with the expectancy of being back in another special meeting in January.

Lawmakers were summoned here Sept. 7 by Gov. Hugh White to act on a constitutional amendment to give the state a broad power to abolish public schools as a "weapon" against racial integration.

They okayed the amendment last week and sent it on to a statewide vote on Dec. 21 on whether or not it will be made part of the state constitution.

Should it be ratified, and most lawmakers and Gov. White expect it will, the new power will be inserted in the constitution at another special session in January.

Bigger Burden

At that same sesssion, the Legislature will have a bigger burden, however—to make good on its promise to finance the broad new Negro-white school equalization program which the lawmakers had outlined in two previous sessions in the past 10 months, but failed to finance.

The Legislature at the special session which ended Friday went on record to support an "adequate and progressive" school support and building program if the school abolition amendment is adopted.

Unless the Legislature provides more school funds at the January session, the public school system will not have enough money to operate on for the 1955-56 school term. At the 1954 regular session earlier this year, the Legislature had provided only enough money for the first school term as a trial operation of the equalization program.

The lawmakers had provided no funds to launch the program of construction of school buildings called for under the equalization program which calls for appropriation of funds amounting to $12 per child per year for buildings.

Little Difficulty

The school abolition amendment would give the Legislature power to adopt laws, by a two-thirds vote, to abolish public schools throughout the state, or by a majority vote permit individual counties to abolish their schools if a breakdown of segregation is threatened.

It whisked through the special session with little difficulty, clearing the House and Senate overwhelmingly on each of the three required passages.

With that issue out of the way, the lawmakers became bogged down in the bitterest controversy of the short session —the location of the new state lethal gas chamber.

49 State Counties Have Integration

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — (INS) — Commissioner of Education Hubert Wheeler said Wednesday 74 high school and nine elementary school districts in 49 Missouri counties have started some type of integration of white and Negro students in the current school year.

The commissioner issued the figures in a preliminary report on a statewide survey to determine the extent of integration.

Wheeler said the integration districts represent every section of the state.

He said the survey showed 160 high schools and 74 counties had Negro students registered as of September 17.

There were no Negro pupils in 225 districts and 28 counties.

Englewood Afro City board American denies bias Baltimore Milligan, Cook 2nd back complaints by two parents

By SAMUEL A. HAYNES

(Editor's Note: New Jersey's first public hearing on school segregation began in Trenton last week on complaints from two parents in Englewood supported by the Division Against Discrimination. Sat. School integration has been under way in the state since 1948. There are some 14 all colored schools remaining, mostly in South Jersey.)

TRENTON, N.J. — Does New Jersey's anti-discrimination laws —long hailed as a model for other states—require school boards to set up district zones so as to achieve the maximum in integration? P. 60

This was the main legal point at issue here Wednesday, Oct. 20, when the first public hearing on school desegregation opened before Dr. Frederick M. Raubinger, state commissioner of education, in Court Chamber 441 in the State House Annex.

The hearing was called by the Division Against Discrimination, after its failure to effect a conciliation between the Englewood Board of Education and two mothers of pupils who filed charges of discrimination and segregation against the board.

— o O o —

THE COMPLAINANTS are: Mrs. Susan Anderson, 34 Armory St., and Mrs. Mary Walker, 300 Franklin Rd., Englewood.

The hearing attracted an overflow crowd of NAACP officials, educators, ministers, and leaders of civil rights, human relations and labor organizations from all over the state.

The interest was so high after the luncheon recess when more spectators arrived that the hearing was moved to a larger court chamber.

— o O o —

DEPUTY ATTORNEY General Thomas Cook who presented the case for the DAD said:

"The most important issue to be decided was the duty of a school board in establishing the zones for attendance."

He opined that "neither the new lines nor the old ones in Englewood are proportionate with the population area, which is proof of discrimination."

THE ENGLEWOOD School Board adopted new elementary school district lines last June 28 "to relieve severe overcrowding at Cleveland school and to solve certain traffic hazards to pupils."

The major changes affect Cleveland, Liberty and Lincoln districts Lincoln and Liberty schools.

Colored people in Englewood live in a single concentrated area, the Fourth Ward, which has expanded in recent years.

This area, prior to June 28 last, was divided into two school districts, Lincoln and Liberty schools.

— o O o —

THE DEPUTY Attorney General said that the district zone changes in Englewood made effective last June was a studied effort by the Board of Education to make segregation at the Lincoln School permanent.

Cook emphsaized that while school boards must give attention to physical and economic factors in establishing new lines, they also must recognize the racial situation and set up attendance zones looking toward maximum integration.

SCHOOL BIAS CASE HEARD IN JERSEY

Englewood Board Accused at State Inquiry of Zoning to Segregate Negroes

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, Oct. 20 — Several witnesses testified at a public hearing here today that the Englewood Board of Education had segregated Negroes in revising its school district boundaries.

The hearing is being conducted by Dr. Frederick Raubinger, State Commissioner of Education. Charges of discrimination have been brought against the Board of Education by two Negro mothers.

The case is the first in New Jersey in which a public school board has appeared as a defendent on charges of discrimination. It is also probably the first such case north of the Mason-Dixon line since the Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation.

Dr. John Milligan, Deputy Commissioner of Education, challenged the manner in which districts had been zoned by the school board and pointed out that in the Lincoln Junior High School all but one of the students were Negroes.

Dr. Milligan held that with different zoning borders it would be possible "to eliminate a racially segregated school." He added he had attempted to solve the matter with the school board last August, and had pointed out then that the zoning revisions would make the Lincoln School a segregated institution.

"I regret what has been done here with school integration, and I regret I failed at conciliation," Dr. Milligan said.

Deputy Attorney General Thomas B. Cook, representing the complainants, said the most important issue to be decided was the duty of the school board in establishing zones for attendance. He charged that "neither the new lines nor the old ones were proportionate with the population of the area, which is proof of discrimination."

Mr. Cook based his case on the premise that the school board was charged with establishing zones to provide the maximum amount of integration with due respect to the physical considerations.

"When a board has not done this in good faith, the law has been violated," he said.

Mr. Cook charged that the redistricting was a concerted effort on the part of the school boards to establish segregation.

Former Judge Thomas J. Brogan of Hudson County, who represented the Englewood School Board, contended that the boundary changes had been made to relieve overcrowding in the Cleveland School, which this year has 622 pupils, compared with 702 last year. The resulting shift in enrollment, according to Mr. Brogan, caused an overcrowding in the Liberty Elementary School, which is also in a predominantly Negro neighborhood, and the Liberty overflow was then sent to Lincoln School. He said there was never any attempt to discriminate or segregate.

White and Negro pupils attend classes together at Dwight Morrow High School, at two junior high schools, and at four out of five grade schools in Englewood. Cleveland School, at Tenafly Road and Durie Avenue, is the only school without mixed classes, only white children being enrolled there.

A state witness, Carl W. Glatt, who investigated the complaint, testified that there were only four white pupils in the Lincoln School as of last month. He said the registrar of Liberty and Englewood Junior High Schools had told him "tiny C's," were placed beside the names of Negro children in the books. This was practiced intermittently through the years from 1939 to 1946, he testified.

Dr. Harry Giles, a Professor of Education at New York University who made a six-year study of the Englewood situation, testified that the zones could be redrawn in such a way "that the predominance of Negroes at the Lincoln School could be reduced." He also recommended that the area be consolidated into one district.

The complaints against the board were filed by Mrs. Susan Anderson of 34 Armory Street and Mrs. Mary Walker of 300 Franklin Road. They are being represented by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and by the State Division Against Discrimination. The hearing will continue on Tuesday.

NAACP Loses In First Round Of Ohio Fight

Judge Denies Plea To End Segregation In Schools Of City

CINCINNATI, Sept. 22 (AP)—Efforts to stop immediately what is charged as segregation in the public schools in Hillsboro, Ohio failed in U. S. District Court today.

After Judge John H. Druffel denied a motion for a temporary restraining order he set Sept. 29 for hearing pleadings for a temporary injunction and a permanent injunction against the Board of Education in the Southwestern Ohio city of 5,100 population.

Has Been Policy

The court denied the temporary restraining order because the defendants had not been notified such a suit would be filed. That always has been his policy, he added.

The defendants are Supt. Paul Upp, Marvel K. Wilkins, president of the Board of Education; Hedges, vice president; Wilfred L. Paul, Lemons Brown and Henry Brown.

The case is believed to be the first court test involving segregation to be filed in a northern state since the U. S. Supreme Court ruled against separating Negroes and whites in public schools.

Injunction Request

The injunction petitions ask that the Hillsboro Board of Education be prevented "from enforcing a policy of segregation, and from requiring the plaintiffs and other similarly situated" to withdraw from Webster and Washington elementary schools "solely because of their race or color."

An assistant district attorney said the only difference between a temporary restraining order and a temporary injunction was that the first could be put into effect immediately. A later date usually is set for hearing a petition for a temporary injunction, as was done today, he said.

Officials Deny Charge

Since the beginning of the school year, the Board of Education and Supt. Upp have denied segregation was involved in any of their actions in Hillsboro.

When school began, Negro children who formerly attended the all Negro Lincoln elementary school reported at Webster and Washington schools. Until this year, those schools have been attended only by white children.

Because an overcrowded condition developed at both schools, Upp said the Negroes were directed to return to Lincoln under warning they would be declared truant if they disobeyed.

With adults standing outside, the Negro children tried later to be accepted in the schools and again were turned away.

The city was rezoned by the school board, with the idea of limiting attendance at the two schools only to those boys and girls living within each zone. Under the plan, a few Negroes were eligible to continue at both Webster and Washington schools.

The suits today, supported by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, assailed the rezoning as an action intended at segregation.

The petitions said the children mentioned in the petitions were accepted at the two white schools on Sept. 8 and assigned to classrooms. Then, on Sept. 14, they were advised they would have to return to Lincoln school.

Attys. Russell L. Carter and James M. McGee, Dayton, Ohio, maintained that action constituted segregation.

Thurwood Marshall of New York City, special counsel to the national office of the NAACP, also signed the injunction petitions. He was one of the attorneys who argued against segregation before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Throughout the controversy in Hillsboro, the school board and Supt. Upp have denied any segregation is intended. They have pointed out there is no segregation in the junior or senior high schools.

They also pointed to a building program adopted long before the U. S. court decision, and said with construction of two new buildings and othr improvements they hoped to bring an early end to Negro and white children being separated in any school.

Delaware problem continues—

Ohio Negroes lose school court test, to press case

By The Associated Press

A move by a group of Ohio Negroes to bring about an immediate end to public school segregation has been blocked by the ruling of a federal judge, while the governor of Delaware pondered ways to ease tense integration problems in that border state between the North and South

Negro leaders said at Columbus, Ohio, today they planned to carry their fight to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary. The immediate situation in Ohio centers at Hillsboro. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is spearheading the fight.

John L. Francis, president of the Ohio conference of the NAACP branches, said he was "shocked" at U. S. Judge John H. Druffel's refusal to act now on a request to halt "enforced segregation" in Hillsboro schools.

IN TURNING down a plea for an injunction, the jurist said that any decision given at this time might be contrary to the pattern of integration yet to be decided on by the Supreme Court.

Druffel's stand was termed an "abuse of discretion" by an NAACP lawyer, who said he would appeal.

A rezoning of residential lines which allowed only 11 Negro students to attend previously all-white classes brought about the NAACP drive.

In Delaware, Gov. J. Caleb Boggs sought ways to bring peace to troubled areas in the southern part of that state. Schools are being boycotted at Milford and nearby communities by white families who object to the integration of 11 Negro students at the elementary-high school where 1562 students attend classes.

Only 537 white students in a registration of 2074 reported yesterday for classes here and in four surrounding communities.

Boggs today sifted recommendations from his attorney general, state education officials and "many others" on what steps to take.

(IN GEORGIA, Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin accepted the formal Democratic nomination as governor with a renewal of his pledge that "during the time I am governor there will be no mixed schools or colleges."

(Democratic nomination is the same as election in Georgia.

(Griffin, speaking at Macon, assailed the U. S. Supreme Court for its ruling on school segregation and said the court sought to "set itself up as a super-school body."

(Griffin favors a so-called private school system under which grants of state, county or city funds would be made to individuals in discharge of all state education obligations.)

State education officials reported today that attendance in seven South Delaware schools "was pretty badly affected."

Dr. George R. Miller said attendance figures "are down sharply and approximate yesterday's" at schools in Millsboro, Ellendale, Lincoln, Dagsboro, Oceanview and Gumboro. Yesterday, less than 40 per cent of the enrollment showed up at each of the schools.

Judge Puts Off Ohio Decision On Segregation

U.S. Jurist Wants To Find Out First Supreme Court Plan

CINCINNATI, Sept. 29 (AP)—U. S. Dist. Judge John H. Druffel declined today to rule immediately in a case in which the Hillsboro, Ohio, School Board is accused of segregation of Negro elementary school pupils.

Judge Druffel declared any decision he would make might turn out to be contrary to a policy yet to be determined by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The judge continued the case until two weeks after the Supreme Court makes its final entry on how its ban on school segregation, given several months ago, shall be put into effect.

First In North

The case here, believed to be the first of its kind in a northern state, involved a petition for an injunction to restrain the Hillsboro School Board from enforcing a school city rezoning which would send most Negro pupils to the all-Negro Lincoln school.

Under the rezoning a few Negro pupils now attend the former all-white Webster and Washington schools.

After a two hour hearing, Judge Druffel pointed out that Chief Justice Warren has called the matter of carrying out the segregation ban "a complex problem." Judge Druffel said the Supreme Court is "setting the pace" for the policy which will be followed by the lower courts.

He also pointed out that Hillsboro school officials testified at today's hearings they plan to integrate school pupils when construction of new buildings at the Webster and Washington schools is completed. School Supt. Paul L. Upp testified the city hopes to have all of that construction work completed within two and a half years.

At Columbus, R. M. Eyman, state director of education, also declared today that Hillsboro's segregation problem would vanish when the new buildings are completed. He asserted "people who were a little impatient" brought up the problem.

There was no immediate word as to what some of the Negro parents at Hillsboro plan to do. Since the rezoning went into effect they have continued to take their children to the Webster and Washington schools and then have taken them home when they were denied admission.

The suit heard today was brought in behalf of parents of five Negro children and was supported by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Because of Race

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York, assistant counsel for the NAACP, declared in arguments before Judge Druffel today that barring of some Negro pupils from the Webster and Washington schools was "solely because of their race and color."

Although for several years the Washington and Webster schools have been all-white and the Lincoln school all-Negro, Hillsboro, a town of 5,100 population, has only one high school and both whites and Negroes attend it.

Supt. Upp also testified today that the rezoning had "no reference whatsoever to racial conditions." The school board has said it was done to avoid overcrowding at the Washington and Webster schools.

He declared the present zoning followed a pattern which had been "inherited" but that he "wouldn't call it segregation."

Referring to the future integration plans, Upp said: "I started this integration program with a clear conscience and I want to carry it out in a clear and intelligent manner."

HE SAID that what stand the state will take in the matter is "up to the General Assembly." State officials and an advisory committee will also have a say in the state's action, the Governor said.

The tenor of the delegation's opposition to desegregation was sounded by State Senator J. V. Whitfield, who declared the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation to be "just as wrong as the Dred Scott decision of 1857" and one which "is more devastating because it can and will destroy both the Negro and white races."

HE SAID desegregation allows the state "to deliberately take a path that everybody knows will lead to a mongrel race." Such a stand, the elected representative of Pender county residents, declared "is a sorry heritage to leave to the future generations of this land."

The Senator's observation was followed by a declaration by a Free Will Baptist minister, a member of the delegation, that integration of schools "would eventually work into inter-marriage."

Several other such delegations are expected to call on Gov. Umstead.

Pender Group Lodges Plea For Continued Segregation

A 19-member delegation from Pender, a rural county where the population is nearly equally divided between white people and Negroes, yesterday called on Governor Umstead and presented him with a thick petition urging that segregated schools be continued in North Carolina.

The delegation was headed by Sen. J. V. Whitfield and Rep. Ashley Murphy, both of Burgaw. The petition, presented by Lynn Corbett of Burgaw, attorney for the Pender County Association for the Continuation of Segregation, asserted that segregation "should be continued at all costs" and asked that the State "take a definite "a challenge to the campaign committee and to the citizens of Goldsboro."

Fifteen agencies were approved for UF membership, compared to seven in the old Community Chest, which last year had a goal of $47,950 with $43,065 being raised.

The eight new agencies included in the United Fund are Red Cross, Cancer Society, Heart Association, Lions Sight Conservation Program, Children's Home Society, Goldsboro and Dillard High Schools Band Patrons Clubs, and United Defense Fund.

The Crippled Children's Society, National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, and the Wayne County Tuberculosis Association declined an invitation to become UF members.

[illegible] the county and 522 are non-residents. Pender has a population of 18,423, of whom 9,523 are white and 8,900 are Negro, and the school population of the county is about 51 per cent colored.

The Governor chose his words carefully when he spoke to the delegation. He was delighted to see them, he said, and, of course, "we all know that the ultimate action (in determining what North Carolina will do) is up to the General Assembly."

"I can tell you," he went on, "that the State Board of Education, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the Attorney General and the special Governor's Advisory Committee are all studying this question. What the recommendations of this group will be, I cannot tell . . .

"The problems are many, and not of easy solution, as I think all of you recognize."

Largest Delegation.

The Governor then posed for pictures with the group. He told reporters that at least two other groups had called on him to urge that segregation be maintained, one coming from Duplin County. The delegation from Pender was the largest to come to him, he said.

Rep. Murphy said the association was formed in his county during the past summer to help ease the tension resulting from the Supreme Court decision abolishing segregation. "We do want to maintain segregation, and we understand the colored people in our county do, to a certain extent," he said.

Sen. Whitfield, who presented the speakers for the Pender group, said at the outset that "we know that Pender County cannot stand alone successfully against the law. However, Governor, there comes a time when a people must declare themselves on decisions that affect their destiny."

Whitfield said the Supreme Court decision was "just as wrong as the Dred Scott decision of 1857 compounding slavery, so to speak, in any state" and "is more devastating because it can and will destroy both the Negro and the white races."

"To deliberately take the path that everyone knows will lead to a mongrel race is a sorry heritage to leave to the future generations of this land," he said.

Hope for Formula.

Whitfield expressed the hope that a "legal formula" might be found "by which the racial integrity of the Negro and white races will be protected." The present formula of segregation "has met the test and should be continued," he maintained.

In their petition, the Pender residents said the Supreme Court opinion is a violation of "the doctrine of states' rights."

"North Carolina," they said, "should take its place along beside the other Southern states in resisting this movement to the uttermost even if it means the abolition of our public school system."

The Rev. K. D. Brown of Burgaw, a Free Will Baptist minister, predicted during the conference with the Governor that integration in the schools would "eventually work into inter-marriage."

G. E. Odom of Watha, a farmer, came as chairman of the association. W. S. Croom of Burgaw, a bondsman, is vice chairman. Mrs. H. P. Bell Jr., of Burgaw, one of five women in the delegation, is secretary of the association.

Others who came besides the officers, the Rev. Mr. Brown, Sen. Whitfield, Rep. Murphy and Corbett, included J. F. Bradshaw of Burgaw, a county commissioners; M. S. Ellis of Burgaw, chairman of the county board of education; C. H. Hill, O. E. Pate and U. S. Rooks, all of Watha; John Taylor, Tom J. Bradshaw, Mrs. Lynn Corbett, Mrs. N. W. Barnes, Mrs. Z. V. McDaniels, and Mrs. Nellie Cook, all of Burgaw.

The delegation spent approximately half an hour in the Governor's office.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York, assistant counsel for the NAACP, declared in arguments before Judge Druffel today that barring of some Negro pupils from the Webster and Washington schools was "solely because of their race and color."

ONE HIGH SCHOOL

Although for several years the Washington and Webster schools have been all-white and the Lincoln School all-Negro, Hillsboro, a town of 5,100 population, has only one high school and both whites and Negroes attend it.

Supt. Upp also testified today that the rezoning had "no reference whatsoever to racial conditions." The school board has said it was done to avoid overcrowding at the Washington and Webster schools.

He declared the present zoning followed a pattern which had been "inherited" but that he "wouldn't call it segregation."

Referring to the future integration plans, Upp said: "I started this integration program with a clear conscience and I want to carry it out in a clear and intelligent manner."

Ohio Judge Waits for Highest Court in Public School Segregation Case

CINCINNATI, Sept. 29 (AP)—U. S. Dist. Judge John H. Druffel declined today to rule immediately in a case in which the Hillsboro, Ohio School Board is accused of segregation of Negro elementary school pupils.

Judge Druffel declared any decision he would make might turn out to be contrary to a policy yet to be determined by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The judge continued the case until two weeks after the Supreme Court makes its final entry on how its ban on school segregation, given several months ago, shall be put into effect.

The case here, believed to be the first of its kind in a Northern state, involved a petition for an injunction to restrain the Hillsboro School Board from enforcing a school city rezoning which would send most Negro pupils to the all-Negro Lincoln school.

Under the rezoning a few Negro pupils now attend the former all-white Webster and Washington schools.

After a two hour hearing, Judge Druffel pointed out that Chief Justice Warren has called the matter of carrying out the segregation ban "a complex problem." Judge Druffel said the Supreme Court is "setting the pace" for the policy which will be followed by the lower courts.

He also pointed out that Hillsboro school officials testified at today's hearings they plan to integrate school pupils when construction of new buildings at the Webster and Washington schools is completed. School Supt. Paul L. Upp testified the city hopes to have all of that construction work completed within two and a half years.

At Columbus, R. M. Eyman, state director of education, also declared today that Hillsboro's segregation problem would vanish when the new buildings are completed. He asserted "people who were a little impatient" brought up the problem.

There was no immediate word as to what some of the Negro parents at Hillsboro plan to do. Since the rezoning went into effect they have continued to take their children to the Webster and Washington schools and then have taken them home when they were denied admission.

School Bias Case Awaits High Court

By the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 29.—U.S. District Judge H. Druffel declined to act today in a school segregation case until the U.S. Supreme Court decides upon the manner in which its antisegregation decision can be put into effect.

Judge Druffel continued a case involving Hillsboro, Ohio, elementary schools until two weeks after final action by the U.S. Supreme Court.

He decided after a hearing on a petition, sponsored by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, for an injunction to prevent the Hillsboro school board from enforcing a school zoning resolution which would send most Negro children to an all-Negro school.

Segregation Ruling Put Off By U. S. Judge

Court In Cincinnati Awaits Precedent

By The Associated Press

Parents of some Negro school children in Ohio lost their fight yesterday for an immediate Federal Court ruling against a City School Board's alleged segregation policy. A boycott of integrated schools meanwhile spread to four cities in southeastern Delaware.

On the other side of the ledger, however, teachers and pupils at a little schoolhouse near Fairmont, W. Va., returned to their integrated classes backed by a court order restraining 53 parents from mass picketing the school.

Arguments Set for December

At Cincinnati, United States District Judge John H. Duffel said a decision in a case in which the Hillsboro, Ohio, School Board is accused of segregating Negro elementary-school pupils, must wait until the U. S. Supreme Court decides how to carry out its edict that racial separation in public schools is unconstitutional. The High Court won't hear "ways and means" arguments until December.

Delaware State police said boycotts developed at Millsboro, Gumboro, and Ellendale in sympathy with the effort to halt the intergration of 10 Negro pupils at the high school in adjacent Milford, Del.

At Gumboro, police said, only four of 113 pupils reported for school and then returned to their homes. Nineteen of 128 showed up at Millsboro but also went back home. At Ellendals only three of an unestimated enrollment appeared before returning home. The school at Lincoln, Del., was closed when no pupils showed up.

Most Go Back

At Milford the boycott stiffened. Dr. George R. Miller, State superintendent of public instruction, said combined attendance at Milford elementary and high schools slumped to 499 of a total enrollment of 1,562.

At Fairmont, W. Va., Circuit Judge J. Harper Meredith called picketing of the Annabelle School "a rebellion against the Government which cannot be tolerated."

After the judge signed a temporary restraining order, sought by the Marion County Board of Education, Principal Lloyd H. Securro, his five teachers, and many of the 157 pupils returned to the little schoolhouse. Parents were protesting the enrollment of 13 Negroes.

Judge Druffel said at Cincinnati that any decision he would make might turn out to be contrary to policy yet to be set by the Supreme Court. He postponed consideration of the Hillsboro case until two weeks after the High Court tells the states how to end public-school segregation.

U. S. Court Turns Down Plea Against Segregation in Ohio

Black Dispatch

CINCINNATI, O. — (ANP) — A petition for a restraining order against the Hillsboro, O., school board to stop what was called segregation in the public schools was denied by United States District court here.

Representatives of several Negro mothers immediately filed petitions for temporary and permanent injunctions against the board after Judge John H. Druffel denied the restraining petition.

The suit was believed by many to be the first of its kind in the Northern courts since the Supreme court outlawed segregation in public schools.

The board of education at Hillsboro, which has a total population of some 51200, has denied segregation, pointing out that this year it opened two former all-white elementary schools to "a limited number of Negro school children."

Russell Carter, NAACP lawyer, said he would file an appeal to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati today. He said he would base it on what he called the judge's "abuse of discretion."

Mr. Carter said Judge Druffel shouldn't have to wait for the Supreme Court to act. The case before the Supreme Court has "nothing to do with the Hillsboro case except on the general principle that segregation is illegal," he said.

Denied Injunction, Ohio Negroes Map New Fight

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 30 (AP).—Stalled by a district judge's ruling yesterday, Negro leaders planned today to carry their fight for immediate school intergration in Hillsboro, Ohio, all the way to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.

United States Judge John H. Druffel declined to act on a request that he stop "enforced" segregation in Hillsboro schools. He said he turned down an injunction bid because any decision might prove contrary to a policy yet to be determined by the Supreme Court.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is making the Hillsboro issue an opening move in its fight for immediate admittance of Negro children to previously all-white schools.

John L. Francis, president of the Ohio conference of NAACP branches, said last night he was "shocked" at Judge Druffel's ruling and would appeal "to the Supreme Court if necessary."

Foe of Segregation Convicted Of Burning Ohio Negro School

Hillsboro, Ohio, Oct. 12 (AP)—An all-white jury of nine men and three women late today convicted Philip Partridge, former Highland County engineer, of charges of arson and burglary in a case in which the segregation of Negro children in the schools was an issue.

Judge George W. McDowell sentenced Partridge, who is white, to a term of one to 10 years on the arson charge and one to 15 years for burglary, the terms to run concurrently.

The jury deliberated only 35 minutes before returning its verdict that Partridge was guilty of setting fire to the all-Negro Lincoln Elementary School last July 5. Partridge said he was opposed to the segregation of Negroes in the schools.

For many years the Webster and Washington schools were all white, but a few Negroes now are admitted to them under a rezoning.

A suit attacking the rezoning as violation of the United States Supreme Court decision banning segregation in the schools, is pending in the U. S. Court of Appeals at Cincinnati.

Partridge admitted setting fire to the school.

NAACP Attorneys Will Appeal Hillsboro, Ohio, School Adverse Decision

New York.—NAACP attorneys announced here Sept. 20 that they will appeal the ruling of a federal judge in Hillsboro, Ohio, until after the Supreme Court hands down its final decrees in the decision banning segregated schools.

In Ohio, 20 Federal District Judge John H. Druffel said in Cincinnati that he would withold his decision in regard to the case brought by the NAACP.

The Association's case sought a preliminary injunction against the Hillsboro board of education to restrain the board from requiring Negro students to withdraw from two formerly all-white elementary schools, pending the final determination of an action brought by five Negro mothers on behalf of their children.

Judge Druffel ruled that the case be continued until two weeks after the Supreme Court hands down its final decrees.

The Negro children were allowed to enroll in the white schools on registration day, Sept. 7, and were assigned to seats in regular classrooms on Sept. 8. They attended classes each day until Sept. 15, when the board of education advised their parents that schools zones had been established and that the streets on which they lived were in the Negro elementary school zone.

No white childern under the board's zoning order were assigned to a Negro school.

The Negro children have been kept away from school by their parents since Sept. 15. Their parents refused to send them back to the Negro elementary school.

Segregation Foe Sentenced For Fire at Negro School

Hillsboro, Ohio—An all white jury of nine men and three women late Tuesday convicted Phillip Partridge, former Highland county engineer, of charges of arson and burglary in a case involving the segregation of Negro children in the school.

Judge George W. McDowell sentenced Partridge, who is wing to a term of 10 years on the arson charge and one to 15 yeaps for burglary with the terms to run concurrently.

The jury deliberated only 35 minutes before returning its verdict that Partridge was guilty of setting fire to the all-Negro Lincoln elementary school last July 5.

Partridge said he was opposed to segregation of Negroes in the schools.

Defense attorneys did not deny Partridge set the fire but they claim it was not done "maliciously" as charged.

Segregation Foes Denied Court Order

Later Test Scheduled In Ohio School Case

Cincinnati, Sept. 22 (AP)—Efforts to stop alleged segregation immediately in the public schools in Hillsboro, Ohio, failed in United States District Court here today.

After Judge John H. Druffel denied a motion for a temporary restraining order, he set next Wednesday for hearing petitions for a temporary injunction and a permanent injunction against the Board of Education in the South western Ohio city of some 5,100 population.

The court denied the temporary restraining order because the defendants had not been notified such a suit would be filed. That has always been his policy, he added.

First Court Test In Month

The defendants are Superintendent Paul Upp, Marvel K. Wilkins, president of the Board of Education; Elmer Hedges, vice-president; Wilfred L. Faul, Lukens Brown, and John Henry Brown.

The case is believed to be the first court test involving segregation to be filed in a Northern state since the U. S. Supreme Court ruled against separating Negroes and whites in public schools.

The injunction petitions ask that the Hillsboro Board of Education be prevented "from enforcing a policy of segregation and from requiring the plaintiffs and others similarly situated" to withdraw from Webster and Washington elementary schools "solely because of their race or color."

Negroes Report at Schools

When school began, Negro children who formerly attended the all-Negro Lincoln Elementary School reported at Webster and Washington schools. Until this year, those schools have been attended only by white children.

Because an overcrowded condition developed at both schools Upp said, the Negroes were directed to return to Lincoln under warning that they would be declared truant if they disobeyed.

With adults standing outside, the Negro children tried later to be accepted in the schools and again were turned away.

Then the city was rezoned by the School Board, with the idea of limiting attendance at the two schools to boys and girls living within each zone. Under the plan, a few Negroes were eligible to continue at both Webster and Washington schools.

The suits today assailed the rezoning as an action intended a segregation.

Negroes Press Court Fight On Ohio City 'Segregation'

By the Associated Press

CINCINNATI, Sept. 22.—Negroes of Hillsboro, Ohio, fighting for immediate admittance of their children into previously all-white schoolrooms, will try again to take their case to court today.

If they do, it will be the first time since the Supreme Court ruling banning segregation in schools that the issue finds its way into Northern courts.

A legal technicality delayed them yesterday. Attorney Russell L. Carter tried to file petitions in United States District Court at Dayton, asking for a halt of what he calls segregation in Hillsboro schools.

He was informed the petitions would have to be filed in the Cincinnati court, which has jurisdiction over the small southwestern Ohio city.

Mr. Carter says he'll do that today.

Segregation Denied.

Officials in Hillsboro insist there is no segregation in their schools.

A rezoning of the city's school districts, which tends to keep most Negro children out of the previously all-white Webster and Washington Schools, became effective last week. But Hillsboro school officials said the rezoning was done on a residential and not a racial basis.

Paul Upp, superintendent of schools, said that until now, Negro children attended the all-Negro Lincoln Elementary School. On passing from the sixth grade they entered the junior high school also attended by white youngsters, he said.

After the Supreme Court decision, however, Negro grade school children reported to both Webster and Washington Schools.

New Buildings Planned.

Rezoning was the only move left because there were not enough desks, seats or room space to accommodate them, School Board members claimed. The rezoning left three Negro children eligible for admission to Webster School and eight eligible for Washington School.

New buildings and improvements at existing schools, all planned before the anti-segregation ruling, will completely eliminate the problem, Mr. Upp said.

Hillsboro, seat of Highland County and a livestock center of gently rolling Southern Ohio lowlands, has a population of a little more than 5,000 persons, nearly four-fifths of them white. There are about 800 white children and 67 Negroes enrolled in the schools, according to School Board figures.

Thirty-eight of the 711 junior and senior high school pupils are Negroes.

Segregation End Puts Heavy Load On Ohio Schools

HILLSBORO, Ohio, Sept. 8 (AP)—Extra chairs were needed today to seat pupils at Webster and Washington Schools as a result of the school board permitting Negroes to matriculate at each place.

Until this year, the Negro boys and girls attended Lincoln Elementary school.

Seventeen youngsters still are going to Lincoln, and they will be taught by two teachers.

Hillsboro had intended ending segregation two years hence, but Negro children were accepted at the previously all-white schools at matriculation yesterday.

The Board of Education at a special meeting last night deferred action for a week on the question of temporary desegregation so it could study the matter of taking care of additional students at the two schools.

Student Riots Opposing Whole Tradition Of Law, Wilkins Says

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P. 1
Cleve. 10-12-54

CLEVELAND, Ohio — (INS) — Assistant Labor Secretary J. Ernest Wilkins said Sunday that demonstrators against integration of whites and Negroes in public schools are opposing "the whole tradition of law and order."

In an address prepared for delivery before a meeting of the Cleveland branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peoples, Wilkins declared:

"Within the past few weeks, thousands and thousands of boys and girls, Negro and white, have been going to school together for the first time.

OPPOSING LAW

"This fact is often lost sight of in the headlines that are made by a few young scatterbrains and their elders. What they are opposing is not integration.

"What they are opposing is the whole tradition of law and order, the whole concept of law and order, the whole concept of human rights on which their security is founded."

Wilkins praised the NAACP for its leadership in the long court battle against school segregation that culminated in last May's Supreme Court decision against separate facilities.

MINDS AND SOULS

The Labor Department official said: "May 17, 1954 will be noted in history as a day on which another great milestone was reached in the horizon of free thinking Americans was widened."

Wilkins is the first Federal government official to comment on the recent demonstrations and strikes protesting de-segregation in Milford, Del., Baltimore, and Washington, D. C.

The Supreme Court, meanwhile, will begin listening Dec. 6 to arguments on how the May decision should be carried out. Representatives of seven Southern states will make their views known.

Integration-Ruling Resistance, By Force, Called Subversive

Courier Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Cleveland, Oct. 8 (AP) — A Methodist bishop declared today that resorting to violence in refusing to obey the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation in schools is subversive.

Sat. 10-9-54

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Washington, addressing the Methodist Church's National Conference on Family Life, said the reaction to the court's ruling that Negroes and whites cannot be segregated in the nation's schools was "heartening beyond expression."

'Leads to Anarchy'

"But," he continued, "there are those among us who advocate disobedience to the law, who stand ready to use force to prohibit its execution."

After commenting that "surely a man has the unsegregated right to earn his living upon the basis of his character and his capacity, not upon the basis of his color," the bishop said those ready to use violence against the decision "apparently do not know that disobedience of the law leads to anarchy."

"Resort to violence and refusal to obey the law is subversive," he continued, "and does more to undermine democratic government than any traitor Communist can do."

Bishop Oxnam also held that "procreation is not the only purpose of sex."

He contended that Christian parents are morally obligated to plan for the coming of their children.

"The proper spacing of children is an expression of love, and therefore is a religious obligation," he said.

P. 2

Says Reflection Cast

"Those who condemn such planning as sinful commit sin, and cast reflection upon Christian men and women who in love take those wise steps necessary to the spacing of children and the health and happiness of the home."

Speaking on "The Christian Home, The Hope of The World," the bishop said, "The love that is present in the Christian home is the unifying force essential to enduring social unity."

OKLAHOMA TENSION

Okla. City Urges School Integration

OKLAHOMA CITY — (NNPA) - Immediate drafting of legislation to desegregate public schools in Oklahoma was urged Wednesday night by the education committee of the legislative council.

"We recognize the Supreme Court has spoken and we are preparing to comply," said Representative Ben Easterly of Alva, committee chairman.

The committee was the first legislative group in Oklahoma to recommend changes in state laws to comply with the decision of the United States Supreme Court outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

The chief recommendation called for submitting to voters as soon as possible a constitutional amendment whih would remove the financial obstacle in the way of desegregation. Negro schools are now financed by a 4-mill levy on a county-wide basis, and white schools by 20 mills levied district wide.

The proposed amendment would provide a 5 mill levy on a county wide basis, the proceeds from which would be distributed to all school districts on the basis of average daily attendance. This would replace the 4 mills provided in the constitution for separate Negro schools.

The committee also asked the Board of Regents for Higher Education and the State Board of Education to prepare immediately other legislation and proposed constitutional amendments they deemed necessary to end segregation in public education.

The legislators followed the recommendations of the Oklahoma Education Assocition, the state superintendent of public instruction, and the Congress of Parent-Teacher Assocations on the proposed desegregation amendment, and supported the Oklahoma Education Association on four other major phases of its legislative program.

Oklahoma Makes First Move To Integrate Schools

Oklahoma City, Okla.—(CNS)—Oklahoma made its first move last week to integrate its schools. Its Legislative Council Committee on Education has approved a recommendation to the Legislature for a constitutional amendment to make it legal for the two races to go to school together. The Legislature, however, won't meet until January.

Oklahoma has had segregation since statehood. For it to be removed, it must be eliminated from the state constitution, and changes made in the financing of the schools. The committee's vote in favor of the changes was unanimous.

Suit Filed in Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY, Sept. 2- (AP)—Attorneys for three El Reno Negro youths today asked the Federal District Court here to open the doors of their hometown statae junior college to them.

Roscoe Dunjee, of this city chairman of the executive committee for the state conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the suit was the first legal move in Oklahoma to test school equality on a basis of residence.

Louisiana Argues Issue

Special to The New York Times.

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 6—Louisiana's voters apparently approved a constitutional amendment that legislative leaders said would continue racial segregation in the public schools. There was, however, a difference of opinion as to what the proposal actually would accomplish.

The amendment provides that the state can use its inherent police power to continue segregation in the schools in order to maintain public health, morals, peace and good order. It also authorizes the Louisiana Legislature to submit additional proposed amendments to the Constitution at special elections instead of only at general elections at which state legislators and Congressmen are selected.

State Senator William Rainach of Summerfield, chairman of a special legislative committee to continue segregation in the schools, hailed the victory as a "mighty one against alien forces that would attempt under the guise of law to herd our white and colored children into mixed schools like so many animals with amalgamation of the races as their objective."

But other state leaders were inclined to believe the amendment would have little effect.

Leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have been silent on the amendment which the segregation advocates considered the cornerstone of their program.

Public School Council Meets

The Citizens Education Committee changed its name Tuesday night to the Oklahoma Council for Public Schools, during the course of a meeting held in the Douglass High school, 10th and Eastern, at which time some 75 whites attended along with seven Negroes.

The meeting was presided over by Harold Stephens who called upon the various committees to report on the work done. The following committees reported: School program, Malcomb C. White; Socres for School Income, T. B. Hendrick; "School Expenditures" Mrs. P. O. Johnson; "School Building," Roy W. Mann; "Citizenship Education," Richard J. Jones.

The following constitutional amendments were discussed and endorsed by the committee, having to do with the integration of school finances.

1. A Constitutional amendment providing for a five-mill county levy with the proceeds to be distributed among all school districts of the county on the basis of average daily attendance and the elimination of our present system of a budget for the majority schools and another budget for the separate schools of the district. This would replace the separate school level that is now levied on a county-wide basis.

2. A Constitutional amendment that will permit the County Excise Board to make a levy of not to exceed twenty mills on certification of the need thereof of the local board of education, and that levies in excess of twenty mills may be authorized by the voters of a school district.

3. A Constitutional amendment to allow school districts to bond themselves to an amount not to exceed ten per cent of the assessed valuation of the district upon a vote of the people of the district.

4. A Constitutional amendment which would liberalize the existing building fund levies fo schools to permit its use for re modeling, repairing and replacement of existing school structures and for the purchase of necessary equipment.

School Suit May Be Filed at El Reno

Attys. U. S. Tate and Ada Lois Fisher, together with Editor Roscoe Dunjee, were in El Reno Monday evening, at which time they addressed an audience in connection with the efforts of Joshua White to enroll in El Reno college.

Tate and Dunjee held a conference with City Supt. Taylor Monday afternoon, at which time all of the facts surrounding this particular case was discussed.

Funds were raised at the meeting and plans laid for the institution of a mandamus action in the federal court to require the El Reno school to enroll White. Other applicants may also make application for enrollment, following the Monda night meeting.

Tate and Atty. Fisher will doubtless file an action in the federal court next week, asking that White be admitted to the classes at El Reno college

Suit filed against Pa school segregation

App-American Sun Baltimore, Md.

PHILADELPHIA— (ANP) — Refusal on the part of Spring House Grade School officials, Lower Gwynedd Township, to admit four colored students to classes there has brought about quick action on the part of the children's parents.

They immediately filed suit in Montgomery County Court to compel the township to allow their children to attend. Representing complainants is Horce Davenport, a Norristown lawyer.

Parents are Thaddeus W. Smith Jr., his wife, Irene, and their daughter, Ledly, 7; Philip and Janet Queenan and their daughter, Sandra, 8; George and Naomi Robinson and son, Lawrence, 10; and Joseph and Hattie Stewart and daughter, Lillian 11. The four families live in Penllyn.

— o O o —

NAMED DEFENDANTS are Mrs. Anne W. Alexander, principal, Spring House School, and five members of the township school board: Howard Wampole, Willard Lightcap, Emily Nugent, Charles W. Roberts Jr., president; and John Mathers.

Davenport states in his argument that the board voted 4-1 last month to bring about integration in the township on a gradual basis. That is, by enrolling colored children in the first and second grades to begin with and later moving them along.

On Sept. 8, Ledley Smith and Sandra Queenan were enrolled at Spring House and assigned to classes in the third grade. The next day, a school board member informed their parents that they were being transferred to an all colored school a mile and a half away, the attorney said.

Meanwhile, Lillian Stewart and Lawrence Robinson, former pupils at the colored school had not been permitted to enroll at Spring House on Sept. 8, and since then have been at home. The parents of all said they would not consent to such actions.

Four Segregation Foes Appeal Boycott Fines

Inquirer Phila. Pa. Thurs. 10-5-54 P. 7

Four fathers who were fined $1 each last Thursday for refusing to send their children to the "segregated" Penllyn School, reserved for Negroes only, appealed their conviction yesterday to Montgomery County Quarter Sessions Court at Norristown.

The parents said they had refused to send their children to "the segregated Penllyn School because that school is substantially inferior in every respect to facilities at the Spring House School."

'COERCION' CHARGED

They added that the board was trying to "coerce" them into accepting the Penllyn School "by enforcing the State's compulsion education law." The fines were imposed for violation of that law, it was noted.

The appellants are Thaddeus W. W. Smith, Jr., Philip Queenan, George E. Robinson and Joseph Stewart. Their children are Ledley Smith, 7, Sandra Queenan, 8, Lawrence Robinson, 10, and Lillian Stewart, 11.

Filed by Horace W. Davenport, an attorney, the appeal named Charles W. Roberts, Jr., president of the Lower Gwynedd Township School Board, and the other members of the board as defendants.

CALLS FOR REVERSAL

The appeal asks the court to reverse Magistrate Robert J. Hulshouder's conviction, to remit the fines and to order the board to admit the children to the township's Spring House School.

The same appellants, on Sept. 26, filed suit in Montgomery County Court asking for an order extending an integration program adopted in July by the school board. At that time the board voted to admit to the Spring House School 22 Negro pupils who in past years would have been enrolled in the first or second grades at the Penllyn School.

The Spring House School formerly had only a few Negro pupils. The board announced that it felt that "gradual integration" of Negro and white pupils over the next few years would be in the best interests of the community.

Says Board Voted To Bring About Integration

Pittsburgh Courier, 10-8-54

PHILADELPHIA, (ANP)—Refusal on the part of Spring House grade school officials, Lower Gwyned township, to admit four Negro students to grade school classes there has brought about quick action on the part of the children's parents.

They immediately filed suit in Montgomery county to compel the township to allow their children to attend. Representing complainants is Horace Davenport, a Norristown lawyer.

Parents are Thaddeus W. Smith, jr., his wife, Irene, and their daughter Ledly, 7; Phillip and Janet Queenan and their daughter, Sandra, 8; George and Naomi Robinson and son, Lawrence, 10; and Joseph and Hattie Stewart and daughter, Lillian, 11. The four families live in Penllyn.

Named defendants are Mrs. Anne W. Alexander, principal, Spring House school, and five members of the township school board: Howard Wampole, Willard Lightcap, Emily Nugent, Charles W. Roberts, jr., president, and John Mathers.

Davenport states in his argument that the board voted 4-1 last month to bring about integration in the township on a gradual basis. That is by enrolling Negro children in the first and second grades to begin with and later moving them along.

There is one all-Negro school in the section, Pellyn. However, when Negro children were admitted to the first two grades in Spring House school, those grades were done away with at Pellyn.

On Sept. 8, Ledley Smith and Sandra Queenan were enrolled at Spring House and assigned to classes in the third grade. The next day a school board member informed the parents of the children that they were being transferred to Pellyn, a mile and a half away, the attorney said.

The parents said they would "not consent to such action" and both children were taken to their homes. Meanwhile, Lillian Stewart and Lawrence Robinson, former pupils at Pellyn, had not been permitted to enroll at Spring House on Sept. 8, and since then have been at home.

Davenport further stated that parents of each of the four children were informed by school officials that they have been violating "the Public School Code of 1939," and that if they persist in keeping the youngsters at home they will be "subjected to summary action."

The parents first tried to settle the matter with the school board out of court; failing this, they filed the petition.

They charge that the only reason their children are not admitted to Spring House School is because they are Negroes; that facilities at Penllyn school are inferior to those of other grade schools and that children are being denied equal educational opportunities and protection of and due process of law under the 14th amendment.

The Spring House school has an enrollment of 253, including 22 Negro pupils in the first two grades, and about four admitted in previous years in the upper grades.

Only 45 pupils, all Negroes, are left in the four remaining grades at Penllyn, the attorney said.

Proof that Spring House would not be overburdened by taking in all 45 students is pointed to in the six-room addition to the building recently completed.

Only 45 pupils, all Negroes, are left in the four remaining grades at Pellyn, the attorney said.

Proof that Spring House would not be overburdened by taking in all 45 students is pointed to in the six-room addition to the building recently completed.

Palmetto State Is Marking Time; Sentiment Against Decision Rises

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C., Oct. 9—South Carolina is doing nothing publicly at present about the question of segregation in school—just marking time to see what the Supreme Court orders sometime in the future as to implementation of its opinion handed down last May.

SOUTH CAROLINA

But this does not mean that an alert is not being maintained, and that much thinking is not going on as to what this state's course should be if the Supreme Court insists upon immediate integration.

What has been happening in Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio and the District of Columbia has been watched most carefully, and many believe the court will take cognizance of these outbursts in forming its decree.

T. C. Callison, attorney general of South Carolina, who will be expected to appear when the court hears implementative arguments in December, says he continues to get letters, often from mothers who write that they will not allow their children to go to schools that are also attended by Negro pupils.

"There is no doubt," he said this week "that they mean what they say."

Foes 'More Determined'

Commenting on the protests that have arisen in Northern and border states, Mr. Callison said: "The unfortunate conditions we have seen in Delaware and other Northern states where enforced integration has been attempted will not approximate the conditions which will result in South Carolina if integration is attempted."

Mr. Callison thinks the people, "now realizing fully what the rulings of the United States Supreme Court imply," are giving "very determined action" than heretofore, in their opposition.

The United States Supreme Court, as is known, is receiving additional briefs in the segregation case until next month. South Carolina, which as a political subdivision has never been joined in the suit which arose in a district in Clarendon County this state—the case that proved to be the prime one before the Supreme Court—will, of course, not participate. Only the school district is a party. Its attorneys will file a supplementary brief, which Robert McC. Figg Jr. of counsel for the district, said, "will largely reiterate our position as stated before. There will be no additional pleadings."

Probers Mark Time

Any order issued is applicable per se only to the South Carolina district that was made a defendant by the NAACP. Since then the NAACP has started cases in some other districts. So integration, if and when ordered, will be fought out in this state on a district-by-district basis. This, both sides admit, means long litigation.

The segregation committee named by the governor and the legislature to study a plan of procedure has concluded its hearings, but has made no report, and likely won't be heard from until after the committee knows what the Supreme Court has in mind in the way of implementation. In the meantime members are studying possible avenues to follow should the court's decree call for immediate integration.

Public schools in South Carolina are operating smoothly. There hasn't been a single instance, so far as can be learned, of friction. All are on the same segregated basis save one Catholic school, which announced it would receive Negro pupils, and is open to both races.

In January a new governor takes office. James F. Byrnes will hand over the office to George Bell Timmerman Jr. of Batesburg, presently the lieutenant governor.

Mr. Timmerman in his campaign last summer proposed that one way to solve the dilemma might be to have separate schools, as usual, for whites and Negroes, and a third school open to those of both races who desire integration. No doubt he will reiterate this position when the time seems propitious.

There is much talk about the demonstrations being staged in non-Southern states. Many believe that the court's order, as a result of the protests that have arisen out of the South, may be tempered.

Suit Filed in Texas

AUSTIN, Tex., Sept. 21 (AP).—Attorneys for a seventeen-year-old Houston Negro student today filed suit in Federal District Court seeking to compel officials of the University of Texas to admit him to the College of Engineering.

The suit was filed on behalf of John Winfred Walker. Federal Judge Ben H. Rice jr. set hearing on an application for a temporary restraining order for 10 a. m. Friday at San Antonio.

The legal action sought an order restraining the university's Board of Regents, Dr. Logan Wilson, president, and Registrar H. Y. McCown from refusing to admit young Walker and others of his race "similarly situated."

The suit stated the youth received notice July 15 that he had been admitted to the university as a freshman student in petroleum engineering. However, the suit alleged, on Sept. 2, Mr. McCown wrote him "regretfully" advising that his notice of acceptance was canceled.

Texas To Ask 'Own' Solution To Bigs

DALLAS, Tex. — (INS) — Atty. Gen. John Den Shepperd revealed that Texas will ask the U. S. Supreme Court to let it work out its own school segregation problems.

He said a brief will be submitted to the Supreme Court this Fall when it considers methods of anti-segregation in which the state will ask to be allowed to work out out its own problems "at home — where those problems are best understood."

Plans are to work out the problems "County by County and City by City" the Attorney General told a convention of North and East Texas County officials in Dallas.

Judge Backs U. of Texas

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Sept. 25 (UP)—Federal Judge Ben H. Rice Jr. today refused to order the University of Texas to accept a Negro student. The student is John Winfred Walker, 17 years old, one of three Negro students accepted for admission but later rejected.

Judge Rice denied a motion for a temporary restraining order, but will hear the case in Austin later.

Prefer Mixed To No Schools

Northern Counties, Fearful Of Move To Drop System, May Ask To Be Given Freedom Of Action

The split among Virginia leaders over defiance of the Supreme Court decision against segregation in public schools, grew wider this week. Members of school boards in 15 northern Virginia localities indicated they might be ready to heed the ruling of the high tribunal and start desegregating their schools.

Governor Thomas B. Stanley, who is pledged to use "every legal means" to maintain segregation in Virginia schools, has insisted that the overwhelming sentiment in the state is against ending segregated schools.

MEANWHILE support for a plan of local option in dealing with the problem came from another source.

The board of supervisors and the school board of Albemarle county in a resolution unanimously adopted at a public meeting Wednesday said "a system of free public schools should be maintained and should receive State direction and financial support."

It further stated that each county and city should decide for itself whether to abolish its public schools or participate in a state-approved system. But it also declared that no child should be required to attend a mixed school whose parents objected.

AN OFFICIAL of the school board who asked that his name not be used was quoted as saying, "Some of the counties in Tidewater and Southeastern Virginia are not going to have integrated schools no matter what the Supreme Court says.

"If wwe try to reach a decision that will apply to the whole state," he said, "I am afraid Eastern Virginia could muster enough strength to wipe out our entire system of public schools."

OFFICIALS of these 15 school boards meeting in Warrenton Wednesday indicated clearly they would not wish to follow Governor Stanley in any move to abolish public schools in order to defeat desegregation. Some of the officials even termed as "unfortunate" the refusal of the State Board of Education this year to permit local school boards to act independently in starting integration.

The chairman of the Falls Church school board, John Johnson, who is also general counsel for the Air Force, asked what might have happened if a Virginia school board admitted a Negro child to a white school this fall.

HE ANSWERED his question by expressing doubt that the Virginia constitutional provision requiring segregated schools would be held valid in any federal court in the face of the Supreme Court's ruling.

Another school official, Mrs. E. D. Campbell, chairman of the Arlington school board, said, "We should indicate to the state that we are willing to assume our responsibilities as local school trustees and whether asked for it ro not, should come up with specific recommendations."

However, the group went on record as believing that no board member would want to deviate from the "ultimate plan" for integration which is to be worked out by top state officials for the entire state.

Virginia Plan Aims at Delay Of Integration

Armistead Boothe Program Stresses Local Autonomy

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Sept. 18.—Delegate Armistead Boothe of Alexandria today came up with a proposed "Virginia plan" that would give local authorities wide latitude in solving the school segregation issue.

The 47-year-old attorney said he favored continuation of the State's traditional segregation policy "in accordance with the wishes of the people in the various localities."

He suggested three basic rules for Virginia to follow in working out a school plan for presentation to the Supreme Court.

1. The State should strive for court recognition of the practical fact that the Old Dominion needs "an indefinite time" in which to work out its school problems.

2. No child of either race should be compelled to attend a school with mixed classes.

3. No teacher of either race should be assigned to teach children of another race.

Goals Held Attainable.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, is on record in support of the latter two goals and has said he believes they are legally obtainable.

Mr. Almond will present Virginia's side in the segregation case in a new hearing to be held later in the year by the Supreme Court. The tribunal, in its May 17 decision outlawing segregation in the public schools, requested the four States involved to return later and describe how they proposed to desegregate.

There has been no lewering of the barriers in Virginia as yet. Gov. Stanley has pledged to use "every legal means" to preserve the status quo and has set up a 32-man legislative commission to try to find a way to keep the races apart.

Mr. Boothe proposed a "Virginia Plan" in an article written for the latest issue of the Virginia Education Journal and elaborated on his views in a statement to the Associated Press.

He predicted segregation will be maintained indefinitely "in its entirety" in many sections of the State.

Elsewhere, he said, segregation would be continued in varying degree in proportion to the Negro population.

Favors Local Autonomy.

Mr. Boothe suggested Virginia strive for considerable local autonomy so that each community can solve its conditions as it sees fit. He advocated local governing bodies be given the power to consider four points in planning pupil assignments:

1. Difference in academic backgrounds among the students.

2. Health requirements of the students.

3. Personality, practices, needs and desires of individual children.

4. The intensity of racial feeling in the various students.

He said the powers could be exercised by making individual assignments of children to local schools, by arranging attendance through new attendance districts and by allowing children to elect their own school.

Mr. Boothe reiterated his advocacy of retention of the public school system. Several weeks ago in a poll of his fellow lawmakers, a 7-1 vote in favor of retention was recorded by the one-third membership that replied.

Secrecy Binds Virginia Study On Segregation

Special Commission On Schools to Hear Public Later

By Alex R. Preston
Star Staff Correspondent

RICHMOND, Sept. 14.—A special commission on public school segregation, whose conclusions, Gov. Stanley says, "may well have much to do with the future welfare of all the citizens," was functioning today under a strict secrecy rule.

The gag placed on all but the chairman of the 42-member commission, which met here to wrestle with the problem of the Supreme Court decision, was almost 100 per cent effective.

The group, officially designated as the Commission on Public Education, decided yesterday to hold public hearings at times and places to be designated later, according to the chairman, State Senator Garland Gray of Waverly.

To Name Executive Committee.

It authorized Mr. Gray, a likely candidate for Governor in 1957, to appoint an Executive Committee of from seven to nine members. He said he will make the appointments and call a meeting of that group next week. The full commission will reconvene about October 1; he added.

Gov. Stanley told the 13 State Senators and 19 delegates he appointed to the commission that he believes it will be about two more months before attorneys will be asked by the Supreme Court to file final briefs on means of implementing the decision of last May 17, declaring unconstitutional the separation of white and Negro children in public schools.

The Governor gave reporters a three-page statement, which he said he was going to make to the commission. He met with it behind closed doors.

He told the lawmakers they were dealing with "a subject of tremendous importance to all the people of the Commonwealth."

Talk Anonymously.

When the meeting broke up, nearly all of the commission members said they were bound by a rule not to talk to reporters and none would speak for quotation by name.

"I made my position clear," said one Southeastern Virginia House member. "The people of my county just will not stand for Negroes and whites going to the same school."

Said another House member from the far Southwest: "I don't know why they want to be so secret about a matter of this kind. I was opposed to it and still am. But I feel I'm bound by the resolution."

Neither of Arlington's members, Senator Charles R. Fenwick and Delegate J. Maynard Magruder, had comment after the session.

A reporter who entered the room as soon as the meeting adjourned and during the confusion of members leaving picked up an abandoned copy of the mimeographed resolution, which began:

"All meetings of the commission shall be executive and its deliberations confidential, except when the meeting consists of a public hearing or it is otherwise expressly decided by the commission.

Restriction on Releases.

"All press releases and other information shall be given by or under authority of the commission, or the chairman, except routine announcements, which may be given out by the secretary.

"All meetings of committees appointed by the commission shall be subject to the same rules as meetings and deliberations of the commission itself."

The resolution ended in this manner:

"This action is intended generally to prevent premature disclosure of what may prove to be purely tentative conclusions of the commission. It is designed particularly to prevent misunderstandings and to promote freedom of discussion and deliberation during meetings of the commission and its committees."

Three commission members indicated that a solution may be sought through appropriate legislation at a special session of the General Assembly. This probably would be early next year.

Mr. Gray said State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., and Supt. of Public Instruction Dowell J. Howard will be asked to meet with the Executive Committee next week and with the commission in later meetings.

Series of Hearings Seen.

Mr. Gray said no decision was reached on scheduling public hearings, but some suggested that they be held "along congressional district lines." This would mean at least 10 hearings in various localities—one for each district.

Gov. Stanley, in setting up the legislative group, had suggested that "early public hearings" be held.

"The sentiment of the people of Virginia has been expressed to me by letter, telegram, telephone and in person," the Governor told the group. "I am convinced beyond doubt that the overwhelming majority of the white people wish to continue segregation of the races in the public schools. On the other hand, it would appear that numerous Negro citizens desire an integration of the races.

Would Continue Segregation.

"Whatever program or legislation is proposed and adopted, it can succeed only if it is in accord with the will of the people. I firmly believe that both public sentiment and the best interests of both races demand continued segregation.

"I hope we will have the cooperation of both races to maintain segregation and thereby minimize the harmful effects of the decision of the court. I reiterate my previous statement that I shall use every legal means at my command to preserve segregated public schools in Virginia."

Keep calm, speaker tells school teachers

By RUFUS WELLS

PETERSBURG, Va.—It is the responsibility of public school teachers to remain calm during the 1954-55 school year and see that their work is conducted in a "calm and normal atmosphere," John D. Meade, superintendent, declared last week.

Mr. Meade, speaking without a prepared text at a pre-school teachers meeting in Peabody High School, said he felt the residents of Petersburg could settle their racial problems without being "upset by outside influences."

His remarks concerning school integration and the "interference" of northern whites created a furore among colored teachers, many of whom interpreted his talk as a strong defences of school segregation.

MR. MEADE, denied that he had mentioned the NAACP in the talk. He said he told the teachers that:

"During the 1954-55 term, our schools will operate under the laws of Virginia and any changes to be made will be made by the Commonwealth of Virginia."

He said he stressed the importance of making the school term a good one and preventing idle gossip from causing frustration in children already confused by the bombardment of newspaper and radio reports on the school issue.

—o O o—

THE SUPERINTENDENT, when interviewed by the AFRO also denied a report that ... colored citizens shouldn't h... petitioned for the opening of ...ly-... ed Wilcox Lake to ... citize... s.

"As individuals, they can do whatever they please," Mr. Meade explained.

"I said that the unpleasantness caused by the Wilcox Lake litigation was unfortunate and a good example of the failure of the two races in Petersburg to get together and work out their problems."

Mr. Meade told the AFRO that his "observations" were made "strictly for teachers to use as they see fit." He said he made the same remarks at a Petersburg Kiwanis Club meeting earlier the same week.

—o O o—

THE CITY - OWNED Lake, formerly reserved for whites, was closed down after 32 colored residents filed suit in Federal Court demanding admittance. The case is still pending in court.

It was widely rumored that Mr. Meade said his great uncle was killed by a Yankee in the Civil War and that he (Mr. Meade) has a hatred for Northern whites.

Mr. Meade denied making that statement. He admitted citing the fact that his great uncle died in the Civil War, but only to show that if he had any hatred it would be directed against Northern whites instead of "the Southern colored man."

The superintendent admitted telling his teachers that there will be no mixing of colored and white pupils in Petersburg during this school year, but denied a saying that the public schools would "cease to exist" if the Supreme Court ordered segration.

9 Picked in Virginia To Seek Way to Keep Schools Segregated

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 17.—A nine-man executive committee yesterday was set up to do investigative spadework for Virginia's special commission charged with trying to find a way to maintain segregation in the public schools.

Commission Chairman Garland Gray of Waverly named the nine members and announced the committee will hold its organizational meeting in Richmond Wednesday.

Named to the committee were State Senators Robert F. Baldwin of Norfolk, A. S. Harrison of Lawrenceville, J. D. Hagood of Halifax County and Curry Carter of Staunton, and Delegates J. R. Tucker of Richmond, W. Tayloe Murphy of Warsaw, Joe Blackburn of Lynchburg, Maynard Magruder of Arlington and Russell Carneal of Williamsburg.

Mr. Gray and the commission's vice chairman, Delegate Harry B. Davis of Princess Anne, will serve as ex-officio members.

The full 32-man commission, at its organizational meeting in Richmond on Monday, directed Mr. Gray to appoint the executive committee and assigned it the task of selecting a time and place for public hearings on the school segregation issue.

Integration Going Smoothly, Baltimore Official Says

BALTIMORE, Sept. 17. (AP)—"Things are going so smoothly there is no need for comment," Walter Sondheim, president of the school board, said yesterday after receiving a breakdown on the mixed enrollment of whites and Negroes.

Baltimore has the only Maryland schools without segregation.

The mixing has worked both ways. Six white children enrolled in three elementary schools formerly for Negroes only, John J. Fischer, superintendent, reported.

He told the Board of School Commissioners there is a total of 85,626 white students and 55,331 Negroes enrolled.

In most cases, he reported, the number of Negroes attending schools formerly limited to whites is very small. One exception has 382 whites and 321 Negroes.

NAACP Hits Rejection Of Pupils at Navy Base

BALTIMORE, Sept. 17 (AP).—A lawyer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People yesterday hinted of possible court action against the Cecil County Board of Education over a segregated school on Federally owned property in the county.

Referring to the school at the Bainbridge Naval Training Center, Tucker R. Dearing, attorney for the Baltimore Branch of the NAACP, said "the situation is ripe for the courts."

The school, operated on a segregated basis, is largely for children of persons connected with the Navy base.

Negro children are taken by bus to a Negro school in Port Deposit near the training center.

Mr. Dearing said 13 Negro children were denied admission to the school Monday. He argued they should have been admitted because the school is on Government property.

Morris W. Runnels, superintendent of the county board of education, said the board, which leases the school property from the Federal Government, must operate the school according to State law.

Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins has ruled county boards of education in Maryland should continue segregation as required by State law.

Virginia Segregation Commission Head To Consult Almond

By The Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 23.—State Senator Garland Gray, chairman of Virginia's School Segregation Study Commission, said yesterday he planned to confer with Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond at an early date on possible methods for keeping Negro and white pupils in separate schools.

Senator Gray said he was interested in finding out whether the attorney general has a workable "plan," as implied by Mr. Almond several weeks ago.

At that time, Mr. Almond said he believed it possible Virginia could devise a scheme that would permit the continuation of the traditional segregation policy that has prevailed in the State for 84 years. He did not detail any way of doing so.

Senator Gray disclosed his intention to confer with Mr. Almond at the end of a four-hour meeting of the 11-man executive committee of the Segregation Study Commission.

The Waverly legislator was reluctant to discuss the meeting and pointed to a resolution adopted by the full 32-man commission by which the members voted not to discuss their deliberations with the press unless authorized to do so.

It was learned, however, the committee devoted part of its session to setting up public hearings. Times and places were selected subject to the approval of the full commission.

Senator Gray said he was certain the commission would not have any findings to pass on to Mr. Almond in time for use in Virginia's segregation brief that must be filed with the Supreme Court by November 15. The November 15 date was set by the court yesterday.

Commission members had previously expressed doubt they would have sufficient time to make any recommendations to the attorney general.

Whitehead pushes Va. scheme to escape school desegregation

Afro American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 11-6-54

NORFOLK, Va. (NNPA) — Delegate Robert Whitehead of Nelson County, a leader of Virginia's "anti - organization" Democrats, Thursday, suggested that this state follow "a middle of-the-road course," giving cities and counties broad local option to deal with the question of ending racial segregation in the public schools.

Mr. Whitehead, a probable candidate for governor in 1957, called for revision of the compulsory school attendance law so as to grant local school boards "wide discretion" to decide for themselves whether they will maintain an integrated system, a segregated system or a combination of the two.

ADDRESSING THE Cosmopolitan Club here, Whitehead said he considered the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools "most unfortunate," but he differed with extremists on both sides of the school issue.

"I have a word of advice," he said, "for those who would abolish our public school system if such be deemed necessary to prevent integration.

"They are, I assume, the extreme states' rights advocates, who believe in the Federal Government keeping its long snout out of local affairs and letting the states do the job.

"The abolition of a state system of free public schools will be an open invitation to the Federal Government to boldly step into the field of education and take over. And if, and when that happens, the doctrine of states' rights will be as dead as the dodo bird.

"TO THOSE who press for all-out integration, I also have a word of advice.

"If and when a system of mixed schools is rammed down the throats of Virginia citizens over their protests, the minimum reaction will be that appropriations will be drastically reduced and the level of educational materially lowered.

"Education of both white and colored children will suffer, our teachers will be penalized and our progress will be stymied."

Virginia Educators Refuse to Support Segregation Ruling

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Sat. 10-30-54

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 30.— Virginia Education Association delegates headed home today after a 3-day convention here which covered a wide-range of classroom subjects and saw the VEA refuse to go on record in support of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

The delegates on Thursday beat a proposal to put the VEA on record in favor of the Supreme Court's ruling which outlawed public school segregation.

Instead, the convention adopted a resolution directing the VEA's board of directors to give "careful study" to the decision.

Dr. John L. Palmer, principal of Cherrydale Elementary School in Arlington, was re-elected president of the social studies section of the association.

George F. Bagby, chairman of the English department of Alexandria's George Washington High School, was elected president of the teachers of English.

The group also elected Mrs. Mary Councell, a teacher at Washington-Lee High School in Arlington, vice president.

Integration Doubts Futile, Dr. Mays Says

RICHMOND, Oct. 30 (AP).— The president of an Atlanta Negro college yesterday told the Virginia Teachers' Association that Americans who fear integration are "worried about nothing" and "nothing can stop" the movement toward integration.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, told about 4,000 members of the State-wide Negro school teachers' organization both Negroes and whites are afraid of integration.

"Mankind has always been afraid of the future," he said. "In 25 years those of us who are still alive . . . will wonder why in 1954 we were so worried about nothing."

Date Set to Map Plans On Segregation Hearing

RICHMOND, Oct. 30 (AP).— The Executive Committee of the State Commission on Public Education will meet here November 9 to consider detailed arrangements for the commission's first public hearing November 15.

The November 15 hearing will permit organizations and individuals an opportunity to air their opinions on the public school problems facing Virginia in light of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation hearing.

Those wishing to be heard have been asked to submit their names to the commission by November 8.

The 32-member commission, composed of State legislators, was formed by Gov. Stanley to consider a course for Virginia's public schools now that segregation has been ruled unconstitutional.

At the November 9 executive session at the State Capitol, the commission's chairman, State Senator Garland Gray, will take up the requests submitted, map a tentative time schedule and discuss procedure.

All requests should be sent to John B. Boatwright, jr., secretary of the commission, at the Division of Statutory Research and Drafting at the Capitol here.

ALEXANDRIA SUBURBS WON'T INTEGRATE

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. wed. 11-3-54 P. 1

ALEXANDRIA— (ANP) — This town, practically a suburb of Washington, D. C., has decided not to follow the example of the capitol city in integrating schools, but has announced it will abide by whatever policy Virginia works out.

The city council meeting agenda had called for establishment of a date for the council to discuss views and recommendations for presentation at a public hearing on the question, to be held November 15 in Richmond by the Commission of Public Education.

When the item came up last week, no date was set. Vice-Mayor Leroy Bendheim, stated:

"I think our position is that it is an educational policy that is a state matter. I feel that we should express no views and accept the policy set by the state."

No Incidents In Virginia's Mixed Schools

RICHMOND, Va. (ANPA)—No incidents have occurred in Catholic schools where racial bars were lowered in September, Monsignor J. J. Flaherty, superintendent of schools for the dioceses of Richmond, reported Friday.

He said no demonstrations by white pupils have occurred at any of the high and elementary schools in Richmond, Roanoke and northern Virginia where mixing of white and colored children took place this year for the first time.

"The reason, I think, is we have been preparing them for the last five years," he said. "In social [illegible] and religious courses, teachers have been "spelling out the Gospel all men before God, [illegible]."

Three white pupils have been withdrawn out of one Richmond Catholic high school because of the enrollment of colored pupils, Msgr. Flaherty said, and six other children were withdrawn by their parents for the same reason in Roanoke and Fairfax and Arlington counties. Aside from that there has been no trouble, and diocesan officials have been "agreeably surprised," he said.

Forty-one colored pupils are now enrolled in five elementary and four high schools in the dioceses, with a total enrollment of some 2,300, Msgr. Flaherty said. In Richmond, eleven colored students attend Benedictine, St. Patrick's and Cathedral High Schools, which have about 500 white students.

7 More Virginia Groups Ask Integration Order

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Oct. 1.—Gov. Stanley has received two more petitions for maintenance of segregated schools in Virginia, the Appotanta Ruritan Club of Prince George County, told the Governor in a letter that its members "are opposed to integration of the white and Negro races in the public schools."

And a resolution from the Board of Supervisors of Stafford County also expressed opposition to any mixing of the races in the public schools. It instructed the Governor to take action in appointing a legislative commission to propose ways to meet the problem.

More than 30 locality governing bodies, school boards and civic organizations throughout the State have sent similar communications to the Governor since the United States Supreme Court ruled May 17 that segregation in public education is unconstitutional.

Virginia Will Begin School Segregation Hearings Nov. 15

By the Associated Press

RICHMOND, Oct. 6.—Virginia's special commission studying the school segregation problem will hold its first public hearing in Richmond on November 15.

State Senator Garland Gray, chairman of the 32-member commission, announced the date and said the hearing would begin at 10:30 a.m. in the House of Delegates' chamber at the capitol.

The commission, composed entirely of members of the General Assembly, was created in late August by Gov. Stanley in an effort to find a way to maintain the State's traditional school segration policy. He has promised to use "every legal means" to prevent integration.

Mr. Gray said the initial hearing was being called principally to obtain the views of local government officials, members of the General Assembly and organizations of both races.

Mr. Gray said those desiring to be heard could get their names on a speech docket being prepared by John B. Boatwright, jr., secretary of the commission and director of the division of statutory research and drafting at the capitol. He requested those who wished to reserve time to notify Mr. Boatwright by November 8.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 13—Virginia took the first formal step today to find what Gov. Thomas B. Stanley called "a legal means to preserve segregated schools in Virginia."

A thirty-two-member Commission on Public Education, appointed by the Governor, held its organizational meeting and elected as chairman State Senator Garland Gray of Waverley, who has been mentioned as a possible Democratic candidate for Governor in 1957. He was authorized during the three-hour closed session to appoint an executive committee to plan public hearings on the state's school segregation problems.

At the outset Governor Stanley, in remarks released to the press, reiterated his position on segregated schools by declaring: "I shall use every legal means at my command to preserve segregated schools in Virginia."

The Governor said letters, telegrams and telephone calls had convinced him that "the overwhelming majority of the white people in Virginia wish to continue segregation of the races in the public schools" and "it would appear that numerous Negro citizens desire an integration of the races."

He continued: "Whatever program or legislation is proposed and adopted can succeed only if it is in accord with the will of the people. I firmly believe that both public sentiment and the best interests of both races demand segregation. I hope we have the cooperation of both races to maintain segregation and thereby minimize the harmful effect of the decision of the court."

The reference was to the Supreme Court's decision in May outlawing school segregation.

The Governor reiterated that he had appointed a legislative rather than a citizen's commission that might have represented both races because any program would have to be acted upon by the General Assembly.

Integration Proceeds With Only Few Trouble Spots, Marshall Says

Resistance to school integration, as in Wilford, Del., and White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., is the exception rather than the rule in communities which have taken steps to abide by the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling of May 17, Thurgood Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said this week.

Mr. Marshall, who headed the battery of NAACP lawyers who argued the public school segregation cases before the Supreme Court last December, cited successful integration in Baltimore, Washington, St. Louis and other border state cities.

"In West Virginia 12 counties have gone ahead with complete integration and 13 others have initiated programs of partial integration," he said.

"Schools in Dover, Wilmington, and other communities in Delaware have been integrated without incident. The flare-ups in White Sulphur Springs and Milford are spectacular only because they are the rare exceptions."

According to a report by the NAACP attorney from Dr. J. Kenneth Morland, a noted white southern sociologist who made an on-the-spot investigation, the trouble in the West Virginia city stemmed from resentment of the fathers of some of the white boys on the football squad against the presence of two Negro boys on the squad who apparently were headed for first team positions. Reportedly those fathers urged the youngsters to organize a strike against the admission of Negro students.

Threats of violence in White Sulphur Springs were calmly met by Negroes who were prepared to defend their children. Dr. Morland told the story of an elderly Negro woman who reportedly loaded two guns, parked her car near the school, and openly vowed to shoot anyone who laid a hand on her children, saying that she was old and did not have long to live anyhow.

Mr. Marshall deplored the amount of newspaper publicity given to the exceptional cases.

"The big story," he said, "is that integration is being widely accepted in practically all the communities where it has been tried. The transition has been so smooth in Washington that the program of integration has been greatly accelerated.

"In Carthage, Mo., Negroes have been welcomed to the formerly all-white high school and two have been elected to class office. The trouble spots have unfortunately been magnified out of all proportion to their importance."

Mr. Marshall and his staff of lawyers are preparing to present the NAACP recommendations for the Supreme Court decrees at the hearing set for December 6. In ruling segregation unconstitutional on May 17, the Court called for further argument before handing down a decree on when and how to implement its decision against public school segregation.

West Virginia going on with desegregation acts

BECKLEY, W. Va. — In this community atop a 2,500 - foot mountain one can see miles of the beauty of the state. While here I also had a chance to see a clearer picture of what the West Virginians are doing about school integration.

Beckley is in Raleigh County which is a neighbor of Greenbrier County where the school officials retreated on integration plans in the face of mob threats. Of course Greenbrier got the headlines in the newspapers.

FROM THE REPORTS on the radio and elsewhere I expected to find West Virginia in complete confusion.

For many reasons this state has enjoyed a reputation of being progressive and it was disappointing to hear about Nazi-like activity among the school children.

All over the country we have seen pictures of children in Greenbrier county carrying signs that read, "No colored students wanted in this school."

— o O o —

IT WAS a great relief to get a first - hand picture of the state as a whole. Twelve counties of West Virginia have completely eliminated segregation in their schools.

Out of the remaining 43, only Greenbrier has raised the flag of white supremacy. The other counties are either in the process of integrating their schools or making plans to do so. A few of the counties have no colored children.

According to T. G. Nutter, president of the West Virginia State Conference of NAACP branches, there are over 100 white students enrolled at West Virginia Institute which was formerly an all-colored state college.

— o O o —

IN SITUATIONS like that which occurred in Greenbrier county, hindsight is always better than foresight. Everyone can think of ways in which the trouble could have been avoided.

Since there are a great many experts who have and will give opinions on what Greenbrier should or should not have done, I will not join them by expressing my pet theories.

It should be reported, however, that the parents of the colored children in Greenbrier County do not like segregation. They did not retreat from the scene in wild disorder when hoodlums threatened to remove their children from the schools by force.

— o O o —

THE PARENTS in Greenbrier wanted to see the problem through in whatever way it could be solved. Some of them were willing to face the mobsters on terms that even they could understand.

Acting on the advice of their leaders, the colored parents of Greenbrier county are determined to settle the issue in the courts.

It is apparent that the overwhelming sentiment in the state is on their side and not on the side of trouble - makers who threatened violence as a means of keeping segregation.

— o O o —

THE GREAT LESSON to be learned from this state is that segregation is really dead, even in the South. The rear - guard action that took place in Greenbrier is not a reflection of what the majority of the people want.

It is increasingly evident that most of the people prefer a land of law and order, where decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court are obeyed, instead of a land of local hoodlum rule where the U.S. Constitution is interpreted by street corner bums.

After all, the parents who really love their children know that in an atmosphere of violence, flying brickbats would not hit children solely on the basis of race.

Injunction Issued In W. Va. Picketing

By the United Press.

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Sept. 29. —Pro-segregation mothers, who for two straight days refused to allow teachers to enter the Annabelle grade school at nearby Four States, obeyed a court order today and sent their children to classes with 13 Negroes.

Principal Lloyd Securro said about 95 percent of the normal enrollment of 171 attended.

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Sept. 28 (AP).—An injunction was issued today prohibiting parents, who are protesting integration of white and Negro pupils, from picketing the Annabelle School in the nearby coal mining community of Four States.

Circuit Judge H. Harper Meredith termed the parents action "a rebellion against the Government."

The order, sought by the Marion County Board of Education, came after teachers at Annabelle were met by parents on their way to school this morning. The teachers were faced by another group of women pickets when they arrived at the school and decided to go home.

The school closed yesterday when Principal Lloyd M. Securro and five teachers were stopped by parents protesting the admission of 13 Negroes with 157 white pupils in the elementary school.

Today's injunction named 53 defendants, all of them women. None of the defendants were present in court.

No Objections To Negro Students

State Press Sec. 9-24-54

White high school students who last week staged a demonstration against Negro students assigned to their school in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., have withdrawn their objections, it was revealed this week through information received at the NAACP national office.

Walter White, executive secretary of the association, said he had been informed of this fact by two West Virginia NAACP officials who, at the request of the national office, went to White Sulphur Springs to investigate the school situation there. They were T. G. Nutter, president of the West Virginia State Conference of NAACP branches and member of the association's national board of directors, and Willard Brown, president of the Charleston, West Virginia, branch.

Mr. White noted that he had been informed by Mr. Nutter and Mr. Brown that a news story in an edition of a Charleston, West Virgina daily newspaper also announced that the white high school students had ceased their objections to having Negro students attend their school.

Earlier last week the White Sulphur Springs school board reversed its decision to integrate local schools in line with the Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public education after white students and white parents demonstrated against the entrance of Negro pupils into the formerly all-white high school.

White Parents Force Return To Segregated School System

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 14.—Five days of intergation in Greenbrier County schools were ended today when school officers, confornted with angry parents and striking white students, ordered an immediate return of segregation.

The high school here was closed a half-day to allow 25 Negro students, under police protection, to secure their books and return to their own school.

Some 600 parents protesting integration had threatened at a mass meeting last night to remove bodily any Negroes who attempt to attend White Sulphur Springs High today.

In nearby Lewisburg, the county seat, the school board ordered an immediate return to separate schools for Negroes and whites. The segregation order came after an all-day meeting.

The demonstration yesterday against integration involved about 300 of the 440 students enrolled at the high school. They marched through the streets of this mountain resort town, just five miles from the Virginia line with placards reading, "No Negroes wanted in our school."

Another demonstration was staged at Rupert, about 3 miles northwest of here where some 100 students also milled through the streets, protesting 14 Negroes attending their school.

State Superintendent W. W. Trent recommended immediate integration but did not order it, leaving the decision with the individual county boards.

Greenbrier, Marion and Barbour Counties opened schools a week ago with Negroes attending classes with whites.

Schools are still integrated in the other two counties, both in northern West Virginia. The school board in Monongalia voted in July to end segregation immediately. There were no incidents there when school opened September 1.

W. Va. Student Strike

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 13 (AP).—About 275 of White Sulphur Springs High School's 430 students went on strike today in protest again integration of Negro students into the school. The boys and girls began parading through the streets of the town about 7:30 a. m.

Herald Tribune P. 1

The students were reportedly demanding that twenty-three Negro students at the school be returned to Benlng High School in Lewisburg, which they attended before schools were integrated under a state-wide order last week.

County School Supt. D. D. Harrah, not immediately available for comment, met with the Board of Education and with delegations of parents.

Mr. Harrah's office said about 200 persons were jammed into the board's meeting room.

School officials had reported earlier that the transition from segregated schools was expected to be "smooth and calm." But the county's first trouble came last week when the combined elementary and high school at Rupert was pickted.

State police were reported cruising around the city here today to preserev order.

Rapid pupil, teacher desegregation urged

BECKLEY, W. Va. — Public school desegregation "as soon as possible" and "not later than September 1955" was called for here by delegates to the 10th annual meeting of the West Virginia Conference of NAACP Branches.

A resolution on schools adopted by the assemblage further urged that teachers as well as pupils be included in integration action to comply with the Supreme Court decision which held segregated public schools unconstitutional.

Baltimore Afro 9-25-54

Commenting on the school strike in White Sulphur Springs, which resulted from school integration there, the delegates said in a statement:

Date 10-2-54

"WE DEPLORE the un-American conduct of the protesting group of parents and students against integration in Greenbrier County schools and commend colored parents for the manner in which they handled the difficult situation.

"Colored students were within their rights to register at 'white' high schools and it is unfortunate that the board of education rescinded its order."

Conference delegates heard J. W. Robinson, assistant supervisor of instruction in the state education department, report that full integration has taken place in 12 West Virginia counties and partial integration carried out in another 13 counties.

— o O o —

"THERE WERE no unusual incidents on opening day in the counties that have integrated or partially integrated," Mr. Robinson asserted.

Dr. William J. L. Wallace, president of West Virginia State College, delivered the keynote address at the two - day meeting, which closed Sept. 19 with an address by Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington bureau.

Charleston, chairman of the association's state legal redress committee and Oliver W. Hill, Richmond member of the national legal committee of the NAACP. Gloster B. Current, director of branches, served as moderator.

T. G. Nutter of East Charleston was re-elected president of the conference and the Rev. J. Mitchell and Mrs. Memphis T. Garrison, both of Huntington, were re - elected secretary and treasurer, respectively.

WHITE HOODLUMS TAKE OVER SCHOOL SYSTEM IN VIRGINIA TOWN

Two Football Players Beaten Up By Mob As Public Officials Surrender Authority

SCHOOL BOARD RE-ESTABLISHES SEGREGATION

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. — (ANP) — Desegregation ran out of gas here and came to a screeching, almost violent halt, as school authorities ordered Negro students to attend the same classes they have attended in the past after a one-week trial in white schools.

The move came after a series of incidents which indicated that a large number of the whites were going to school with the intention of making hell or high water.

Most of the trouble has been attributed to hoodlums, but others were said at fault too.

The lightening like series of events that led to the school's reversal of policy included:

1. The mobbing of two Negro football players, Ardolph "Jingles" Lockard and Langston Rose, both sophomores who transferred from formerly all-white White Sulphur Springs High and reported for football practice. The boys reportedly were mobbed by some "25 white boys" while walking home after a football game (estimated by others to have been 10) who beat and cursed them and told them not to start at the school.

2. The marching through the streets of the city by 300 white students and parents who bore placards reading "No Negroes wanted in our schools."

3. A meeting by 800 citizens on the high school football field to protest the integration of whites and Negroes in the high school. According to reports from men who attended, the group decided to "drag the Negro students out" if the school board didn't act.

The situation was further complicated after the school board gave in and ordered the Negro students back to their old schools, when the Negro parents, meeting in the Bethune colored grade school, took the position that their children would go to White Sulpure Springs high and White Sulphur Spring grade schools with white children or not attend school at all.

The 25 Negro students who, for a week, attended integrated classes, were ordered back to classrooms in the county-seat town of Lewisburg, 10 miles away. There is no high school for Negroes in White Sulphur Springs.

Parents of the students said they were opposed to sending them to Lewisburg because the high school was inadequate on three counts:

1. The curriculum is too limited, offering no commercial subjects or foreign languages required by colleges.

2. Bus transportation to the school is so slow it leaves students no time for work at home.

3. Shop classes teach only manual labor—how to break rocks and dig ditches.

One Negro student put it this way:

"We may have to stay out of school a couple of years, but it'll be worth it to win this fight."

Meanwhile, as a gigantic question mark hung suspended over the quiet town, so-called "solid citizens" blamed everything on hoodlums, particularly the attack on the two Negro football players.

The attackers were supposed to be "town hoodlums who had nothing to do with the school."

The hoodlums bragged about their "exploits" to high school students and thereby fanned resentment.

That they fanned it considerably was not an issue in doubt. Among the students carrying placards, were angry parents marching in the parade through downtown streets.

School officials issued the following statement.

"Recognizing the crowded conditions existing in several of the schools in Greenbrier county and further recognizing that the Bolling high school and other Negro schools as operated during the school term of 1953-54 are adequately staffed and supplied to accommodate the needs of Negro students during the school term of 1954-55, the board of education hereby directs all principles to transfer any tentative enrollments of Negro students to Bolling or to their closest Negro elementary school."

Racial relations in the town have been described as otherwise good.

A majority of the town's estimated 700 Negroes are employed at the Greenbrier, the fashionable resort hotel owned by the Chesapeake and Ohio railway.

Principal of White Sulphur Springs High, Robert J. Nickell, said the demonstrations could probably be attributed to some extent to the rashness of youth.

"Some students would strike against Christmas," he said, "if somebody suggested it."

The anti-Negro virus which hit white students at the high school, somehow failed to spread to the elementary school where two Negro pupils were enrolled along with 600 white children.

Integrate Hi School In W. Va.

MADISON, W. VA. (NNPA) — Integration of eighteen colored students into afternoon classes at Madison Scott High School "is working out fine," Principal E. C. Brown said Friday.

In classrooms, corridors and a special assembly, students Friday "talked out" criticism by a minority of partial integration at Scott, Brown explained.

Luther Jones, editor of the weekly Coal Valley News, published here, analyzed the United States Supreme Court decision of May 17 outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

The student council at Scott Thursday afternoon unanimously endorsed the decision of the Boone County Board of Education to send colored students to Scott for courses they cannot get at Carver, the local colored high school.

Shop students at Scott voted for bringing in a colored teacher when faced with curtailed classes because of overloading.

Inspired by the student strike in Greenbrier County last week against integration, eleven Scott students had complained about integration to C. C. Tamplin, Boone County superintendent of schools.

To meet their complaint assembly and classroom discussions were held "to talk out" the question of integration.

"This is a very fine way to handle it," said Principal Brown. "If they would talk it out every place, difficulties could be ironed out easily."

"They (Scott students) must democracy work," he added.

W. Va. students reverse stand

Withdraw objections to mixing schools

NEW YORK — White high school students, who earlier this week staged a demonstration against colored students assigned to their school in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. have withdrawn their objections.

Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, said he had been informed of this fact by two West Virginia NAACP officials who, at the request of the national office, went to White Sulphur Springs to investigate the school situation there.

They were T. G. Nutter, president of the West Virginia State Conference of NAACP Branches and members of the association's national board of directors, and Willard Brown, president of the Charleston, W. Va., branch.

EARLIER IN the week, after the White Sulphur Springs School Board reversed its decision to integrate local schools in line with the Supreme Court decision, colored students stayed home rather than attend segregated Bolling High School there.

The students, 23 in number, were directed to return to Bolling at the direction of the school board. Only two of the students attended classes at Bolling Wednesday, while 21 remained at home. They said then that their absence would continue indefinitely.

White Students End Strike

White Sulphur Springs Parents Force Return to Segregated School System

WHITE SUPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 14 (AP).—Five days of integration in Greenbrier County schools were ended today when school officials, confronted with angry parents and striking white students, ordered an immediate return of segregation.

The high school here was closed a half-day to allow 25 Negro students, under police protection, to secure their books and return to their own school.

Some 600 parents protesting integration had threatened at a mass meeting last night to remove bodily any Negroes who attempted to attend White Sulphur Springs high today.

In nearby Lewisburg, the county seat, the school board ordered an immediate return to separate schools for Negroes and whites. The segregation order came after an all-day meeting.

Yesterday's demonstration against integration involved about 300 of the 440 students enrolled at the high school. They marched through the streets of this mountian resort town, just five miles from the Virginia line, with placards reading, "No Negroes wanted in our school."

Another demonstration was staged at Rupert, about 33 miles northwest of here where some 100 students also milled through the streets, protesting 14 Negroes attending their school.

State Superintendent W. W. Trent recommended immediate integration but did not order it, leaving the decision with the individual county boards.

Greenbrier, Marion and Barbour Counties opened schools a week ago with Negroes attending classes with whites.

tion immediately. There were no incidents there when school opened September 1.

Md. Puts Segregation Time Up to Counties

BALTIMORE, Sept. 14 (AP).—The Maryland attorney general's office said today it will suggest that county officials themselves determine how soon the Supreme Court ruling on biracial education becomes effective.

W. Giles Parker, assistant attorney general, disclosed the state's official thinking on the subject in discussing a speech he plans to give Wednesday night before a group of parents protesting the integration of Negroes and whites in public education.

"We feel there should be a variation in local procedure," said Parker, "because of the variation of local circumstances."

Won't Force Mixed Schools, Says Folsom

Answers Charge By Abernethy

CULLMAN, Ala., Oct. 28 (U.P.)—Democratic Nominee James E. Folsom answered charges by his Republican opponent on segregation tonight saying, "I am not going to force Negroes to go to school with white people."

Folsom issued a statement from his Cullman home after repeated challenges by Republican Nominee Tom Abernethy. The GOP candidate had accused Folsom of failing to make a definite stand on the issue.

Without making any specific reference to Abernethy, Folsom said, "In every county in Alabama during the primary as well as in my campaigning in the past three months, I have made my position on segregation plain, simple and clear."

He added, "I will sponsor an adequate school program that will provide modern and up-to-date classroom facilities for all of Alabama's school children, both colored and white.

"I have told the good people of Alabama time and again that I am not going to force Negroes to go to school with white people."

Folsom said there are as many antiquated schools in Alabama for white students as there are for Negroes.

He disclosed that he and the Democratic nominee for state school superintendent, Dr. Austin Meadows of Huntsville, will attend the Southern Governor's Conference in Boca Raton, Fla., next month.

According to Folsom, one of the main purposes of their trip is "to develop plans for handling the school program in the light of recent U. S. Supreme Court decisions" outlawing segregation.

EDUCATION 1954

ATTORNEY GENERAL HERBERT BROWNELL, JR.

Forced School Integration Must Wait, Brownell Says

From Wire Dispatches

Attorney General Brownell said yesterday he does not see how the Justice Department could do anything about enforcing racial integration in the public schools until the Supreme Court has determined the course to be followed.

The Attorney General made his statement at a news conference when a reporter asked if the Department intends to enforce integration.

"I do not see how we could until the Supreme Court Acts," Brownell replied.

The Court is to hear arguments on the question of procedure in December.

However, Brownell reiterated that the Department's civil-rights section is watching developments in areas where difficulties have developed in efforts to combine white and Negro pupils in the same classrooms.

He said the civil-rights section is charged with looking into situations which might involve violation of civil-rights statutes.

"If violations are found, Brownell said, "we will take prompt action. No such violations have been uncovered to date."

Washington school officials reported that a four-day student strike against integration has been broken despite support for the demonstrators from Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.).

Students Reported Returning

Principal Eugene Griffith of Anacostia High School, focal point of the student strike, said "a flood of students has been returning to classes." Back-to-school movements were also reported at other senior and junior-high schools in the capital.

Robert Dean, 18-year-old chairman of the "striker's committee" at Anacostia, told reporters that Davis had advised him it would be best for the strikers to stay away from classes and continue their demonstration.

Statement Is Confirmed

Davis, reached at Atlanta, confirmed Dean's statement. He said he told the pupils that the schools would not be able to operate without them and "some sensible solution" might be found to the integration problem.

The State of Delaware yesterday called on the National Association for the Advancement of White People to produce its financial records in court next Monday.

A spokesman for the State attorney general's office said subpoenas had been issued for the records to be produced by Mrs. Mildred Sharp, secretary-treasurer of the Delaware chapter, N.A.A.W.P., and Joseph M. Deanes, former national vice-president and now state president of the N.A.A.W.P.

Meanwhile, in Philadelphia, District Attorney Richardson Dilworth said he will order the arrest of Bryant Bowles, head of the organization, if Bowles "incites to riot at any meeting in Philadelphia."

"I have not banned any meetings by anyone," Dilworth said. "I merely said that if Bowles says some of the things here that I understand he said in Milford, Del., then I will issue an order for his arrest on charges of inciting to riot."

some violence earlier this week. School Superintendent John H. Fischer said it will take time to overcome some of the bitterness, but "I don't see why the adjustment won't come about." Mr. Fischer reported attendance normal in all Baltimore schools today.

Mr. Brownell told reporters the Justice Department has no investigation under way into the activities of Bryant W. Bowles, founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People. Mr. Bowles has played an active part in demonstrations in Washington, Baltimore and Milford. Several organizations have requested an investigation into his activities.

Mr. Brownell said he will supply information on Mr. Bowles to any local law enforcement agency that requests it. Delaware has started proceedings to strip Mr. Bowles' organization of its charter and Philadelphia city attorney Richardson Dilworth has warned him to stay out of the city.

Meanwhile, fifteen pupils made a half-hearted gesture of picketing the Supreme Court again today. But they lost interest quickly and moved to a side street to watch a movie crew shooting scenes about the life of Peter Marshall, late Senate chaplain.

Advised by Davis

Robert Dean, eighteen-year-old chairman of the "strikers' committee" at Anacosita, told reporters that Rep. Davis had advised him it would be "best" for the strikers to stay away from classes and continue their demonstration.

Rep. Davis, reached at Atlanta, confirmed the advice. He said he told the pupils that the schools would not be able to operate without them and "some sensible solution" might be found to the integration problem.

Rep. Davis, a member of the House District of Columbia Committee, said in Atlanta that the Supreme Court's ruling last spring outlawing racial segregation in public schools was "an outrageous attempt to force upon an unwilling people the personal and sociological views" of the nine justices.

He said the Washington pupils and their parents have "a perfect right" to picket the schools, the White House or Supreme Court. He said the pupils "certainly have a right to stay away if they see fit."

Brownell Ready for Action If Bias Strikes Break Law

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7 (AP).—Attorney General Herbert Brownell jr. today threatened "prompt action" against anyone who violates Federal law in student-parent strikes against integration of Negro and white school children.

Mr. Brownell made the statement as Washington school officials reported that a four-day student strike against integration is "busted" despite support for the demonstrators from Rep. James C. Davis, D., Ga.

Principal Eugene Griffith of Anacostia High School, focal point of the student strike, said "A flood of students has been returning to classes." Back-to-school movements also were reported at other senior and junior high schools in the capital.

Watching Developments

Mr. Brownell told a news conference that Federal agents so far have found no evidence of legal violations in anti-segregation demonstrations in Washington, Baltimore and Milford, Del. But he said the agents are "watching developments" closely.

Baltimore school officials said the situation there was well in hand after demonstrations and

Delaware Governor Wants Peaceful Race Integration

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 24 (AP)—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs today issued a call for citizens' cooperation in reopening Milford High School Monday to both Negro and white children, warning that "law and order will be preserved."

The governor spoke out in a taut situation in this southeastern Delaware community over the first admittance of Negro pupils to the town's only high school.

"I must insist that no disorders, threats or violence take place," Boggs said in a statement issued at the state capital in nearby Dover. "I call upon every citizen, regardless of his personal views, to see that law and order and calmness prevail."

School Board Acted

Boggs issued his statement following a decision by the state Board of Education to operate Milford schools, starting Monday, without racial segration. The state board acted after the Milford school directors resigned en masse last night. Both state and local boards favored compliance with the U.S. Supreme Court ruling forbidding racial segregation in public schools.

"I must say frankly that law and order will be preserved under the law and the American way," Boggs said. "I know that the citizens of Milford and Delaware will have it no other way."

Guardsmen Alerted

As the governor made his appeal for cooperation there were reports that the Delaware National Guard in Milford might be alerted to stand by in case of trouble.

There also were reports that opponents of integration were planning a mass meeting to consider their next step.

An attempt by the local board to open the former all-white high school, in this town of 5,700 population, to both Negroes and white pupils was halted earlier this week after threats of violence were made.

Gov. Boggs asked all organizations in the school district and other districts sending pupils to the Milford school to call special meetings "so that I or other persons available may meet and discuss calmly and fully the situation."

"This is important in upholding law and order and the dignity of the state and its citizens," Gov. Boggs said.

Two Schools Opened

Milford's two schools — an all-Negro elementary school and the formerly all-white combination elementary and high school — opened Sept. 7 with 11 Negro pupils and 686 white pupils for the high school classes. A protest meeting which no one acknowledges having called, resulted in closing of both schools Monday. The local school board canceled a plan to reopen Tuesday after receiving threats there would be violence.

Prior to this semester Negro pupils desiring to attend high school paid the bus fare to all-Negro schools in nearby Georgetown and Dover. White pupils were transported free to the Milford school.

Negroes To Report

A spokesman for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colord People said, today the Negro high school pupils will report for class Monday.

Some white residents said they plan to keep their children at home Monday if the Negro children show up at school.

Atty. Howard E. Lynch, speaking for the milford school board, told the Delaware Board of Education last night the local school officials were resigning because, "We feel we are too close to the situation to acept the responsibility of opening the schools Monday morning with Negro students."

In School Integration

Governor Acts To Halt Threats; Others 'Hedge'

WILMINGTON, Del.—Acting in a manner that should be an example for other state officials throughout the country, Gov. J. Caleb Boggs was hailed this week for his firm and straight-forward manner in handling the taut Milford High School situation . . . latest sore spot in the nation-wide reaction to the implementation of the school integration ruling.

Governor Boggs in issuing a call for citizens' cooperation in reopening the school to both Negro and white children, warned the town of Milford, which is not too far from the state capital of Dover in the southern section of the state, that "law and order will be preserved."

THE SCHOOLS were closed all last week by the Milford School Board when threats of violence were received because of the admission of eleven Negro students to the all-white high school.

The State Board of Education took over the operation of the Milford schools when the Milford school directors resigned en masse Friday night . . . both state and local boards favored compliance with the United States Supreme Court ruling on ending segregation in public schools, but differed on procedure.

It was indicated that the Milford National Guard would be alerted to stand by in case of trouble.

IN OTHER areas officials ran hot and cold on the matter of integration.

District of Columbia Schools are most successful in the implementation of the program of integration. Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools in the District, said that the initial integration of Negro and white teachers and students has been amazingly successful. President Eisenhower has commended the District School Board on the program, which is said to be the pattern that could be followed in other sections of the country.

GOVERNOR William C. Marland of West Virginia said last week that West Virginia will comply with the Supreme Court ruling and called for "cooperatively planned action, carefully carried out, with restraint on both sides."

Marland called the strikes and mass protests against racial integration in the state's school system as "particularly disturbing" . . . he referred to situations in Greenbrier and Boone counties where parents protested the admission of Negro students to all-white schools last week.

Marland said the situation would be met with "sober reflection, mutual understanding and careful action.

GOVERNOR James Byrnes of South Carolina in a speech at Dillon, S. C., pointed to the situations in West Virginia, Delaware and Ohio as indicative of the fact that serious disturbances will occur when racial integration is attempted in the schools of his state.

"Thoughful people should realize that if there is such feeling in the communities of the border states, and in a Northern state where the percentage of Negro population is relatively small, far more serious situations will arise in this state when an effort is made to mix races."

THE SITUATION in Ohio referred to by Governor Byrnes, a suit was filed in Federal Court at Cincinnati by officials of the state NAACP to enjoin the Hillsboro, Ohio, School Board from carrying out segregation policies.

Attempts to enroll Negro children in the white schools of the small community in southern Ohio were met with protests, and the school board attempted to meet the problem by rezoning the city so that all Negro children would be in one school zone.

The action taken on behalf of the Negro children has been termed the first in Northern courts since the U. S. Supreme Court handed down its decision banning segregation.

Alabama followed other deep Southern states when it was proposed that all constitutional requirements for public school system should be abolished thus clearing the way for the next Legislature to established a system of state supported private schools.

IN MOBILE, ALA., Negro students are being registered in Spring Hill Jesuit College, a Catholic institution, for the first time, it was announced this week. The Very Rev. Andrew C. Smith, S. J., president, said that he did not know how many Negroes were admitted, "because we have never asked them if they were white or Negro. We are not making an issue of it."

* * *

THE BOARD of Institutions of Higher Learning of Mississippi, acting under a revised policy designed to raise the barrier against Negro applicants for admission into state colleges, last week denied entrance of Medgar Evans, Mound Bayou Insurance man, into the University of Mississippi law school.

* * *

NAACP officials throughout Louisiana this week called on all eligible Negro citizens to register before Oct. 2, in order to be qualified to vote against Constitutional Amendment 16 on Nov. 2. The proposed amendment, which places the state's segregated public school system under police power, will be submitted to voters that date.

Attorney General Rollins files brief with court

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) —The Attorney General of Maryland Monday urged the U.S. Supreme Court to so frame its final decree in the school segregation cases as to leave the determination of how and when its decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools at the lowest possible level administratively, if possible, and judicially if necessary.

In a brief filed as a friend of the court, Attorney General Edward D. E. Rollins of Maryland Baltimore, Md. argued that the court should not attempt to engage in the administration of any public school system. As soon as it decrees "an effective, gradual adjustment, the timetable and the methods to be used become a matter of school administration."

2. The courts should intervene only when it is shown that school administrators on the local level have failed to exercise good faith and reasonable diligence.

— o O o —

1. THAT THE lower courts, upon remand of the cases, be guided by the following principles:

a. The courts should enforce the constitutional right of any child to attend the school of his choice within reasonable limits, without impairment because of color.

b. The courts should recognize that they are not school boards or administrative bodies at any level. Their function should be judicial and not administrative.

c. The courts should consider the possible effects of enforcing the rights of one citizen upon the rights of other citizens.

d. The courts should consider the good faith and intentions of those with a desire to accept the decree and charged with the difficult job of carrying it out at a level dealing with human beings and not abstract principles, however lofty, and administrators must not be hampered by unnecessary restrictions.

e. The courts should take into account the motives of those who, in the future, may bring actions to enforce the rights established by the decision.

— o O o —

MR. ROLLINS urged the court to frame its decree so as to effect "an effective, gradual" changeover from segregated to unsegregated schools.

He also urged that the cases be sent back to the trial courts for them to issue detailed decrees in accordance with the general principles stated in the decision of May 17, and with specific instructions as to methods or time of compliance.

The timetable and the methods, he said, should be determined by the lower courts in the light of local conditions.

The Maryland Attorney General states that the opinions expressed in the brief are his own and do not preclude the legislature of people of Maryland from taking any action dealing with the segregation problem which may seem desirable to them.

His argument, he says, is based on the situation as it exists in Maryland. The State Constitution, he states, has provided for the education of both white and colored children since 1867, and Maryland has made considerable progress in the education of colored people.

— o O o —

WITH A population of 2,350,000 Maryland has over 2,900 colored teachers for a colored population of 388,000, while New Jersey with a population of 4,835,000 has only 645 colored teachers for a colored population of 324,000. Connecticut with a population of over 2,000,000 has fewer than 100 colored teachers, he says.

Mr. Rollins pointed out that the public school system in Baltimore began to desegregate at the beginning of the fall term.

In the counties outside of Baltimore, he asserts, the situation is extremely varied. The percentage of colored population ranges from zero in Garrett County to almost 50 percent in Calvert County, he says.

The public mores, ways of life and established patterns of thinking, he adds, vary probably to a greater degree than the population figures.

— o O o —

MARYLAND SCHOOL authorities, he asserts, favor peaceful implementation of the court's decree, whatever form it may take.

If left alone to devise in good faith a timetable for desegregation of every public school in Maryland, Mr. Rollins states, local authorities will best be able to solve the problem with the fewest possible ill effects.

"Unfortunately," he says, "all Maryland thinking is not along these lines." Undoubtedly, at the next session of the Maryland Legislature, he believes, there will be a "deluge" of bills, proposals, petitions and proposition, urging everything from abolition of the school system in its entirety "to the election of school teachers by popular vote."

— o O o —

TWO OF the more serious attempts to evade the decision are the so-called "West River Proclamation," issued by a group of parents in a southern Maryland county, and the "Maryland Petition Committee," which has thousands of signatures, Mr. Rollins states.

"These two documents," he asserts, "Illustrate the point of view of what might be called the 'upper bracket' of anti-integration."

Other suggestions, he adds, go all the way down the line to "outright demand for blood and reactivation of the Ku Klux Klan."

CASE PRAISES FOE OF SEGREGATION

Congratulates Gov. Boggs of Delaware for the Arrest of White Supremacy Leader

By GEORGE CABLE WRIGHT
Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, Oct. 12—Clifford P. Case tonight hailed the arrest in Delaware of Bryant W. Bowles, "racial extremist," and telegraphed his congratulations to Gov. J. Caleb Boggs for his handling of the segregation problem in that state.

The Republican candidate for United States Senator from New Jersey deplored the attempt to block desegregation within the public schools of Delaware.

"The watchword of the Eisenhower Administration in matters of civil rights," he wired to Governor Boggs, "is accomplishment, not fruitless gestures designed to make votes."

The American people, said Mr. Case, will never descend "to the level of the brute." The laws of this nation must be vigorously observed and enforced. It matters not which extreme "in our political spectrum applies the smear brush to subvert those institutions which we have so long held dear."

The laws of Delaware, he told the Governor, "as well as the deep meaning of the Supreme Court decision on segregation have been resoundingly supported by your personal action in ordering the arrest of a bigoted troublemaker."

Mr. Bowles, founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, has made several public appearances in Delaware in recent weeks. He has appealed to white residents of Milford and other towns to defy legal attempts to institute desegregation in the schools.

Mr. Case and Mr. Boggs were formerly Republican colleagues in the House of Representatives.

Earlier in the day, Representative Peter Frelinghuysen, Republican, who is seeking re-election in New Jersey's Fifth District, assailed Democratic contentions that everyone knows where Representative Charles R. Howell, Mr. Case's Democratic opponent, stands on campaign issues.

He accused Mr. Howell of always standing "about two feet behind Gov. Robert B. Meyner, peering desperately over his shoulder" and of seeking "to parrot his former boss, President Truman."

From 7:30 to 7:45 P. M. Mr. and Mrs. Case and their 10-year-old son, Clifford P. Case Jr., appeared on WATV (Channel 13) to open and discuss campaign mail received by the candidate.

Mrs. Case read excerpts from some of the letters. In answer to these, Mr. Case declared that he had never been for socialized medicine and never would be. He advocated the extension of Social Security to doctors and lawyers if they requested. In addition, Mr. Case admitted that he had voted for the adoption of the Taft-Hartley Act but that it had not reduced the support extended to him by labor.

Later Mr. Case discussed campaign issues with Mr. Howell at a meeting in Lawrence Township sponsored by the League of Women Voters and at a candidates' forum arranged by local service clubs in Bound Brook

School Administrators Duck Stand on Plan

By JOHN PENNINGTON

Georgia's school administrators let the fur fly Saturday in a fiery discussion of Gov. Talmadge's so-called private school amendment, but ended a business session without coming out for or against it.

The Georgia Association of School Administrators tabled, by a vote of 62-54, a proposed resolution opposing the amendment.

And the officials likewise beat down, 59-44, a substitute resolution that they postpone action and meanwhile cooperate with the governor and General Assembly.

A LUKEWARM resolution hinting at opposition to the proposed constitutional amendment was adopted.

It put the association—composed of school principals and superintendents—on record as favoring "continued segregation of the races in the public schools of Georgia and the preservation of the public school system."

Even that resolution drew fire from proponents of the proposed constitutional amendment—which would authorize the Legislature to appropriate funds to private individuals for educational purposes to maintain segregation—until it was announced that a "more potent" resolution was upcoming.

THE "POTENT" resolution — the one that was tabled—said that, since a committee has been appointed to study means of preserving segregation, and that "there is now proposed . . . a constitutional amendment which could destroy our public school system.

"Therefore, be it resolved that this association go on record as opposing this constitutional amendment, to be voted on in the general election Nov. 2, and urge the members of the General Assembly of Georgia to adequately finance and preserve the public school system of this state."

They went around and around on that one, and when the officials go through talking and voting, it was tabled and there was no vote for or against the proposed amendment.

MEANTIME, from another corner some opposition to the school amendment popped up.

Roy Harris of Augusta declared in his personal newspaper, the Augusta Courier, that "the private school system is not the answer to our dilemma."

Mr. Harris said "the private school plans which have been devised by Gov. Talmadge of Georgia and Gov. White of Mississippi" will not work.

The remedy, he said, is in the hands of the people of Georgia. "The people of Georgia must keep their law as it is and shut down all schools in any county where they are mixed," he said.

"When the schools are shut down for 24 hours the white people of the community will rise up in a towering rage which will force the Negroes and the whites to maintain segregation."

ANOTHER TOPIC got almost as much action at the school administrators meeting as did the "private school" amendment.

A resolution smiling on the Georgia Accrediting Commission's requirement that high schools maintain an average daily attendance of 100 drew a quick fight.

That got right to the heart of a subject that small high school officials are almost ready to fight about—school consolidation.

Baker County School Supt. Bill Geer got up in a hurry and said if the requirements did not make provisions for counties with less than 100 white high school students, the resolution should be tabled.

He said his county, and others in the state affected, could not meet the required attendance for accreditation, but topped other requirements.

Private School Plan OK'd as Last Resort

Pending Education Commission Report Urges Sweeping Segregation Moves

By CHARLES POU

Sweeping legislation aimed at keeping Georgia's school segregation, including "private school" measures as last resort, is proposed in a pending report by the Georgia Education Commission.

The report, which is to be considered for adoption by the 21-member commission Tuesday, also:

1. URGES ratification of Gov. Talmadge's so-called "private school" amendment by citizens.

2. INSTRUCTS the commission's counsel and Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook to prepare continuing-segregation bills, including private school measures, immediately upon ratification of the amendment.

School administrators duck stand on plan. Page 10A.

3. POINTS UP the possibility that federal courts may "force" the anti-segregation ruling on "an entire state in one lawsuit."

4. URGES continuing provisions of appropriation bills calling for shutting off state money where schools are mixed.

5. SAYS "existing separate public school systems should be continued in every county and local independent system in this state as long as it is possible to do so."

The report, which was signed by commission secretary Durwood Pye, makes no mention of "private schools." But in one section it says the General Assembly should pass laws making it possible to have "properly supervised, segregated schools," omitting the word "public."

It says this should be done in preparation for "if and when the existing school in any county or any independent school district are closed by federal court decree."

AND, URGING the adoption of the amendment, it says:

"When this amendment has been placed in the Georgia constitution, the General Assembly will have undoubted authority to pass laws as needed so that the people can educate their children in the schools of their choice.

"The federal courts will have no power over these schools and will be unable to interfere with them and the people will be able to maintain separate education for white and colored children as long as they desire to do so."

The report says laws protecting the teachers' retirement funds, equalization "and other salutary principles embodied in the Minimum Foundation Program" should be passed "in enacting laws to insure the continuation of segregated schools."

Along this line, it says "existing laws shall be retained and strengthened" on these school matters:

1. Assignment of pupils in public schools.
2. Laying out of public school district lines.
3. Authority of local school trustees.
4. The power of local school boards to contract for the education of children in adjoining school districts in which the public schools have been closed.

Gov. Talmadge is chairman of the 21-member commission. Its members include a number of other state officials and school leaders, some of whom have expressed opposition to the pending amendment.

forced to consolidate with out-of-county schools to meet accreditation standards, he maintained.

The resolution was tabled.

Talk on the school amendment began bright and early Saturday. Practically all of the morning business session—with the exception of an address by Mrs. Bernice McCullar of the State Department of Education—was devoted to a discussion of it.

IN ADDITION to the hints about the private school plan, the report touches on some of the other suggestions that have been made for continuing segregation.

Here's the Picture in Schools Since Segregation Ruling

Many Areas Have Begun Mixing Races

By the Associated Press

The U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments Dec. 6 on means of putting into effect its ruling of last May 17 outlawing public school segregation.

Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Maryland, Kansas and Oklahoma will appeal for sufficient time and some degree of local option in working out the problem of complying with the ruling.

In response to the anti-segregation decision, integration already is underway peacefully in many of the 20 areas where segregation was required.

But it has proved painful in a few instances, and segregation flared as an issue in Ohio where racial separation long has been illegal.

Taking note of disturbances which accompanied integration in Delaware and West Virginia, and the Ohio incident, South Carolina's Gov. James F. Byrnes said that such events in areas with small Negro populations are strong arguments in favor of the continuance of segregated schools.

IF THERE is such feeling in the border and northern states with their slight Negro populations, he said, far more serious situations will arise "in such counties as Clarendon in this state" where Negroes outnumber whites about 10 to 1.

Meanwhile, pressure for immediate steps to end segregation mounted as new demands for admission to previously all white schools came from Negroes in Alabama and Oklahoma.

And the incidents to which Gov. Byrnes referred brought quick and determined action by authorities.

L. Caleb Boggs | James Byrnes | Frank Lausche | Allen Shivers

Gov. J. Caleb Boggs of Delaware, personally took a hand.

BOGGS DEMANDED that the Milford High School, center of mounting tension after a racial flareup, be reopened Monday "without incident," to both white and Negro students. "I must say frankly," he declared, "that law and order will be preserved under the law and the American way."

Delaware has ordered integration of its schools, but the State School Board said Milford did not comply with a directive requiring state board approval of integration plans.

Students in several West Virginia high schools struck over admission of Negroes. West Virginia makes integration optional with local boards. Several counties have integrated with no trouble. Others are awaiting final Supreme Court action.

IN OHIO, Gov. Frank Lausche said there are some instances of segregation and added "every child is entitled to be treated on an equal basis in our schools," he commented after a suit was filed accusing Hillsboro of segregating Negro children by a new zoning order.

Most of the segregation states will not participate in the Dec. 6 arguments before the Supreme Court, a survey showed Saturday. But two of them, Arizona and New Mexico, which had partial segregation, have eliminated even that.

Kentucky will not appear, but officials have said the state would make every effort to comply with the court ruling when it is final.

Missouri is eliminating its few areas of segregation without incident and also will not appear. Kansas likewise is integrating, but will ask the court to recognize its program and afford time for completion.

OKLAHOMA is preparing to end segregation, but needs a constitutional amendment to change its complex tax structure and will ask the court to recognize its financial difficulties. Meanwhile, three El Reno Negroes have filed suit seeking admission to their hometown state junior college.

The suits on which the Supreme Court based its decision came from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

South Carolina will not participate in the arguments, Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison holding that the suit was against Clarendon County School District and that the state is not a party by name.

Virginia will appear, but Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. would not disclose the nature of his remarks. He has said however that he believes no school child in Virginia will be compelled to attend school with another race. And Gov. Thomas B. Stanley has frequently declared he would use every legal means to preserve segregation.

SOMEWHAT IN the same situation is Texas. Atty. Gen. John Ben Shepperd will either file a brief or appear personally. But Gov. Allen Shivers, who recently won renomination, has pledged that no white and Negro children will attend school together so long as he is governor.

Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia also will boycott the hearing on the ground that to participate might morally bind the state to comply with the final decree.

North Carolina Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan said he was notified by Supreme Court Clerk Harold B. Willey that such was not the case. He said Willey wrote that "I can assure you that neither the filing of a brief by you nor your participation in oral arguments will have the effect of making North Carolina a party to this litigation. Your role and that of the other states appearing will simply be that of an amicus curiae (friend of the court)."

ONE OF THE states which will ask for time, North Carolina has taken no steps to integrate public schools, but Catholic schools in Raleigh and Charlotte are admitting both races. But Gov. William B. Umstead has received a petition from Pender County, with a 51 per cent Negro school population, urging continuance of segregation.

Another state asking time is Arkansas, where segregation has been ended at least in two public schools. Atty. Gen. P. J. Gentry will ask the court to go slow in forcing integration at the request of groups in east Arkansas which has a large Negro population.

Florida has attempted no integration and presently has no plans to try to circumvent the court decision. But Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin will suggest that district federal courts be authorized to say whether local systems are complying with the antisegregation ruling in good faith, and will submit findings of a committee which studied Florida reaction to the decision.

TENNESSEE originally planned to participate in the arguments, suggesting integration be undertaken gradually beginning with the first grade. But Gov. Frank Clement has since decided the best course is to remain out of the case. Officials say reasoning behind the decision is that participation might antagonize some legislators and jeopardize school appropriations in the next legislature.

No integration has been attempted in Tennessee, but a small Catholic Negro school in Nashville was consolidated with a white school without incident. In the only official state action thus far, the Tennessee Education Board denied five Negroes admission to Memphis State College on the ground that state law still requires segregation.

GEORGIA and Mississippi will vote on constitutional amendments permitting the abolishing of public schools if necessary to preserve segregation and setting up a system of private schools. Georgia will vote Nov. 2 on the proposed amendment to permit grants to individual citizens. A heated fight over it is in prospect.

The Mississippi Legislature recently authorized a Dec. 21 vote on a similar proposal.

Something of that sort has been recommended by an Alabama legislative committee. But incoming Gov. James E. Folsom is reported by friends to be unfavorable to the so-called private school plan.

THEY SAY HE is convinced segregation can be preserved on a voluntary basis by cooperation rather than coercion. He is reported reluctant to take any action which would invite immediate extension of the Supreme Court ruling directly to Alabama.

But as Folsom "waits and hopes," Negroes in Fairfield, a Birmingham suburb, petitioned school authorities for immediate steps to end segregation. Similar petitions have been filed by Negroes in three other Alabama communities.

Negroes also have petitioned for integration in several school districts in Louisiana, where Gov. Robert Kennon sees "no compelling" reason for filing briefs with the Supreme Court. Sen. William Rainach of Summerfield, chairman of a legislative segregation committee, said Louisiana will boycott the court hearing because appearance would mean "acquiescence to the court's decision."

Hearing on segregation in Ohio schools slated

CINCINNATI (NNPA) — A hearing has been set for Wednesday on the petition of the NAACP for an injunction forbidding the Hillsboro (Ohio) School Board from segregating colored and white children in elementary schools there.

The NAACP asked for an immediate restraining order last Wednesday, but Federal District Judge John H. Druffel turned down the plea because the defendants had not been notified the suit would be filed. He gave them a week to answer the petition.

The suit is the first test brought in the Federal District Court for Northern Ohio involving segregation since the U.S. Supreme Court on May 17 ruled that segregation in public education is unconstitutional.

—o0o—

THE PETITION asks that the Hillsboro board be enjoined "from enforcing a policy of segregation, and from requiring the plaintiffs and others similarly situated" to withdraw from Webster and Washington elementary schools "solely because of race or color."

The NAACP is supporting colored parents and elementary school children of Hillsboro in an effort to make the case a test suit for segregation in northern communities.

When colored children in elementary grades tried to enroll at two former all-white schools when school started two weeks ago, the officials denied segregation, but said they were faced with having too many pupils and too little room.

THE CITY was then rezoned for school purposes and some colored children were admitted to Webster and Washington, formerly all-white schools. The others were told to go back to Lincoln School, an all-colored school.

Integration case decision to await high court ruling

CINCINNATI, Sept. 29—(AP)—U. S. District Judge H. Druffel declined to act today in a school segregation case until the U. S. Supreme Court decides upon the manner in which its anti-segregation decision can be put into effect.

Judge Druffel continued a case involving Hillsboro, Ohio, elementray schools until two weeks after the final entry is made by the U. S. Supreme Court on how school officials shall put into effect the anti-segregation ban.

He made his decision after a hearing on a petition, sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, for an injunction to prevent the Hillsboro School Board from enforcing a school zoning resolution which would send most Negro children in that town of 5100 population to the all-Negro Lincoln School.

Judge Druffel told NAACP attorneys the Supreme Court is "setting the pace" for the policy to be followed by lesser courts in the matter of non-segregation.

It is the first case of its kind in the North since the U. S. Supreme Court ruled school segregation unconstitutional.

The National Assn. For the Advancement of Colored People, force behind the petition, says it wants to make this a test case for Northern schools.

Ever since the Supreme Court ordered integration of white and Negro classes, anti-segregation forces have asked this question: "How can they make us do it"?

Druffel's decision involving the livestock producing city of 5100 in the Ohio lowlands could provide a hint to the answer.

FIRST, HOWEVER, the NAACP would have to prove segregation actually exists in Hillsboro. The school board there claims it doesn't.

These are some of the facts Druffel will have to consider:

Nearly four-fifths of the 5000-plus population is white; 67 of the 900 grade school children are Negro.

Both white and colored attend Hillsboro High School. At the beginning of this term Negro youngsters enrolled at the previously all-white Webster and Washington Elementary Schools as well as the previously all-Negro Lincoln School.

The city quickly rezoned the school districts, saying the Webster and Washington schools were becoming overcrowded.

SCHOOL OFFICIALS say the rezoning was along residential lines. Negro leaders say it was along racial lines.

Its effect was to permit about 11 Negro children to attend Webster and Washington schools and to channel the rest to Lincoln School.

School Supt. Paul Upp says the board planned, even before the Supreme Court ruling, to integrate all the children when two new buildings are completed in a year or so.

THE INJUNCTION suit, filed by Attys. Russell L. Carter and James McGee of Dayton, Ohio, and Thurgood Marshall of New York, special counsel to the National NAACP office, claim the zoning action was intended as segregation and was contrary to the Supreme Court order.

The lawyers, nominally representing five Negro mothers, last week asked Judge Druffel for an order to stop the "segregation" mediately. Druffel refused on a technical ground and set the hearing on temporary and permanent injunctions for today.

White warns some may try old ruse

CLEVELAND (ANP)—Lashing out at "gerrymandering" of school districts designed to maintain segregation, Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, said that this is the next big problem in the fight for racial equality.

Speaking at a membership and fund-raising meeting, Mr. White said that "gerrymandering" accomplishes, with the help of the ghetto pattern in which colored persons are forced to live, an effective kind of segregated schools."

Court Turns Down Petition Against Segregation in Ohio

CINCINNATI, Ohio—(ANP)—A petition for a restraining order against the Hillsboro, Ohio, school board to stop what was called segregation in the public schools was denied in United States District Court here.

Representatives of several Negro mothers immediately filed petitions for temporary and permanent injunctions against the board after Judge John H. Druffol denied the restraining petition.

The board of education at Hillsboro, which has a total population of some 5,100, has denied segregation, pointing out that this year it opened two former all-white elementary schools to "a limited number of Negro school children."

OKLAHOMA

OKLAHOMA FACING SEGREGATION VOTE

Governor-Elect Gary Making Plans for Special Election to Amend Constitution

Special to The New York Times.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Nov. 13—Revision of State laws to conform with the Supreme Court ruling ending segregation in public schools will be one of the major problems facing Oklahoma's next Legislature when it convenes in January, Governor-elect Raymond Gary believes.

Mr. Gary, the Democratic nominee, defeated his Republican opponent, Reuben Sparks, by more than 106,000 votes in the general election and will be sworn in Jan. 10.

He was elected by the biggest majority of any Governor since 1938. It will give him the prestige of strong public backing, and probably will help in getting his program adopted.

Oklahoma's Constitution and statutes must be revised when segregation ends, as separate Negro schools now are financed mainly by a separate ad valorem tax levy, which apparently will be invalid.

Mr. Gary said this week he would ask the Legislature to submit constitutional amendments dealing with school finances at a special election during the session.

Discusses Special Election

"If we get a mandate from the United States Supreme Court ending segregation in schools, we will be forced to hold a special election to recapture the 4 mills in tax revenue lost for separate schools," he said.

"The Legislature could submit the amendments early in the session and continue to work on other legislation in the interim before the election is held."

If the constitutional amendments are adopted, the Legislature will be called upon to vitalize them. The Legislative Council Education Committee has recommended several proposed constitutional amendments, including one for a 5-mill county levy to replace the existing levies for separate schools.

Mr. Gary's recommendations for school financing will include replacement of any tax millage lost but will not include any increase in taxes, in accordance with campaign promises.

The Governor-elect said he would submit a "belt-tightening" budget to the next Legislature, in a move to block any attempt to increase taxes. Tax collections this fiscal year have dropped slightly below the same period last year, and the next Legislature will have a smaller surplus than previous Legislatures have had to spend.

Since his election, Mr. Gary has called on State department heads to peg the number of employes to prevent payroll increases before the advent of his administration. He said he would be his own patronage dispenser, declaring: "The department heads and the Governor's office will handle the patronage."

Mr. Gary believes he will be able to have a $220,000,000 highway program for the four years of his administration. He estimated that increased revenues from road users' taxes now in effect, additional Federal aid and improved business conditions would make the $220,000,000 available.

Mr. Gary warned that the State would face a tight budget for the next two years, but said he believed increase in population and per capita income would help increase revenue. He is counting on a substantial increase in revenues to common schools from local levels because of property valuation increases.

He estimated the Legislature would have $170,000,000 to appropriate from the General Fund for the next biennium, $3,000,000 more than was appropriated by the last Legislature.

Mr. Gary plans to ask the Legislature to submit a constitutional amendment preventing future diversion of road-user funds now going for highway construction and maintenance.

Mr. Gary served fourteen years in the State Senate, and was president pro tempore when he filed for Governor. He was chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee for three sessions.

The Governor-elect, while lacking in color, was known as a serious student of government during his Senate terms. In addition to playing an important part in writing the state's financial program, he had an important role in writing school legislation.

He was born Jan. 21, 1908, on a farm in Marshall County in the same community in which he now lives on a 420-acre farm. He is a former school teacher and county superintendent. He operates a prosperous company distributing wholesale and retail petroleum products in southeastern Oklahoma and northern Texas.

Delay Urged on Court

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13 (AP)—Oklahoma urged the Supreme Court today to consider its financial problems in setting the date for the end of racial segregation in schools.

Mac Q. Williamson, State Attorney General, said in a brief filed with the court that it would take time to make the change. He suggested the court make allowance for this in determining how and when its decision of last May outlawing public school segregation should be implemented.

The court has called for new arguments on this phase of its ruling. The deadline for briefs is next Monday.

"The problem of the State of Oklahoma in adjusting or changing the financial structure for maintaining public schools is a serious one, grounded in constitutional and statutory provisions of long standing—the uprooting of which in an effort to conform will take time to solve," Mr. Williamson declared.

He said the court "undoubtedly can and will consider the ability of states to endeavor to conform to the doctrine of only one system in public education." Thus, he argued, the court "should consider the financial problems of a state such as ours." Noting that laws of his state required segregation, the Attorney General said:

"And principally because of both constitutional and legislative restrictions as to the financing of separate educational facilities for white and Negro children, it is probably more concerned than some, if not all, of the other states having segregation * * * in whether this court directs that existing segregated systems be stopped immediately or adjusted gradually to a procedure not based on color distinction."

Mr. Williamson said Oklahoma's district schools, usually for white children, were financed by a school district tax levy. Separate schools, usually for Negro pupils, are financed by a county-wide levy. The taxes are administered by different officials.

Folsom Does Not Sign—

Dixie Governors Enter School Segregation Pact

Post-Herald Birmingham

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 15 (U.P.)—Eight of the governors who attended the Southern Governors Conference returned to their state capitals today pledged to "exercise every proper prerogative to preserve" continued racial segregation in public schools.

The eight joined in a policy pact that said forced mixing of the races in public schools "would be destructive to the American principle of self-government, as well as damaging to the public schools system in our states."

Governors Named

The governors who signed the statement were Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia, Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, Gov.-Elect George Bell Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina, Allan Shivers of Texas, Herman Talmadge of Georgia, Acting Gov. Charley E. Johns of Florida and Johnston Murray of Oklahoma.

Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi, a strong advocate of segregation had left the conference before the statement was issued on the closing day of the conference Saturday. Two other Deep South delegates, Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee and Gov.-Elect James E. Folsom of Alabama, joined Govs. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland, Lawrence Wetherby of Kentucky and William Marland of West Virginia in refusing to sign it.

Jud. 11-16-54

The pact was the result of refusal of the resolutions committee of the conference to pass on a proposed resolution that would have requested President Eisenhower to call an immediate session of Congress for adoption of pro-segregation legislation.

Johns, who drew up the defeated resolution, urged the special session of Congress to take necessary steps to write into the U. S. Constitution amendments that would allow continued school segregation in the South.

Legislative group says—

State can legally bypass deseqreqation

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

The U. S. Supreme Court decision ruling out segregation in the classroom can be met in Alabama legally to prevent compulsory mixing of races by changing the State Constitution to:

"1. Give the Legislature flexibility and freedom of action in dealing with the problem.

"2. Give school officials protection by making them judicial officers and furnishing them with legal counsel from the attorney general's office.

"Then general purposes can be accomplished without any radical change in the public school system in the state," says the Boutwell Committee in its official report released today.

As previously disclosed, this report by a six-man legislative investigating committee, aided by a group from the State Bar Assn., would give white and Negro parents freedom of choice to send their children to:

All-white schools.
All-Negro schools.
Or to mixed schools.

THIS IS AN ENTIRELY different approach to the problem than those projected in other Southern states, notably in Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi.

It is one that Jefferson State Sen. Albert Boutwell, committee chairman, calls "workable."

But, as revealed in earlier reports of the Boutwell Committee recommendations, the plan would permit abolition of the present compulsory public school system.

The committee emphasized that its plan for constitutional changes would not mean abandonment of public operation of schools by state authority "except in areas where the belligerence of agitation might force consideration of this procedure, after every reasonable exercise of discretion and authority to avoid it."

SAID THE REPORT:

"The basic objective of the proposed amendments is to give the authority to the Legislature to assure the reconciliation by our school authorities of the right of white people, as a group, and Negro people, to elect to attend schools of their own race."

And "to make possible the application of tests and standards which must be met before mixed schools can be operated at all for those wishing to attend them."

"But," continued the report, "these changes will make plain the determination that the schools for children of Alabama will not be made the instruments of compulsory racial integration or misconceived social reforms.

"Rather than to allow any such tragic distortion of the function of public education, that function should be abandoned to the extent necessary to protect it in any locality."

THIS, UNDER THE PLAN, would lead to establishment of private schools, the report saying:

"The power should be delegated by the Legislature to the local school authorities as a final resort to discontinue public schools and, instead, grant public aid, such as tuition and transportation, directly to the pupils, white or Negro, and enable them to attend private schools where, of course, there would be no compulsory commingling."

The committee emphasized "this could be done without impairment of teachers' tenure, pensions or other rights."

Chairman Boutwell and his colleagues added "this procedure would be a last resort."

It was pointed out that:

"There is no right under the Constitution of the U. S. to an education at public expense.

"Alabama should also disclaim any such compulsion, making plain the desire of its citizens to promote the education of its children, but not at the expense of tension, disorder, the violation of ingrained traditions and the clear risk of psychological damage to children of both races."

IT IS PROPOSED that Section 256 of the state Constitution be amended "so as to eliminate the express prohibition against the operation of mixed schools, attended by both races, but at the same time make clear that the state will not undertake to coerce anyone to attend mixed schools against his will, and will not be obligated to operate any such mixed schools at all."

The suggested amendment, which would have to be submitted by the Legislature and approved by the state's voters, thus would "eliminate the mandate that the Legislature must provide public schools for everybody between the ages of 7 and 21."

Also proposed were amendments to Sections 137 and 139 of the constitution "to give the Legislature broader authority to assure consistency of policy in conserving order and harmony, and in asserting the paramount police power of the state by providing for participation by the attorney general in any litigation involving any public school or any state or local school board or official."

It would give such school boards judicial authority in school matters "such as the eligibility, admission and allocation of pupils, including the power to refuse admission to individuals or groups whose deficiencies in scholastic aptitude would compel undue lowering of school standards. . . ."

THE REPORT DECLARED that "the notion that white parents in Alabama could be prosecuted, as now proposed by the governor of Delaware, for not compelling attendance of their children in a mixed school would be intolerable and impossible here."

And the committee expressed its fear of disorder and tension arising in Alabama, warning:

"As regrettable as they would be, recent outbreaks of violence in border states would be pale reflections of the result of forced mixing in this state. It is imperative that action be taken."

Forced integregation, the committee asserted, "would not only generate but would perpetuate hostility and resentment between the races with shocking consequences."

"Although the entire social order would suffer, the Negro people would be by far the greater sufferers from the tension which would result from any attempt to compel integration. One of the unfortunate results would be the certainty of decisive economic disadvantage to the Negro."

IN CONCLUSION, the committee declared "we express our conviction that the public support and furtherance of education can and should be maintained in a manner acceptable to the vast majority of citizens who, in the end, make it possible; and it can be maintained without permitting the function of education of children in Alabama to be converted into a mechanism for compulsory and violent social reform."

Serving with Sen. Boutwell on the committee were State Sens. J. Miller Bonner, Wilcox, and Herbert Byars, Hale; Reps. Ira Pruitt, Sumter; Bob Kendall, Conecuh, and Jack Gallalee, Mobile.

The committee acknowledged "constructive contributions" to its study by the bar group headed by Joseph F. Johnston, Birmingham, and Attys. J. Kirkman Jackson, Birmingham; Gessner T. McCorvey, Mobile, and Norman Harris, Decatur.

Copies of the report were sent to Gov. Gordon Persons, Lt. Gov. James B. Allen, candidates for governor and lieutenant governor in the Nov. 2 general election, members of the outgoing and incoming Legislature, Sen. Secretary Earl Speight and House Clerk Bob Goodwyn.

GOV. BOGGS ACTS IN SCHOOL DISPUTE

Delaware Official Insists Law Will Be Preserved in Racial Controversy

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

MILFORD, Del., Sept. 24—Gov. J. Caleb Boggs called upon all persons to permit the Milford public schools to reopen on Monday without any incident or demonstration.

The reopening of the two schools, closed this week because of threats of violence over the admission of eleven Negro pupils to the previously all-white senior high school, was ordered last midnight by the State Board of Education.

In a statement, released here through Mayor Edward C. Evans, Governor coupled his request for cooperation in the area's present integration controversy with a warning that "law and order will be preserved under the law and the American way."

The Governor also requested church, civic and fraternal organizations in the Milford school district to call "appropriate meetings of their membership so that I or other persons available may meet and discuss calmly and coolly the situation with a view to developing understanding, appreciation of the facts and preserving the rights and privileges of all concerned.

Order Is Demanded

"I further respectfully request, urge and appeal, and I must insist," Governor Boggs added, "that law and order prevail; that no disorders, threats or violence take place."

In ordering the reopening of the schools, the State Board of Education also directed that the Negro pupils, six boys and five girls, should remain in the tenth grade of the Lakeview Avenue school until "their legal rights are determined by proper judicial authority."

Because the state board did not unequivocally endorse their action in admitting the Negroes, the members of the Milford school board of Education resigned in a body. Howard E. Lynch, counsel for the district board, explained that the members of the Milford board felt that they were "too close to the situation to accept the responsibility of reopening the schools with Negroes attending without the full backing of the state board."

J. Ohrum Small, president of the state board, said the schools here would remain under the control of the state board until Governor Boggs and H. Albert Young, Attorney General of Delaware, found a means of creating a new board in the Milford district.

A spokesman in the Negro section here said that the eleven children "definitely will go to school on Monday." He said that the Negro pupils and their parents were declining requests for comment because they had been advised against "talking."

Will Abide by Decision

The Rev. Randolph Fisher, Milford area representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said "we shall abide by the decision of the State Board of Education."

A check of sentiment among white residents disclosed that some parents might keep their children out of the Lakeview school while Negroes are in attendance. However, there were others, including avowed anti-integrationists, who said their children would return to class on Monday because "the Governor's advice should be followed by everyone."

Mayor Evans and Chief of Police Samuel G. Pawell reported that there had been no incidents nor threats of violence because of the state board's ruling. Mayor Evans said he had received unconfirmed reports that pro-segregationists were planning to hold a meeting over the week-end to decide on a course of action.

Anti-integration leaders were either unavailable or declined to comment today.

Del. Governor Ready to Act On Schools

Georgetown, Del.—The attorney general of Delaware pledged in court that Gov. Caleb Boggs and the state's two U. S. Senators, John Williams (R.) and Allen Frear (D.), were prepared to lead 10 Negro children by the hand into the Milford High School if the court ordered the school board to readmit the pupils.

Washington Star

Attorney General Albert Young declared that the full authority of the state would be brought to bear to preserve law and order if integration returned to the Milford school. He declared "mob rule" had taken over in Milford under a "leader peddling hypocrisy and prejudice."

Dec. 10-15-54

His reference was to Bryant Bowles, founder of the "National Association for the Advancement of White People." Bowles' organization led the fight that resulted in the return of segregation to the Milford school last month. Bowles was arrested and charged with conspiring to violate the state's education law by leading the boycott that led to segregation. He was freed on $6,000 bail.

The hearing in chancery court, where Young appeared, involved a petition by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on behalf of parents of the Negro children. The parents demanded a temporary injunction to upset the Milford school board's segregation action.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

Ike Is Expecting Flexible Ruling On Segregation

Constitution p. 1
Atlanta, Ga.
Issued. 11-24-54

By J. W. DAVIS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23 (AP)—President Eisenhower, in a surprise comment on what the Supreme Court might do, said today he believes it will not be arbitrary in its final ruling on how to end racial segregation in public schools.

He also told his news conference he understands the court is trying to find some sort of decentralized process to handle the problem. He said he believes the emotional and practical problems involved will be given weight by the court.

There was no indication of what was the basis of Eisenhower's belief and understanding. Traditionally, court justices never talk to anybody about a pending case, and Presidents refrain from comment on possible future court decisions.

SEEMS A HINT

On the surface, Eisenhower seemed to be hinting that the court may listen sympathetically to the argument of Southern states that much time will be needed in making any shift from segregated schools to nonsegregated.

Attorneys for Negro parents in the school segregation cases told the court Nov. 15 they would be willing to postpone desegregation until next September, but no longer.

When the court ruled last May 17 that public school segregation is unconstitutional, it decided to hear further argument on how desegregation could be carried out.

SOME RACE FRICTION

Some border communities didn't wait for final orders but started the process this fall. There were instances of racial friction in some of them, in others the white and Negro children were brought together without incident.

Eisenhower's mention of the possibility of the court settling on a decentralized program could mean handing the problem over to regional authorities, perhaps U.S. District Courts.

Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Issued. 11-24-54

In briefs filed Nov. 15, suggestions that the district courts handle it were made by Texas, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, the school board of Clarendon County, S.C., and attorneys for Negro parents who are principals in the original cases.

The states urged that the lower courts be given broad discretion. The Negroes' attorneys asked the Supreme Court to lay down strict limitations to avoid "any invitation to procrastinate."

Some of the state briefs said there was no constitutional bar to the court using its discretion to permit gradual desegregation. On the other hand, the attorneys for the Negroes protested against any idea of postponement "because of anticipation of difficulties arising out of local feelings."

It is indefinite when the court will hear the arguments preliminary to a final ruling. It had called for these arguments to start Dec. 6 but has now postponed them, until it has a full membership of nine justices.

There is one vacancy on the court and President Eisenhower appointed John Marshall Harlan to fill it. However, the Senate has put off considering the nomination until the new session starting in January. Hearings were postponed after Sen. Eastland (D-Miss) said he and other senators wanted more time to study the appointment.

SOUTHERN GOVERNORS CONFERENCE
BOCA RATON, FLORIDA

OFFICIAL OPINION

Southern Governors Conference

Segregation Amendment Urged

Hunt Observer

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 11 (AP)—The explosive school segregation issue was touched off at the very outset of the Southern Governors Conference today when acting Gov. Charley E. Johns of Florida proposed a constitutional amendment to allow the states to maintain separate but equal public schools.

Richmond, Va.

Urging this proposal in a welcome address to the governors and the governors-elect of 13 Southern states, Johns announced he would press for an immediate vote on the resolution tomorrow.

Out of Order

Gov. Johnston Murray of Oklahoma, the conference chairman, told newsmen he would have to rule any such attempt for an immediate vote out of order and refer the resolution to the resolutions committee which reports Saturday.

Johns apparently caught his fellow governors by surprise when he proposed that President Eisenhower be asked to call a special session of Congress immediately to submit a constitutional amendment which would allow the states to maintain their separate but equal public schools.

He said that in the alternative the Southern governors should call special sessions of their legislatures to petition for enactment of such a constitutional change.

Most governors interviewed here prior to the conference opening said they thought each state should decide for itself what course it should pursue in meeting the U. S. Supreme Court edict of May 17 that segregated public schools must go.

Not On Agenda.

The subject wasn't on the conference agenda and many of the governors expressed hope privately that the touchy issue wouldn't be brought up.

Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas was appointed to head up the resolutions committee which would normally consider such a proposal.

Johns told the governors the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools has created turmoil and confusion not only in the Southland but also from Maine to California.

"The question of whether or not our schools shall be segregated is by far too great an issue to rest upon a judicial opinion of only nine men, particularly when there is a constitutional method by which the people themselves can be permitted to speak," Johns said.

Judge Prods Dixie Leaders, Hits Centralized Power—Racial Issue Weighed

Sat. 11-13-54

By International News Service

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 12.—A Federal jurist who upheld the principle of separate schools for white and Negro pupils urged Southern governors forward Friday night in their demands for states' rights.

P. 1

Judge John J. Parker, of the United States Court of Appeals at Charlotte, N. C., declared centralized power in Washington is "fraught with the utmost danger to local self-government and to the freedom of the individual."

Memphis, Tenn.

Judge Parker was one of three appellate jurists whose collective opinion in the Clarendon County, S. C., school segregation case was reversed by the United States Supreme Court opinion banning racial segregation.

He spoke before the governors at Boca Raton while they considered a proposal to let the nation's voters decide the fate of Dixie's traditional segregation.

The governors will decide Saturday what to do with a hotly debated resolution asking for a United States constitutional amendment legalizing racial segregation.

Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina branded the move as impractical. He predicted if any such resolution is approved by the governors, it will serve merely as a "vehicle of protest" at best.

Florida Governor's Plan

The resolution, introduced by Gov. Charley Johns of Florida, would request President Eisenhower to call a special session of Congress to ratify the proposed amendment and submit it to a national referendum. Objective of Governor Johns' plan is to temporarily set aside and possibly nullify the Supreme Court's recent ban against public school segregation.

Segregation Move Fails to Win Byrnes

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 12 (INS).—The hotly-debated resolution before the Southern Governors Conference to demand a constitutional amendment legalizing segregation was branded as impractical today by Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina.

One of the staunchest defenders of Dixie's traditional separation of the races, Governor Byrnes cautioned that the resolution is likely to be merely a "vehicle of protest" if, indeed, it wins approval Saturday.

Governor Johns' plan is to set aside temporarily and possibly to nullify the United States Supreme Court's recent ban against public school segregation.

P. 2

Governor Byrnes told newsmen he doubts that Mr. Eisenhower would call Congress into any special session because of an already jammed calendar. Byrnes broke with the Democratic Party to support the Eisenhower candidacy in 1952.

The South Carolinian, one-time Supreme Court justice, commented:

"I would favor amending the constitution to legalize segregation but I am not confident that such a move would meet with success."

"I feel that Governor Johns would be satisfied here with an on-the-record protest by the Southern Governors."

Roll Call Asked

Johns earlier asked for a roll-call vote of the Governors' Resolutions Committee. The chairman, Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas, said he has no objection to such a procedure if the committee approves.

A two-thirds majority vote is technically necessary for the passage of a resolution by the Governors, but they never have indorsed a resolution without unanimous consent.

The second day of their Boca Raton meeting was devoted to discussion of toll highway construction and prevention of traffic accidents, along with a panel talk on water conservation.

Byrnes voiced objection to heavy Federal contributions to road-building programs.

Gov. Robert Kennon of Louisiana, chairman of the National Governors' Conference, advocated the Southern executives go along with the multi-billion-dollar plan for construction of a national interstate highway system. Congress has the proposal under consideration.

Mitchell Shift Called Fortunate

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 12 (INS).—Governor Allan Shivers of Texas declared today that "it is fortunate" that Stephen Mitchell is resigning next month as national chairman of the Democratic Party.

Nov. 11-13-54

The only three-time Governor in Texas history spiked reports that he has ambitions to become the Democratic 1956 vice presidential nominee. But he said:

"It is my desire to build a strong Democratic Party controlled by moderate hands."

Shivers said he will not attend the December Party rally in New Orleans when a new chairman is scheduled to be named, adding he hopes the position will go to Sen. Earl Clements of Kentucky.

Washington, D.C.

Northern and eastern radicals and liberals such as the ADA (American for Democratic Action) group are a liability for the Democrats," according to Shivers, who said selection of the next chairman largely would determine the future course of the party.

The Governor interpreted recent general election trends as an expression of independence by the American individual voter. He cited the election of former Governor J. Strom Thurmond as South Carolina's new Senator as a prime example.

M'Keldin Links Victory To Big Roads Program

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 12. Maryland's Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin today attributed his recent relection largely to the state's 12-year highway construction program.

"The people want good roads," McKeldin said in a speech prepared for delivery at a round table at the Southern Governors' Conference here, "and they're willing to pay for them."

He said passage of the 568-million - dollar program by the 1953 General Assembly was the first test of that statement and his reelection November 2 over Democratic rival H. C. Byrd was the "second test."

He said he featured the roads program in his campaign and that it was the only one of his administration's accomplishments that his opponents attacked.

"I am convinced that the people of Maryland are not looking for a bargain basement, marked down system of roads," McKeldin said.

He said 3000 of the state's 4736 miles of highways were obsolete when the roads program went to the Legislature and that 300 additional miles of road were needed.

GOVERNORS END THEIR SESSIONS

Adjourn Conference Without Formal Action On Segregation Question

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13 (AP)—The Southern governors conference adjourned today without taking formal action on the explosive school segregation issue, but seven governors and one governor-elect issued a joint statement later registering a protest against efforts to force mixing of the races in public schools.

The statement said the signers would attempt by constitutional methods "to preserve the right of the states to administer their public school systems to the best interest of all our people."

First Since Ruling.

It was the first meeting of Southern governors since the U.S. Supreme Court handed down its decision May 17 outlawing segregation in the public schools.

The governors signing the statement said experience had proved the wisdom of separate but equal school facilities for the races and it would be damaging to the public school system if schools in the South were desegregated.

Those signing were Govs. Thomas B. Stanley, Virginia; Robert F. Kennon, Louisiana; James F. Byrnes, South Carolina; Allan Shivers, Texas; Herman E. Talmadge, Georgia; Charley E. Johns, Florida, and Johnston Murray, Oklahoma.

Gov.-elect George Bell Timmerman Jr., of South Carolina, also signed the statement.

This group said Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi and Gov.-elect Leroy Collins of Florida had left Boca Raton before the statement was drafted.

Five other governors and one governor-elect attending the conference did not sign the statement. They were Govs. Theodore R. McKeldin, Maryland; Lawrence W. Wetherby, Kentucky; Frank G. Clement, Tennessee; Francis Cherry, Arkansas, and William C. Marland, West Virginia, and Gov.-elect James E. Folsom of Alabama.

McKeldin issued a statement of his own in which he said that in his opinion it was the duty of every citizen to accept the Supreme Court decree regardless of how he felt about the matter.

"Any other course would undermine the very foundations of law and order," McKeldin said.

Only Republicans.

The Maryland governor, the only Republican governor attending the conference, said the proper procedure would be for the states to file briefs with the U.S. Supreme Court and to make oral arguments at a hearing set for Dec. 6 on ways and means of putting the May 17 ruling into effect.

North Carolina and Delaware, other members of the conference, didn't have their governors here and Gov. Gordon Persons of Alabama didn't attend.

A resolution by acting Gov. Johns of Florida which would have put the conference on record as favoring the Constitutional amendment to maintain separate but equal school facilities did not get a conference vote since it was rejected by the resolutions committee.

Several members of the committee said they didn't consider this a practical approach to the situation. Johns said he regarded the joint statement on the matter "a moral victory for my stand."

The conference elected Wetherby chairman, succeeding Murray.

Folsom invited the conference to hold its 1955 meeting in Mobile, Ala. A decision on a site will be made in about two weeks.

Resolutions adopted included:

Asking the Southern Regional Education Board to organize a regional council on mental health training and research to help the states with mental health work. The council would be financed by contributions of $8,000 a year by participating states.

Calling on Congress to exempt production, gathering and handling of natural gas from regulations by the Federal Power Commission. This resolution was introduced by Govs. Shivers, Kennon and Murray.

At a round table on industrial developments an industrial research organization reported the South had an opportunity for even greater industrial expansion in the next 20 years if it gets alert and aggressive leadership.

The report was made by the Southern Assn. of Science and Industry, Inc., Atlanta, which was charged by the conference last year to make estimates of opportunities for future industrial development.

Dr. Frank Soday, president of the association, said that despite its rapid strides industrially, the South still lags somewhat in manufacturing plants. He said the South now had 19 per cent of the nation's total plants and that this percentage should be about 10 per cent higher.

Some fields for which the association saw prospects for substantial increase were textile products, farm products, steel plants, forestry products and industrial chemicals.

Talmadge, 7 Other Governors Join in Pact on Segregation

Want Doctrine of Equal Schools, Group's Policy Statement Declares

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 16—Gov. Herman Talmadge Saturday joined seven other Southern governors in a segregation policy statement declaring they want to keep the "separate but equal doctrine" in public schools.

The statement, a plea for leaving school administration up to the states, came after the resolutions committee of the Southern Governors Conference rejected a proposal by Florida Gov. Charlie E. Johns that Pres. Eisenhower call an immediate session of Congress for prosegregation legislation.

GOV. JOHNS, one of the signers of the statement, said he was "completely satisfied" with the policy declaration and considers it a "moral victory for my insistence that Southern governors take some action on segregation."

The statement said forced mixing of the races in public schools "would be destructive to the American principle of self-government, as well as damaging to the public school system in our states."

The governors pledged to "exercise every proper prerogative to preserve the basic principles of our constitutional government, and as applied to education, to preserve the right of the states to administer their public school systems to the best interests of all people."

SIGNERS WERE: Gov. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia; Robert F. Kennon, Louisiana; James F. Byrnes, South Carolina; Gov-elect George Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina; Allan Shivers, Texas; Talmadge, Johns and Johnston Murray of Oklahoma.

Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi had left the conference before the statement was issued.

Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland, the lone Republican among the regional governors, declined to sign the statement and instead strongly urged that the U.S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling be accepted.

"Any other course would undermine the very foundation of law and order," he said. "For, when the writ of the Supreme Court is defied, there is no security for property, for liberty, or even for life itself.

"WE ARE GOING to work this thing out in Maryland."

Gov. Lawrence Wetherby of Kentucky, the new chairman of the conference, also refused to endorse the policy statement. He told newsmen he was likewise against the Johns proposal.

Also not signing the statement were Governors Frank Clement of Tennessee and William Marland of West Virginia and Gov.-elect James Folsom of Alabama. They were not immediately available for comment.

Acting Gov. Johns had hurled his blast at segregation, an unscheduled topic in a routine welcoming address the first day of the conference. His proposal demanded that Congress amend the Constitution and add to it the "separate but equal facilities" doctrine.

But he declared he had no "pride in authorship" of that proposal, and was willing to go along instead with the policy.

"I simply felt we should take a stand and not leave here without doing it," he asserted.

However, Carter Lowrance, an aide to Gov. Stanley, told newsmen the policy statement should not be interpreted as an official action of the conference.

THE GOVERNORS concluded their meeting here Saturday afternoon and were invited to hold the next session in Mobile, Ala. At the conference, they agreed to pool resources of the various states in an effort to tackle the problem of mental health in the region.

A resolution approved Saturday calls for establishment of a regional council on mental health training and research. Each state was asked to contribute $8,000 a year to its cost.

Gov. Talmadge, leading a discussion on industrial development in the South, cited the section's gains in new industry during recent years. He said per capita income in Dixie, only one-third of the national average 20 years ago, now stands at two-thirds of that average.

But he said it isn't true, as some New England political figures have charged, that the region has under way "a gigantic conspiracy" to lure Northern industry to the South.

He said new industries are coming to the region on their own, attracted by the South's natural resources and labor market.

Gov. Talmadge said he opposes seeking new industries by offering tax exemptions.

"I don't believe a citizen who moves into our state because of tax exemptions would in the long run prove a very desirable one," he said.

Earlier, a Southern industrialist predicted the region would add 3,000 major manufacturing plants in the next 10 years.

And by 1975, said Dr. Frank J. Soday, president of the Southern Assn. of Science and Industry, the South can expect these percentage increases in its manufacturing industries:

Steel, up 55 per cent; synthetic rubber, 150 per cent; aluminum, 350 per cent; plastics, 550 per cent, and synthetic fibers, 1,100 per cent.

Seeking co-operation between SASI and the Governors Conference, Soday said the region is deficient in two commodities—industrial research and engineering and technological graduates.

Before adjourning the governors also approved a resolution calling upon Congress to amend "without delay the Natural Gas Act."

Consider Funds Angle, Oklahoma Asks Court

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13 (AP) — Oklahoma urged the Supreme Court Saturday to consider its financial problems in setting the date for the end of segregation in schools. Oklahoma Atty. Gen. Mac Williamson said in a brief filed with the court that it will take time to make a changeover.

He suggested the court make allowance for this in determining how and when its decision of last May outlawing public school segregation should be implemented.

The court has called for new arguments on this phase of its historic ruling. The deadline for submitting briefs is next Monday.

"The problem of the State of Oklahoma in adjusting or changing the financial structure for maintaining public schools is a serious one, grounded in constitutional and statutory provisions of long standing—the uprooting of which in an effort to conform will take time to solve," Williamson declared.

He said the court "undoubtedly can and will consider the ability of states to endeavor to conform to the doctrine of only one system (without distinction as to color) in public education." Thus he argued, the court "should consider the financial problems of a state such as ours."

Earlier, a Southern industrialist predicted the region would add 3,000 major manufacturing plants in the next 10 years.

And by 1975, said Dr. Frank J. Soday, president of the Southern Assn. of Science and Industry, the South can expect these percentage increases in its manufacturing industries:

Steel, up 55 per cent; synthetic rubber, 150 per cent; aluminum, 350 per cent; plastics, 550 per cent, and synthetic fibers, 1,100 per cent.

Seeking co-operation between SASI and the Governors Conference, Soday said the region is deficient in two commodities—industrial research and engineering and technological graduates.

Before adjourning the governors also approved a resolution calling upon Congress to amend "without delay the Natural Gas Act."

Consider Funds Angle, Oklahoma Asks Court

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13 (AP) — Oklahoma urged the Supreme Court Saturday to consider its financial problems in setting the date for the end of segregation in schools. Oklahoma Atty. Gen. Mac Williamson said in a brief filed with the court that it will take time to make a changeover.

He suggested the court make allowance for this in determining how and when its decision of last May outlawing public school segregation should be implemented.

The court has called for new arguments on this phase of its historic ruling. The deadline for submitting briefs is next Monday.

"The problem of the State of Oklahoma in adjusting or changing the financial structure for maintaining public schools is a serious one, grounded in constitutional and statutory provisions of long standing—the uprooting of which in an effort to conform will take time to solve," Williamson declared.

He said the court "undoubtedly can and will consider the ability of states to endeavor to conform to the doctrine of only one system (without distinction as to color) in public education." Thus he argued, the court "should consider the financial problems of a state such as ours."

CONFERENCE AIRS TROUBLES

Antisegregation Edict, Need for More Money Plague Dixie Governors

By M. L. ST. JOHN
Journal-Constitution Staff Writer

BOCA RATON, Fla., Nov. 13—A need for more money to improve their states and an answer to the school segregation problem are the two most troublesome questions plaguing the governors of the Southern States.

The need for additional millions of dollars to provide better education, highways, health, welfare and jobs even exceeds the problem of segregation, governors of the South told The Journal-Constitution in interviews here today.

All the states have the financial problem. As for segregation, it varies with the states. Some have plans to try to preserve segregation. Some don't have a serious problem of segregation. And others shut their eyes and say like Scarlett O'Hara, "We'll think about that tomorrow."

As one governor put it, "We don't have any problems that more money wouldn't solve."

Education Major Problem

The provision of an adequate education for their people is troubling some governors as much or more than the task of trying to solve the segregation problem, despite the fact that the United States Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools has created a critical situation in many states, Northern as well as Southern.

Topmost, undoubtedly, is the state of Alabama in its school needs and projections. Gov.-elect Jim Folsom reports that the Alabama state school superintendent is seeking $150,000,000 in additional revenue.

"I have endorsed this," Folsom said, "however, I think most of the money will have to come from the local level."

The need for additional roads is another major problem facing Folsom as he returns to the governor's office. He said a bond issue is to be floated, contemplates the spending of millions on rural roads. Alabama also plans to revise its constitution.

Must Care for Jobless

A leader of the Southern Governors Conference, Gov. Lawrence Wetherby of Kentucky, reports that caring for the jobless is going to be his hardest job for the next year. Coal mines are laying off workers. The state has increased unemployment compensation to where a jobless person now can draw $24 a week for 26 weeks. Two billion dollars' worth of new industries have been added within the past five years, and Gov. Wetherby said the state is pulling for more industries to give jobs to its people. Roads and schools are other problems.

Tennessee, says Gov. Frank Clement, will need an additional $10,000,000 to carry on the present program next year without expansion.

Georgia's present program will cost an additional $15,000,000 to carry on without expansion, Gov. Herman Talmadge said. That does not include any provision for an adequate education program being mapped by educators.

Texas in Need of Water

Water is a major concern of the big state of Texas, Gov. Alan Shivers asserted. More water, more education and more roads. As a matter of fact, Shivers gave the comment that Texas had no problem that more money would not solve.

The manner of spending its money is a problem Oklahoma is going to have to straighten out, Gov. Johnston Murray stated. Two-thirds of the state's revenues are earmarked for specific purposes, leaving the administration tied too tightly to make expansion, he said.

Falling revenues will hurt the next administration in Arkansas, outgoing Gov. Francis Cherry commented. The revenue of that state, like the revenue of Georgia, is based on sales and income taxes. In Arkansas, the income tax is sending the total revenues downward. Cherry said the schools are asking a $12,000,000 increase for the new year.

Herman Talmadge

G. B. Timmerman

In the deep South states of South Carolina, Mississippi and Georgia, segregation is the top problem.

S. C. Maps School Plan

The United States Supreme Court already has made a decision in the case involving South Carolina and it is prepared to implement that decision.

Gov.-elect George Timmerman, who will succeed Gov. James Byrnes, has authority from the people to try a system of schools which would give the people a right to choose what type of school they wish to attend. There would be a system of all-white schools, a system of all-colored schools and a system of mixed schools. Timmerman does not see much of a financial problem here, because he doubted that many South Carolinians will request the mixed schools.

Mississippians will go to the polls Nov. 21 to decide whether they want to authorize abolition of their public school system. Gov. Hugh White, a native of Georgia, said he had no plan for educating the people of Mississippi if the educational amendment is adopted. The problem will be dropped into the lap of the Legislature to try to work out something. he said.

Georgia has just ratified an amendment which will permit its Legislature to make educational grants to citizens in lieu of operating a public school system. This contemplates shifting from public to private schools as a "last resort" to preserve segregation. Gov. Talmadge has listed the preservation of segregation as the toughest problem of the new administration which will be headed by Gov.-elect Marvin Griffin.

OFFICIAL OPINION

Views on Segregation

Segregation is no problem in Oklahoma, where there are few Negroes. It is a problem in some sections of Arkansas, which are heavily populated by Negroes. Gov. Folsom does not regard it as a problem in Alabama, because, as he told political audiences this summer: "I don't intend to try to force the good Negroes to go to school with us white folks."

Tennessee's Gov. Clement sees segregation and mental health as top problems facing governors of the South as a whole.

"Segregation is a problem that nothing is being done about," Clement said, in comparing the two. "Mental health is a problem that is being attacked by the united efforts of the Southern states."

GEORGIA

OFFICIAL OPINION

SCHOOL LEASE TO PRIVATE OWNERS OK'D

Cook Says Systems Would be Liable For Rent in Default

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook Saturday issued an official opinion that Georgia's local public school systems can sublease their authority-financed school buildings to private owners.

At the same time, however, the opinion says that the school systems would continue to be responsible to the State School Building Authority for rent payments, if the private operators default.

The opinion is the latest in a series from the attorney general favoring the private school amendment to preserve segregation.

It does not go into the question of whether the subleasing arrangement of local systems would not be state action, and subject to the Supreme Court ban on segregation.

THE OPINION also says that the Building Authority, which finances school buildings and rents them to public systems, can itself do no such leasing.

It also declares that the state can take no action which would violate the authority's contracts with either bondholders or school systems, while arguing that nothing in the private school plan violates the contracts.

The opinion came in answer to a letter from State School Supt. M. D. Collins, arch foe of the private school plan.

The amendment was passed by voters in the general election, and thereby written into the state constitution. It is generally considered enabling legislation for the Talmadge plan to set up private schools as an answer to the Supreme Court ban on segregation in public ones.

DR. COLLINS fired a series of questions about the amendment at Mr. Cook during heated campaigning over the amendment. The one on which Saturday's opinion was based came too late for an answer before the election.

The question was whether Authority contracts did not "specifically say that (its) buildings shall be occupied or used . . . for public schools."

Not so, said the Cook opinion.

The opinion quoted sections of the contracts with bondholders which state that the Authority cannot dispose of any of its buildings as long as bonds are outstanding.

* * *

BUT THIS limits only "the right of the Authority to alienate or encumber its revisionary interest," and does not "in any wise restrict or prohibit . . . the local school system from subletting its lease," the opinion continues.

Mississippian Denies Stating Foes Want Integration

KOSCIUSKO, Miss., Nov. 15.—Former Gov. Fielding L. Wright in an address to the Rotary Club here Monday emphasized that he had never said that those who voted against the school abolition amendment to the state constitution on Dec. 21 were voting in favor of integration.

Every citizen has the right to his own conviction, he said, and "I know plenty of people who are opposed to the amendment and are as strongly for segregation as I . . ."

"What I did say," he continued, "is that if this amendment fails to carry it will be heralded to the world by radical national magazines, newspapers and organizations that Mississippi is willing to accept integration."

"That will be false," he said. "I will know it is false, and so will you, but will the world know it?"

The former governor was introduced by James T. Crawley who said Mr. Wright was invited to speak on the amendment "because we want our people to fully realize its importance and every citizen to discharge his responsibility by voting on Dec. 21."

Hodges, N.C. Political Enigma, Faces Grief in Governorship

Umstead Successor's Problems: Desegregation, Fading Revenues

By JAY JENKINS
Staff Writer, Raleigh News and Observer
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C., Nov. 13—Suave, softspoken Lt. Gov. Luther Hartwell Hodges this week inherited the governorship of North Carolina and with its problems as perplexing as any that have been posed to the state's chief executive since Reconstruction days.

Complicating the difficult assignment is the time element. Less than 60 days from the time he was sworn in to complete the 28 months remaining in the term of the late William B. Umstead, Gov. Hodges will be host to the General Assembly.

And the 1955 General Assembly will be looking to the governor for guidance in meeting the tough twin problems of dealing with school segregation and dropping state revenues. Unless state services are cut sharply—an unlikely prospect—a tax increase is inevitable.

Fortunately, Gov. Hodges is well versed both in school and revenue matters. By virtue of his office as lieutenant governor, he served as chairman of the State Board of Education, which has been exploring possible methods of conforming to the desegregation decision and at the same time retaining the public school system.

While the new governor may owe his knowledge of school affairs to the office he held, he obtained his grounding in revenue know-how on his own initiative. During the 1953 General Assembly, he listened and learned. He sat through tiresome sessions of the commission which makes recommendations on appropriations.

Worked at His Job

In brief, he became a Tar Heel political freak: a working lieutenant governor. Then, just as North Carolinians were getting oriented to the unorthodox spectacle, Luther Hodges was catapulted into the top office.

If history does repeat itself, Gov. Hodges will continue to confound orthodox politicians while pleasing the voters. Two years after he retired at 52 as a vice president of Marshall Field and Co., he had the effrontery as a political unknown to contest a veteran state senator for the post of lieutenant governor. And he had the unmitigated gall to win.

As presiding officer of the 1953 State Senate, he departed from custom and made no committments on committee assignments, and gave no hint of who would get what before he announced his choices. Furthermore, he reduced the number of committees from 39 to 26, pruning patronage plums in the form of clerkships and stenographic help.

Before he became governor, veteran politicians had quit writing off Luther Hodges as a political accident. Now they are hard at the task of trying to catalog him. Be he liberal, conservative or a middle-of-the-roader? He is a fast friend of conservative Robert H. Hanes, the Winston-Salem banker. He is a fast friend of liberal W. Kerr Scott, former governor and now United States senator. About the only trait these politicians have written down as certain is that Gov. Hodges is an independent cuss.

Overtones for Future

The nine-minute ceremony that made the 56-year-old Hodges governor last Tuesday had other overtones for the future. Under the state constitution, a governor cannot succeed himself. But a lieutenant governor who fills an unexpired term is eligible to run for the next full term of four years.

Lt. Gov. Hodges was considered a certain candidate for governor in 1956. Nothing has happened to alter that prospect. Meanwhile, the man on the inside looking out will have a chance to solidify his position.

Prospective gubernatorial opponents of Hodges in 1956 can only hope the 1955 General Assembly will break instead of make him. After all, they reason, the emotionally charged issue of segregation, plus the unpopularity of a tax increase may be his undoing. But they are uneasy.

Lt. Gov. Hodges often reverted to Businessman Hodges. ("My name's Luther Hodges," he told voters in his campaign. "I'm a businessman, not a politician.") A governor who tempered a tax increase with economies in government might appeal to a John Doe who never quite trusted "that Raleigh crowd," anyway.

NORTH CAROLINA

So they are watching Gov. Hodges, this fellow who was born in Virginia, just across the state line from Leaksville, as the son of a tenant farmer. He waited on tables and tended furnaces to pay his way through the University of North Carolina. From a clerical job with Marshall Field in 1919, he rose to a vice presidency in 1943.

Personally, Luther Hodges is an affable, quiet man with a pleasing voice. Of average height, he weighs about 180 pounds. He has steady blue eyes under bushy eyebrows, and a ready laugh. He's fond of hunting and fishing.

Moving into the gingerbread-type governor's mansion with him will be Mrs. Hodges and their 18-year-old son, Luther Jr., a student at the University of North Carolina. The Hodges also have two married daughters, Mrs. D. M. Bernard Jr. of Ana Cortes, Wash., and Mrs. John C. Finlay of Delhi, India.

Replacing the now-vacant office of lieutenant governor in the line of succession will be that of president of the state senate, a position which is expected to go to Sen. Luther Barnhardt of Concord on the first day of the next General Assembly session.

Until now, Gov. Hodges' career may have been marked by unorthodoxy, but his direction has been an orthodox, straight line upward.

7 of 14 governors in South ready to start school mixing

BOCA RATON, Fla.— Maryland's Governor Theodore R. McKeldin said here Saturday that his state will work out the problem of integrating the public schools with "measured footsteps," not with "reckless haste."

Mr. McKeldin was one of seven governors of Southern States who oppose a resolution predicting that the Supreme Court's historic May 17 decision would cause dissension between colored and white.

The resolution was offered by seven of the 14 governors at the Southern Governos Conference here.

—o O o—

GOVERNOR McKELDIN told the Resolutions Committee, in which the resolution was killed, that Maryland would successfully work out the problem. He warned, however, against any sudden and violent changes in the "way of life" which has supported separate school facilities.

In Maryland, only Baltimore City has integrated its schools since the Supreme Court decision. In the state's 23 counties, separate schools still are being operated.

In a brief filed Monday with the Supreme Court by Mr. McKeldin's attorney general, the state asked that the state be allowed to work out their integration problems separately.

Only last week a special committee of the State Board of Education, composed of five, urged a gradual end to segregation in county schools.

This report was called "childish and ridiculous" by Dr. Dwight O. W. Holmes, president - emeritus of Morgan State College and the only colored member of the State Board of Education.

Folsom Seeks Solution To Race Problem

School Segregation To Be Studied

CULLMAN, Nov. 9 (U.P.)—Gov.-Elect James E. Folsom left tonight for Boca Raton, Fla., where he will work with other Southern governors in seeking a solution to the school segregation problem.

Folsom said one of the main objectives of his appearance at the Southern Governors Conference will be to work for a harmonious answer to the issue, "in the light of recent decisions by the U. S. Supreme Court" outlawing segregation in the schools.

Folsom said, "I am going to avail myself to meet with the other Governors, where the best legal minds of the South will be planning for the next four years on the segregation problem. I expect to follow their leadership in this matter."

The convention will open Thursday and run through Sunday. Accompanying Folsom will be Dr. Austin R. Meadows of Huntsville, state school superintendent-elect. Meadows will work with the Governor on Alabama's approach to the school segregation problem.

Also in the party will be Mrs. Meadows, State Insurance Commissioner-Designate and Mrs. L. L. Gwaltney of Montgomery, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Jennings of Montgomery, friends of the governor, and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hammond of Arab. Hammond is Folsom's press secretary.

At Montgomery, Gov. Gordon Persons said he would not be able to attend the Governor's conference. The Governor said Mrs. Persons was slightly ill and her condition made it necessary for him to miss the conference.

Shivers Stresses Insurance Plan

Investment At Home Called Economic Key

BY EDWARD PILLEY

Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas held out the dazzling economic development of the Lone Star State here yesterday and asserted it could be Alabama's, too.

Not oil . . . or cattle, but insurance companies are the key, said Gov. Shivers, here to address the Alabama State Chamber of Commerce tonight.

He referred to Texas legislation that requires all insuring groups within the state to invest a given percentage of premium income in Texas securities.

"That has been one of the finest factors in the state's economic and industrial development," said the recently re-elected Texas chief executive.

"Billions of dollars each year are available as investment capital as a result and that has caused a tremendous increase in the growth of Texas companies," he said.

Alabama's Gov.-Elect James E. Folsom has put state insurance groups on notice that he will seek similar legislation.

Folsom has pointed out, in similar vein, that insurance-investment legislation has made Texas what it is today.

Governor Shivers pointed out that the insurance regulations first were passed in Texas in 1912 and have been in force since, being revised four years ago to increase the percentage the companies must put back into local securities.

He said that when first passed, the law forced several of the large out-of-state companies to withdraw from the state, rather than obey the law.

"They all came back, later," he added, "and it's made for a healthy situation."

Texas has one of the nation's finest business-success records, he said, because of the large volume of investment capital insured by the legislation.

Governor Shivers was considerably less vocal on the subject of desegration of schools in Texas.

"We are studying that now," said the Governor, "We've got the public school agency, the attorney general's office and the Legislative Council working on it.

"But we won't come to any conclusions until the Supreme Court rules in December," he said.

He said he hoped that the ruling would leave the matter of segregation or the implementing of desegregation up to the local governments.

"There's nothing more local than the schools," the tall Texan observed.

Shivers' Son Is "Out" Of Mixed High School

Informer Houston, Texas
Sat. 11-20-54

AUSTIN — In a telephone conversation with an Informer representative here Thursday morning, officials at the interracial St. Edwards University High school confirmed the report that Little John Shivers, son of Governor Allen Shivers, was no longer enrolled in the school. John has been attending classes with Negroes for sometime and the subject became an issue during the Texas gubernatorial race last summer.

Governor Shivers made an issue out of the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in our schools for its political value among the more backward people of the State. At the very moment of his attack, his small son John, was enrolled in classes with Negroes daily. When this became generally known, it proved to be most embarrassing to the Governor. Friends close to the Governor said that other members of his family did not share his views at all and wanted to keep the boy at the school.

One incident that could have given the Governor a chance to get off the hook on this issue was the fact that his son failed to make the HONOR ROLL. Unconfirmed reports are that the Governor called up officials at the school and inquired as to why that little colored boy made the honor roll and his John did not. In checking the honor roll at the school under date of October 15, it was learned that the name of Russell Lombard, Jr.'s, name did appear, but not John Shivers.

John Shivers is now registered in the University Junior High school, an all-white elementary school.

Politically this could foreshadow what Negroes may expect on the issue of segregation when the State Legislature convenes here in January. Reports at present would seem to indicate that we can look for some disgusting bills to be put both for the purpose of arousing and inflaming public opinion. With little John in an all - wihte school it relieves the Governor of a most embarrassing situation. It is extremely difficult for a father to explain his position on an issue, when his son is engaged in the same thing that the father is denouncing.

Governor discusses final school decree

RICHMOND

Attorneys who fought the NAACP suit in the Prince Edward County school segregation case last week met with Virginia's Governor Stanley to discuss plans for a hearing on the nature of the final Supreme Court decree banning public school segregation.

The Prince Edward County case was one of the five suits upon which the historic Supreme Court ruling was based.

FOLLOWING THE hour-long conference, Governor Stanley stated only that the meeting was satisfactory. No statement was given by either Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., or T. Austin Moore Sr., Richmond attorney.

A few days prior to the three-man conference, the governor named a 32-man legislative commission to plan and recommend a course of action for the state to follow after the final high court decree is entered.

estly from the court such words of clarification and advice as to the course to be pursued by the people in carrying out the final mandate of the court."

When Mr. Gentry agreed in September to file a brief, he did so reluctantly. At that time, he stated there was no point in questioning the decision and that the only thing which Arkansas might do would be to point out possible methods which the court might adopt as procedure in effecting its decision.

The Arkansas brief asks for three broad provisions that the Supreme Court (1) not order "forthwith integration," (2) that it enter a decree to permit "gradual adjustments" to be worked out by lower courts in the various states, and (3) to leave the problem of integration of the races in public schools to Congress for appropriate legislation.

Would Avoid Hostility

The attorney general's office argued that immediate integration would produce much hostility among whites in Arkansas, who carry most of the tax burden for the public schools, and that such feeling in turn might lead to "reactions" which would hurt both white and Negro pupils.

The brief argues that immediate integration is not required by the Constitution, and that in Arkansas' view, the Supreme Court should give lower courts "the widest range of discretion in bringing about integration."

The varying problems in different sections of the state were pointed out, including the fact that most of the Negro enrollment is centered in East Arkansas, whereas 14 counties in Northwest and Southwest Arkansas, and Clay and Greene Counties in the northeast section of the state, have no Negro enrollment at all.

Heavy Concentration

It was also called to the high court's attention that six counties in Arkansas have heavier Negro enrollment than white. These are Lee, St. Francis, Crittenden, Chicot, Phillips and Lincoln Counties. On a state basis, Negro enrollment is 23 per cent of the total.

"A wide variety of remedies and plans are needed," the Arkansas brief suggested.

Arkansas says Congress should act on integration

WASHINGTON, (NNPA) —In its brief filed recently in the five school segregation cases pending before the United States Supreme Court, Arkansas suggests that the court should leave the problem of integration to Congress for appropriate legislation.

Baltimore

Aside from such a move contravening the doctrine of states' rights, about which southern states are continually harping, submission to Congress would result in endless debate, breaking the all - time record for filibusters.

Sat 12-11-54

Arkansas also suggests that the court should not order immediate integration but should enter a decree permitting gradual adjustments. The Arkansas brief was filed in response to an invitation to states affected by the decision outlawing racial segregaion in public schools.

THE DECREE OF the Supreme Court, Arkansas says, should give the lower courts the "very widest range of discretion in bringing about integration in a manner which will promote, rather than retard the ultimate solution of the whole problem."

Arkansas urges the court to issue a supplemental opinion pointing out that the integration problem is one that should be solved by Congress under section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Section 5 of the Amendment gives Congress the power to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation. In deciding the school segregation cases, the court construed the Fourteenth Amendment as forbidding racial segregation in public education.

BROWNELL B R I E F

Brief By Brownell In Cases

Backs NAACP Attack On Segregation In Interstate Travel

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(NNPA) The Eisenhower Administration Tuesday urged the Interstate Commerce Commission to end racial discrimination and segregation in interstate travel.

The Justice Department filed a brief for the United States as a friend of the court in the case of the NAACP and seventeen individual complainants — sixteen colored and white — against twelve railroads, which is pending before the commission.

Hearings were held in July and the complainants and defendant railroads were allowed time to file briefs before the examiner writes his report and submits his recommendations to the commission.

The Justice Depatment brief, quoting from the dissenting opinion in the case of Elmer Henderson, tells the commission that it is the view of the United States that the race of a passenger may not legally constitute a basis for any differentiation or segregation in the course of interstate travel upon a carrier subject to the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act."

In the Henderson case, the United States Supreme Court overruled the commission and held that racial segregation in railroad dining cars violated the Interstate Commerce Act.

The Justice Department brief is signed by Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., Assistant Attorney General Stanley N. Barnes, and Charles H. Weston and Lawrence Gochberg, special assistants to the Attorney General.

"As the Supreme Court has so recently ruled, enforced separation of the white from the colored is generally interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the latter," the brief declares, adding:

"Just as our 'Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens,' so too is the Interstate Commerce Act.

"The time has come for this Commission, in administering that Act, to declare unequivocally that a Negro passenger is free to travel the length and breadth of this country in the same manner as any other passenger."

The Justice Department states that the United States, through its Attorney General, considered it appropriate to file a brief as a friend of the court "because of the national importance of the questions of federal law raised' in the complaint filed by the NAACP.

These questions, the brief explains, deal with the right of colored Americans to travel on trains in interstate commerce free from "the restraints now placed on such movement.

"These rights," the brief continues, "consist of nothing more and nothing less than those now enjoyed by all other interstate rail passengers, citizen or non-citizen."

The complaint filed by the NAACP charges the twelve railroads linking the South to the rest of the Nation with requiring racial segregation of colored passengers in interstate travel.

Representatives of the NAACP and individual complainants appeared before the ICC at the hearings and testified as to specific instances of segregation to which they were subjected.

The railroads generally deny any violation of the Interstate Commerce Act and of provisions of the Federal Constitution.

Evidence was heard by a commission examiner to determine the nature of the practices of five railroads. Seven carriers — the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Gulf, Mobile and Ohio, the Kansas City Southern, the Louisville and Nashville, the St. Louis-San Francisco, and the Southern, stipulated the facts, the brief states. The stipulated facts are:

1. Each carrier, as to certain or all of its trains operating in interstate and intrastate commerce, designates, assigns and sets aside specific coaches or portions of coaches for exclusive occupancy by colored passengers.

2. The coaches or portions of coaches designated for occupancy by colored passengers are "substantially equal" to those designated for occupancy by other than colored passengers.

3. The rates and fares charged colored passengers are the same as those charged all other passengers.

4. The railroad's practice of segregation colored passengers has existed continuously for not more than fifty years, pursuant to the public opinion, customs and usages of some or all of the states through which the railroad operates.

Since the interest of the United States "is in the broad question of the legality of segregation rather than in whether any specific defendant practices segregation," the Justice Department brief deals with the legal issues arising from the stipulated facts.

The Government argues that the railroads regulations and practices requiring racial segregation of interstate passengers violate the Interstate Commerce Act.

Where it is stipulated that the physical characteristics of the Jim Crow coaches are "substantially equal to those designed exclusively for white passengers," the brief states, "the issue is presented whether enforced separation of the races is of itself a prohibited discrimination."

The "separate but equal" doctrine "no longer retains vitality or authority in the field of public transportation."

By the same token that segregation in schools, under the command of a state, is a denial of the "equal" protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, the brief asserts, segregation in interstate travel is a denial of the "equality of treatment" required by the Interstate Commerce Act.

The Government also argues:

1. That no prior Supreme Court decision is controlling on the question of the validity under the Interstate Commerce Act of the railroads' segregation rules and practices.

2. That the segregation regulations violate the due process requirements of the Fifth Amendment and, therefore, violate the Interstate Commerce Act.

3. That the railroads' practices in imposing segregation constitute a forbidden interference with interstate commerce.

MR. KORMAN as legal counsel for the District government which includes the Board of Education, will present the D.C. school case before the Supreme Court in December.

P. 22

He made the above comment when queried about reports that school board members Robert S. Faulkner and Mrs. Arcadia S. Phillips had requested that some anti-desegregation sentiment be included in the presentation.

Mr. Korman said that he invited all the school board members to his office Monday, to hear what he will present to the high court in December. He stated that he did so "to prevent any ruckus being raised like it was the last time."

o O o

"AND NOW the situation is just reversed," Mr. Korman went on, "The people who didn't want to be heard before want to give advice now."

Dr. Margaret Just Butcher and three board members who refused to attend Monday's session, said they didn't see any need for it.

— o O o —

"I VOWED I wouldn't go," said Dr. Butcher who severely criticized the corporation counsel's office last year for not seeking board members' advice in the original arguments before the high court.

"We had already indicated what we wanted," Mr. Williams said, referring to the desegregation plan adopted by the board, "I didn't see any need to attend," he continued.

Asked if the counsel was just going to present the board of education plan as it stands—Mr. Korman said, "actually there isn't much to argue about."

BUT he refused to state what position his office will take in the Supreme Court session.

"It's not ethical for a lawyer to discuss his client's case, and if you hear anything about what went on at this session, you can be sure it didn't come from our office," he emphasized.

D. C. Sees Segregation End in '55

Court Gets Opposing Views on Integration

Post and Times Herald

By Frank R. Kent, Jr.

The District and counsel for a group of Negro children in Washington clashed head-on yesterday in briefs filed in the Supreme Court on how and when segregation in the city's public schools should end.

The District brief, filed by Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West and his assistants, told the high tribunal no further court action is necessary in the city because the school system will be completely integrated when the fall school term begins next September.

James M. Nabrit, Jr. and George E. C. Hayes, attorneys for student Spottswood Thomas Bolling, urged that the Supreme Court direct the School Board "forthwith" to admit children to the schools of their choice.

Their brief attacked the so-called "Corning Plan" and charged that its "gradualist element" caused not only the denial of "present constitutional rights" of Negro children in the District, but had been the genesis of many administrative difficulties in the past and presaged more for the future.

Yesterday was the deadline set by the high court for the filing of briefs on how and when its historic decision banning segregation in public schools as unconstitutional should be carried out.

The ruling was based on cases originating in the District and four states, Kansas, Delaware, Virginia and South Carolina.

The participants in these cases were asked to file briefs on the methods of carrying out the ruling. Other interested states also were invited to file as friends of the Court.

In addition to the briefs filed by the District and counsel for Bolling by closing time yesterday, a consolidated brief had been filed in behalf of the Negro plaintiffs in the four states immediately affected by the court's ruling. Each of the four state groups concerned also had filed briefs.

Courage Praised

Florida Makes Plea For Time in Brief

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. p. 1 Sat. 10-16-54

By ALBERT J. DUNMORE

Negro leaders throughout the state of Florida were praising the courage of Attorney General Richard W. Ervin in presenting his brief on desegregation to the United States Supreme Court last week.

The Attorney General, with the help of Assistant Attorney General Ralph E. Odum, filed a brief in behalf of the state of Florida, asking the Supreme Court to give the state time to implement the program. Oral arguments will be heard by the Supreme Court on Dec. 8.

Although not agreeing with the Attorney General in principle, a consensus of the responsible leadership agreed that the Attorney General's brief was a sincere attempt on the part of the state's leadership to work out a positive approach to a most serious problem.

PERSONS PREPARED to pass hasty opinion on the plea for gradualism in dealing with school integration in Florida were asked to read the entire brief and study it carefully.

Ervin was praised by several Negro leaders for his courage in filing the brief, in face of tremendous pressure, to follow the lead of other states which have refused to answer the Supreme Court.

One outstanding educator revealed that Attorney Genera Ervin had weighed carefully the advice and information given him by responsible Negro leadership throughout the state. It was the consensus of several persons interviewed by the Courier that Attorney General Ervin's filing of the brief was the first positive step toward confronting the problem of desegregation in the state.

In summarizing his brief, Attorney General Ervin said:

"The problem involves, among other things, the collective conscience or mores of our white citizens regarding segregation.

"The conscience, simply stated, although of varying degrees of intensity, is that our people are not ready for desegregation.

"That was demonstrated conclusively by the survey which we made in Florida. This conscience is ingrained because it was nurtured and cherished throughout many geenrations as a way of life, and as an aspect of individual freedom reserved by the people of each state from the specific grants of power made by them to the Federal Government.

"It is deep-seated and its roots rest in fears of intermarriage of the races, racial differences, superstitions, history, traditions and customs.

"This community conscience, until the May 19 ruling, had long years of legal sanction.

"Elimination of this legal sanction by no means eradicates the underlying collective conscience of the people in this field. This attribute of the problem simply cannot be successfully solved overnight," the brief contended.

THE BRIEF pointed out several factors that would have to be contended with if the U. S. Supreme Court ordered implementation of the desegregation ruling. Major problem would be the change in the state constitution and laws. There would also be the problem of change over for buses.

Several of the problems referred to in the brief left room for a great deal of discussion. One was the matter of Florida's teacher scholarships.

Questioned about the statement that Negro teachers would suffer from implementation of the desegregation ruling, a leading Florida educator indicated that this was true, but in the long run a desegregated school system would improve the lot of all concerned after the initial problems of revamping the school systems was completed.

The Courier is now studying the brief and will make a full report on its analysis within the next two weeks.

Desegregation Brief Filed By Fla. Atty

Informer Houston, Texas Sat. 10-9-54

WASHINGTON — The attorney general of Florida filed the first brief on behalf of the state in the desegregation cases here Friday, asking the court for "gradual and discretionary adjustment of its school system to conform to the decision outlawing segregation."

Then the brief warned the court that violence would probably flare up if immediate and complete integration were attempted.

The attorney general's brief also said that his office had spent $10,000 checking opinions to find that three-fourths of the whites are against the Supreme Court's decsion outlawing segregation; the majority of the Negroes are in favor of it; that only the minorities of each race are in favor of immediate desegregation; the attorney general further argued that segregation had existed in Florida schools since 1885, and the people had thought "separate but equal" was constitutional; that the state had built a system where it spends annually $138 million and affects the welfare of 650,000 children. He further said he did not believe this system could be wiped out overnight.

Nowhere does the attorney general point out any right that Florida or the whites have to continue to abuse the rights of the Negro minority by segregation, which the Supreme Court has already held is void and contrary to the Constitution. All of his argument is to the effect that "we have been doing this so long, we should be permitted to do it longer."

Florida files brief for school hearing

Afro American Sat. 10/6/54 Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—Florida, through its Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin, Monday, filed its brief as friend of the court for the Dec. 6 hearing before the U.S. Supreme Court of the elimination of segregation in the nation's public schools.

The court ruled on May 17 that segregation in the schools was unconstitutional, but it ordered the cases restored to the docket for further argument on whether it should order immediate or gradual integration of pupils or whether it should issue a detailed decree, refer the cases to a special master or remand them to the trial courts.

Florida is the first of the seven states which asked permission to file amicus curiae briefs for the hearing that has done so. The deadline for briefs to be filed is Nov. 15.

— o O o —

OTHER STATES which are to file such briefs are Tennessee, North Carolina, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Maryland and Texas.

The four states involved in the cases—Kansas, Delaware, South Carolina and Virginia—and the District of Columbia did not have to request permission to file briefs inasmuch as they were parties to the litigation.

Ervin argues in the 243-page Florida brief that "a decree of immediate desegregation or even a decree of a period of short delay which does not permit a large degree of local determination" will threaten the very existence of the public school system in the state.

He specifically urged the Supreme Court to permit a gradual changeover from segregated to integrated schools and remand the cases to the trial courts for them to enter detailed decrees.

— o O o —

THE BRIEF presents a "vicious circle" argument in an effort to have the United States Supreme Court delay putting into effect its decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

One of the arguments is that integration should be delayed because of the wide difference in the achievement levels of colored and white 12th grade pupils who seek to qualify for state scholarships for teacher training.

What Ervin overlooks is the well-established fact that the difference is due not to any inherent inferiority of colored people but to educational opportunities afforded colored students which are inferior to those afforded white students in the same community.

In fact, the argument of the Florida attorney general supports the position of the NAACP that integration should be ordered at the beginning of the next school year.

— o O o —

KANSAS ALSO filed with the Supreme Court a supplemental brief. It took the same position it did in its original brief that the court should remand the cases to the trial courts for the issuance of final decrees.

The NAACP, which prosecuted the school segregation cases, it is believed, will adhere to its original position that colored children are entitled to immediate admission to public schools without distinction as to race or color and that there is no equitable basis for delaying enforcement of the rights of colored children in the states affected by the Supreme Court ruling.

The NAACP also is expected to adhere to its declination to suggest terms for a decree which would permit an effective grandual changeover from segregated to nonsegregated schools.

— o O o —

REASONS FOR seeking delay of the effect of the decrees in the five cases must come from the school officials and state officers involved in the five cases, the NAACP maintains.

In the absence of any such reasons, the school officials against whom the suits were originally filed should be required to discharge their obligations as state officers without drawing distinctions based on race and color, the NAACP maintains.

The Department of Justice also is expected to adhere to its original position that the Supreme Court should remand the cases to the lower courts with directions to carry out the court's decision "as expediently as the particular circumstances permit."

The court is no longer faced with the problem of gradual integration in three of the five cases. These involve the cases of Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

FLORIDA FILES BRIEF ON SCHOOL SEGREGATION

WASHINGTON — The brief of the State of Florida in the five school segregation cases was on its way to the clerk of the U.S. Supreme Court as the court began its 1954 term Monday. It was the first of the briefs to be filed as friends of the court.

Florida First To File Brief in School Cases

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA—As the United States Supreme Court began its 1954 term Monday the brief of the state of Florida in the five school segregation cases was on its way to the clerk of the court.

The Florida brief was the first to be filed under the invitation of the court to states requiring or permitting segregation in public education to participate in the further argument of the cases as friends of the court.

The court ruled May 17 that segregation in public education is unconstitutional. But it ordered the cases restored to the docket for further argument of two questions.

These questions are whether the court should order immediate or gradual integration of colored and white children in schools which have been previously run on a segregated basis, and whether it should issue a detailed decree, refer the cases to a special master for his recommendations of terms of the final decree, or send the cases back to the trial courts with directions to enter decrees.

At the same time, the court again invited the Attorney General of the United States to participate and gave the Attorneys General of states requiring or permitting segregation to appear upon request to do so, submit printed briefs and take part in the oral argument.

Seven states filed motions for leave to file briefs as friends of the court. They are Tennessee, Florida, North Carolina, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Maryland, and Texas. Only three of them, however, indicated that they intended to participate in the oral arguments.

On the other hand, only three states have definitely indicated that they had no intention of participating in the cases in any way. They are Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi.

As the cases before the court are from Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware, Kansas, and the District of Columbia, the Attorneys General of those states and the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia did not have to request permission to participate.

The briefs of the parties in the five cases as well as of the Attorneys General who will participate as friends of the court are due to be filed by November 15. The oral argument before the court will begin December 6.

In its brief, mailed from Tallahassee, Florida, asks the court for time to work out the problems of desegregation. Unless it is granted, Attodney General Richard W. Ervin of Florida states, "we frankly doubt whether we can save our public school system.

Ervin argues in the 243-page brief that " a decree of immediate desegregation or even a decree of a period of short delay which does not permit a large degree of local determination" will threaten the very existence of the public school system in Florida.

"Many think that our democracy is now face to face with the toughest job in practical government it has ever had to tackle without going to war," Ervin said. "Some way must be found to protect the constitutional rights of a minority without ignoring the will of the majority.

"We think the only answer is time and the patient efforts of those who value democracy more than their personal longings and private prejudices. We hope that this court will accept this answer."

Ervin specifically urged the Supreme Court to permit a gradual changeover from segregated to integrated schools and remand the cases to the trial courts for them to enter detailed decrees.

Florida has maintained a segregated school system since 1885 on the theory that "separate but equal" schools complied with the Constitution, Ervin said. The dual system costs Florida $138,895,123 a year for educating 650,285 children.

"We do not believe," Ervin said, "that the system, which took over half a century to develop, can be transformed overnight."

Ervin said the Florida legislature would have to revise the state's laws compelling race segregation in the public schools since all administrative procedures were based on a segregated system. Repeal of the Jim Crow statutes, he added, would only create a vacuum.

"The consequent immediate inrush of turbulent ideas into this vacuum without legal guidance or administrative regulation might well cause a tornado which would devastate the entire school system," Ervin argued.

A survey, conducted by him at a cost of $10,000, Ervin said, disclosed that—

1. Three-fourths of the white leaders of the state who were polled disagreed with the Supreme Court's decision.

2. A large majority of the colored people praised the ruling as being right.

3. Only a small minority of both white and colored leaders advocated complete and immediate integration.

4. A majority of both white and colored leaders expect serious violence and doubt the ability of peace officers to maintain law and order, especially in Dade County (Miami), if immediate and complete integration is ordered.

5. Colored teachers might face difficulty in getting employment in integrated schools, resulting in economic hardship, and colored pupils also "would find themselves set apart, not only by color but by quality of their work," due to differences in economic and cultural background.

Ervin urged the Supreme Court to instruct the courts to which the cases would be returned with specific references to rules governing the transfer of pupils to mixed schools.

One of the suggested rules would require application to be made well in advance of the school term and the applicant to reside in the school district to which he sought admission.

Kansas also filed with the Supreme Court a supplemental brief. It took the same position it did in its original brief that the court should remand the cases to the trial courts for the issuance of final decrees.

The NAACP, which prosecuted the four state school segregation cases, it is believed, will adhere to its original position that colored children are entitled to immediate admission to public schools without distinction as to race or color and that there is no equitable basis for delaying enforcement of the rights of colored children in the states affected by the Supreme Court ruling.

The NAACP also is expected to adhere to its declination to suggest terms for a decree which would permit an effective gradual changeover from segregated to nonsegregated schools.

7 states file briefs in 5 cases

Dixiecrat states to shun hearing on integration

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Seven southern states have asked the Supreme Court for permission to file briefs as friends of the court in the five school segregation cases.

In ruling that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, May 17, the court restored the cases to the docket and requested counsel to present further arguments on how and when it should order the change-over from segregated to non-segregated schools.

The attorneys general of Florida, Maryland and Arkansas definitely informed Harold B. Willey, clerk of the Supreme Court, that they wished to file written briefs and participated in the oral argument.

—o O o—

THE OTHER four states — Tennessee, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Texas — did not state whether they wished to take part in the oral argument. At the Supreme Court it was presumed that they would or otherwise they would not have sought permission by Sept. 15, the court's deadline for requests, to appear. There briefs are due by Oct. 1.

Mr. Willey is writing to find out from the attorneys general of the latter group of states what they wish to do.

The attorneys general of Virginia, South Carolina, Delaware and Kansas did not have to request permission to participate in the cases since four of the cases before the court are from their states.

—o O o—

THE OTHER CASE involves the District of Columbia; and the corporation counsel will represent the District in the additional argument.

A spokesman for the Tennessee state administration said at Nashville, Wednesday, that it had filed its notice merely to protect the state's right to participate if it finally decided to do so.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook of Georgia said in Atlanta that three other southern states, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana, were joining Georgia in boycotting the hearings.

ATTY. GEN. T. J. GENTRY of Arkansas, Monday, agreed to a request from the State Board of Educattion to file a brief as a friend of the court in the five school segregation cases.

The attorney-general told the board that the only question now before the Supreme Cout is: "How do you want the Supreme Court to order you to integrate white and colored students?"

The decision to file the brief was brought to a head by the recent petitions for immediate desegregation filed with 13 school boards by the Arkansas Conference of NAACP Branches.

—o O o—

THAD D. WILLIAMS of Little Rock issued the following statement in reply to the board:

"On May 17, 1954, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States prohibited the separation of white and colored children in public schools.

"This ruling was an interpretation of the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, which was adopted on July 28, 1868, by 30 of the then United States; therefore segregation in public schools is not only illegal now but has been since July 28, 1868.

"Still more, the Arkansas statute providing for segregation in public schools is likewise unconstitutional now and has been since July 28, 1868."

—o O o—

ELEVEN COLORED students at Charleston, Ark., have been attending school with white children there since Aug. 23, the president of the school board disclosed Monday.

H. M. Osborn said the move was made as an economy measure.

Osborn, who previously had refused to say whether Charleston would desegregate its schools this fall, said the district would save about $4,000 this year in tuition and transportation costs in sending Charleston's colored pupils to Fort Smith schools.

Charleston is the first school in Arkansas to end segregation—a distinction previously given to Fayetteville High School when five colored girls enrolled there.

—o O o—

SEVERAL HUNDRED persons in Fort Smith, Ark., both white and colored, met Monday night at the junior high school there in an open discussion on the question of desegregating the public schools.

Jack Shropshire, a Little Rock attorney, representing the NAACP at the meeting, asked that Fort Smith schools be integrated at once.

2 Ask to File In Carolina School Case

Post Times Herald Sat. 11-13-54

Two Georgia attorneys yesterday asked permission of the Supreme Court to file a brief as friends of the court in response to the high tribunal's request for further arguments on how and when public school segregation should end. P-4

Louis L. Brown, of Fort Valley, Ga., and Robert W. Wesley, of Macon, asked leave to file as amici curiae in the South Carolina case. In their request, the lawyers said Wesley's wife was principal of the Paul Stephens Elementary School in Bibb County, Ga.

The manner and circumstances under which the Board of Education of Bibb County was granted its charter by the Georgia Legislature is relevant to the questions before the high tribunal, the attorneys said.

So far, only Florida and Kansas have filed briefs for the new hearings on December 6. The deadline for filing briefs has been set for Monday.

School segregation ending in Topeka

Afro-American Sat. 10-16-54

U.S.

WASHINGTON (NNPA)— The Topeka (Kan.) Board of Education, Saturday, reported to the U.S. Supreme Court that it is ending racial segregation in its elementary schools.

It said that it was doing so "as rapidly as practicable" with full co-operation and acceptance by both white and colored pupils, teachers and parents.

The Topeka school board is a party to one of the five cases in which the Supreme Court ruled that segregation in public education is unconstitutional, but restored the cases to the docket for further argument on how and when it should order its decision carried into effect.

— o O o —

IN ITS BRIEF filed Saturday, the Topeka board adheres to the position it took in its supplemental brief, filed Nov. 27.

It was that if segregation was held unconstitutional, the case should be remanded to the Federal District Court with instructions to reverse its judgment and enter a decree ordering segregation ended "as rapidly as practicable."

It repeated its suggestion that by such a decree, the lower court could retain jurisdiction to enforce the decree and, if a more specific decree became necessary, it would have the power to amplify its decree.

— o O o —

THE TOPEKA board passed a resolution Sept. 3, 1953, to end segregation in the elementary schools "as rapidly as practicable." Five days later it passed a motion to end segregation in the Southwest and Randolph schools.

Baltimore, Md.

Since then, the brief states, the board has taken its "second far-reaching step or stride" toward ending segregation by approving and adopting the recommendations of the superintendent of schools last Jan. 20.

These recommendations called for ending segregation in certain other school districts.

It provided that colored children affected by the desegregation be not furnished transportation but be given the privilege of attending the nearest colored school if his parents wanted him to do so.

— o O o —

AS A RESULT of these recommendations, effective at the opening of school this fall, 12 schools are integrated, two are partially integrated, five continue as all-white schools, and four continue as all-colored schools.

The brief states that the Topeka board has requested the superintendent to recommend the third step to end segregation early in 1955. Administrative problems are being satisfactorily solved, the brief also states.

NO-BRIEF

Kansas Agrees With South On Gradual School De-Segregation

Call p. 1 Fri. 11-26-54

Kansas City, Mo.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The state of Kansas is in accord with southern states in arguing that the United States Supreme Court should permit a gradual changeover from segregated to nonsegregated schools.

Although it is not a party to the litigation, Kansas has filed a brief on the questions of how and when the court should order its decision against segregation in the public schools carried out.

The state of Kansas entered the case after it had been appealed to the Supreme Court until late in 1952. The suit was brought against the Topeka board of education.

The state intervened in the district court and defended a state law which permits cities of the first-class to maintain segregated elementary schools. The district court upheld the statute.

Fail To File Brief

After the case was appealed to the Supreme Court, the state of Kansas and the Topeka board of education neither entered an appearance nor filed a brief until after the court on November 24, 1952 requested the attorney general to "advise whether the state's default shall be construed as a concession of invalidity."

The Topeka board of education had informed the court that it did not propose to appear in oral argument or file a brief.

The Supreme Court requested the state to appear "because of the national importance of the issue presented and because of its importance to the state of Kansas."

Later a brief on behalf of the state of Kansas and the Topeka board of education and Paul E. Wilson, assistant attorney general of Kansas participated in the oral argument.

The Topeka board of education filed a brief several weeks ago on the questions of how and when the court should order its decision carried out.

Segregation Going Rapidly

The brief, filed by Peter F. Caldwell, counsel for the Topeka school board, pointed out that segregation is being ended in Topeka elementary schools "as rapidly as practicable" and asserted that there is no need for the court to enter a decree directing the particular steps to be taken to terminate segregation in the Topeka schools.

The state, in a brief filed Tuesday, November 16, says the court should enter a decree seeking to reconcile the personal and present interests of the colored citizens, whose constitutional rights have been violated, with the public interest in safeguarding the integrity of the public schools.

It expresses doubts that a judicial plan for the desegregation of schools is legal, practical, or feasible. It says the court cannot tell the Topeka board of education what nonsegregated system will be substituted for the former segregated system, nor can it prescribe the course to be followed, in effecting the substitution.

Want Maximum Latitude

These are determinations which must be made with reference to ocal conditions and by local officials, who are familiar with conditions and responsible for local educational policy and the administration of the school system, the brief asserts.

Kansas urges that local officials be given "the maximum latitude consistent with the rights of appellants (colored children and their parents who sued the Topeka board of education)."

"We believe that the only order necessary in the Kansas case," says the state's brief, "is one reversing the district court and remanding the case to that court with directions to enter a proper decree."

The state suggests that the district court be directed to retain jurisdiction until such time as segregation in the Topeka schools is finally ended.

"We accept without reservation or equivocation" the court's decision," Kansas declares.

The state also assures the court that the resources of the state government will be employed to carry out the decision in Kansas public schools.

It says the Kansas case may be the least complex of the five pending cases. Segregation in public education has never been widespread in Kansas communities, the brief states.

"Traditionally, Kansans abhor inequality," the brief declares.

Except in the case of elementary schools in cities of the first class, the brief states, Kansas law prohibits school authorities from making racial distinctions.

Aside from the supreme court decision, and through the normal exercise of local autonomy, the brief states, "accelerated adjustment" from existing segregated systems to a nonsegregated system has been in progress throughout the State.

Not A Moot Question

"Indeed, it might well be argued that the instant case is moot by reason of the action of the Topeka board of education," the brief says.

Segregation has never existed in Kansas as a matter of state policy, the brief states, and the termination of segregation in Kansas will not be the occasion for any policy adjustment at the state level.

Kansas points out that no provision of its constitution is affected by the decision, and there is no need for state legislation to provide for or implement the alteration of any policy established by the State Department of Public Instruction or any other state administrative agency.

Desegregation "will produce no cultural problem, nor will it disrupt an established way of life," the brief states.

The brief adds that there has been no significant amount of protest by any group of Kansas citizens to the elimination of segregated schools. "The prevailing attitude has been one of approval," says the brief.

Time For Adjustment

The problems incident to desegregation will be encountered on the local level only, the brief states. "At the same time," the brief adds, "they are problems that cannot be resolved forthwith by resolutions of boards of education or even by decrees of the court.

"Time will be required for deliberation, for decision and for adjustment."

Progress made toward abolishing segregated schools in Kansas, reported in the brief follows:

Since Sept. 6, 1953, Topeka has integrated 12 of its schools, partially integrated two, and still has five all-white and four all-colored schools. A total of 123 colored students are now attending mixed elementary schools.

Hutchinson Always Open

Of the 12 cities authorized by Kansas law to maintain segregated schools, one of them, Hutchinson, never maintained such schools.

Wichita and Pittsburg abandoned segregated schools in 1952. Six other cities in the past year have begun or completed the process of desegregating their public schools.

In Atchison, 13,000 population, 10 percent colored, on the Kansas-Missouri border, 25 percent of the colored school population are attending mixed schools. Desegregation is due to be completed by Sept. 1, 1955.

One colored person has been employed in Atchison as a classroom teacher teaching predominantly white sixth grade classes. School administrators anticipate that all colored teachers presently employed will be assimilated into the integrated system.

Teacher In Lawrence

Lawrence, seat of the State university, population 24,000, 7 percent colored. The board of education after the decision of May 17 ordered segregation ended in all of its public schools.

A colored teacher was employed to teach special classes in the junior high schools and physical education in the elementary schools. All of her classes are attended by predominantly white students.

Lawrence had been in the process of assimilating colored students into white schools since 1916.

Leavenworth, population of more than 20,000, 10 percent colored, at present has two elementary schools for colored children and nine for whites only.

The first step toward complying with the decision of May 17 was to admit, during the school year 1954-55, kindergarten and first-grade pupils to the schools nearest their homes regardless of race.

The school board intends to extend this policy next year to the second or higher grades.

In Kansas City

Kansas City, population 130,000, 20.5 percent colored, prior to the present school year had seven elementary schools, one junior high and one high school for 1,600 colored pupils, while 22 schools were attended by 23,000 white students.

The plan adopted by the Kansas board of education permitted colored pupils in kindergarten and grades 1, 6, 7, 10, 11 and 12 to enter the school of their choice within normal geographical limitations.

Because the bulk of the colored population is concentrated in one section of the city, the end of compulsory segregation will not eliminate schools attended exclusively by colored students.

A total of 233 colored students are now attending mixed schools and about 1,000 more live in areas where integration is now in process.

Parsons, population about 15,000 less than 10 percent colored, prior to the current year, had four white elementary schools and one colored. Segregation was eliminated in three of four ward elementary school areas at the beginning of the 1954-55 school year.

N.C. to File Segregation Brief Relating to 'Compliance' Angle

Total Freedom of Action in Future Objective of Tar Heel State Move

By JAY JENKINS
Staff Writer, Raleigh News and Observer
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Raleigh, N.C., Sept. 12—Although not a party to any of the school segregation suits, North Carolina will file a brief with the U.S. Supreme Court next month, Gov. William B. Umstead and Attorney General Harry McMullan have decided.

The decision came following a conference between the governor, McMullan and three attorneys on a special segregation committee which is helping draft the state policy on the issue.

Gov. Umstead and McMullan said that, in their opinion, the filing of the brief will not make North Carolina "a party to the pending cases." This had been the question that worried McMullan worried: Would entering the case with a brief make the state subject to any further decree made by the court?

Objective of Brief

The Institute of Government in Chapel Hill, in a report to the governor, strongly urged that a brief be filed in October on grounds that no other state could adequately present North Carolina's case. Also, the institute pointed out:

"[The state] need commit itself to nothing. It need only explore the possibilities for action, examine the possible general principles relating to the law of compliance,' and ask the court to sanction those principles which may appear to the state to be both feasible and legal. Such a step would leave open a course for total freedom of action in the future."

It is expected that North Carolina's brief, instead of proposing a concrete plan for enforcing the segregation decision, will plead for more time.

There was another segregation development in the town of Stanley, Gaston County, on the first day of school. Last year, the county board of education closed the Negro school in Stanley and transferred the students to Dallas, six miles away.

When the school buses rolled into Stanley to pick up the children and transport them to Dallas, 75 children were along the road. They smiled and waved to the bus drivers, but the buses drove away empty.

Reason Behind Boycott

Parents said the boycott of the buses was a protest over the failure of the county to build a new Negro school in Stanley. Gaston School Supt. Hunter Huss, noting that the Dallas school had been expanded to care for Stanley pupils, said: "We can't build a $250,000 school plant for just 75 students and eight teachers."

Huss said he believed there was another reason for the boycott. It appears, he said, Negro parents in Stanley are asking that their school be integrated with the white school there. "I'll let things ride for awhile," he added.

Meanwhile, an order has gone out to Catholic hospitals and schools in North Carolina to admit Negroes. It was dispatched by the Most Rev. Vincent S. Waters, bishop of the Diocese of Raleigh, which includes all of the state except Gaston County.

To the hospital superintendents, Bishop Waters wrote:

"Open all facilities of our Catholic hospitals to Catholic Negroes as far as extra room may permit. Permit qualified Negro physicians and surgeons to take care of these patients whenever possible, especially by offering opportunities for work to Negroes to help solve their problems."

Integration of Catholics

School superintendents were told:

"Beginning with the fall semester of 1954 our Catholic parochial high schools of the Diocese of Raleigh will register and accept for classwork all Catholic high school students no matter to what race they belong, provided that they are Catholics and qualified for high school work . . . The students of the different races accepted under this regulation are to be limited to Catholics only."

At a meeting in Durham, a Methodist Youth Fellowship group, made up of young people from Eastern North Carolina, passed a resolution which said "the youth of this conference feels that segregation is un-Christian" and urged support of the segregation decision. The vote was 191 to 89 in favor of it.

A minority group dissented. "We believe a person can be a Christian and support segregation as a social pattern," said this group, "and we believe that a segregated pattern offers both races the best means of racial development."

State to File Segregation Brief With Supreme Court In October

An official statement that North Carolina will file a brief with the U. S. Supreme Court when that tribunal hears arguments on how to put into effect its decision declaring public school segregation to be unconstitutional came yesterday from Governor Umstead and Atty.-Gen. Harry McMullan.

The announcement followed conferences with Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, chairman of the Governor's Special Advisory Committee, and the three lawyers on that committee—Judge L. R. Varser of Lumberton, William T. Joyner of Raleigh and Fred B. Helms of Charlotte.

Although the group was not unanimous in its thoughts on the best procedure, the announcement, issued by the Governor's office, said that "after thorough consideration of all the facts and problems involved, the Governor and the Attorney General reached the conclusion that a brief should be filed."

In arriving at that decision, they adopted the advice contained in a report prepared for the Governor by the Institute of Government, which acted in response to his request. The Institute suggested in the report that North Carolina participate in the hearings on procedure for implementing the decision because "it is at least questionable that North Carolina's interests would be adequately represented by other parties to the litigation."

Whether North Carolina will participate in the oral arguments in the segregation cases and whether the Attorney General will have assistance—perhaps from the lawyer members of the advisory committee—in preparing the brief were not answered in the Umstead-McMullan announcement. The Governor said it would be up to McMullan to decide whether to take part in the oral arguments, and McMullan could not be contacted last night.

The states actually involved in the segregation cases before the Supreme Court are South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas and Delaware, plus the District of Columbia. However, when it handed down its unanimous decision that segregation is unconstitutional the court said that other states which enforce segregation in their public schools would be permitted to appear in the cases as friends of the court. The court will hear arguments in October on the question of how to enforce the segregation ruling, and attorneys general of the various states have until October 1 to file their briefs and until September 15 to apply for permission to do so.

N. Carolina Asks Slow School Order

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 14 (AP)—The State of North Carolina today asked the U. S. Supreme Court to put its forthcoming decree on how to end separation of whites and Negroes in public schools into effect slowly. The state said in a brief that an order ending segregation immediately would threaten racial violence.

In effect, the state asked the high court not to frame one all-encompassing decree to take care of all problems raised in all localities.

Rather, asked the state, let Federal District Courts frame standards to fit local conditions.

The state referred to the late Justice Jackson's suggestion that to send the cases back to lower courts without standards for guidance in further proceedings would mean a generation of litigation.

"If so," said the brief, "such a result is far preferable to a generation of strife outside the courts and of chaos inside the schoolroom."

HIGH COURT URGED TO GO SLOW ON BIAS

North Carolina's Brief Cites Threat of Violence in Fast Ending to Segregation

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 14 (AP)—The State of North Carolina today asked the United States Supreme Court to put its forthcoming decree on how to end segregation in public schools into effect slowly.

The state said in a brief that an order ending it immediately would increase the danger of racial violence. In effect, the high court was requested not to frame one all-encompassing decree to take care of all problems raised in all localities.

Rather, North Carolina asked, let Federal district courts frame standards to fit local conditions.

The state referred to the late Justice Robert H. Jackson's suggestion that to send the cases back to lower courts without standards for guidance in further proceedings would mean a generation of litigation.

"If so," the brief said, "such a result is far preferable to a generation of strife outside the courts and of chaos inside the schoolroom.

"It must be frankly stated at the outset that this brief is not intended to present any solution to the extremely delicate and dangerous problem which has arisen by reason of the Supreme Court's decision."

The Supreme Court ruled last May 17 that segregation in public schools was unconstitutional. It will hear arguments beginning Dec. 6 on what kind of a decree it should issue putting its ruling into effect.

The North Carolina brief contained 188 pages, including 141 of exhibits. It was signed by Harry McMullan, Attorney General, and T. Wade Bruton, Ralph Moody, Claude L. Love and I. Beverly Lake, assistant attorney general.

Although North Carolina was not party to the original cases in which segregation was ruled unconstitutional, it had until tomorrow to file a brief, as a friend of the court, on how desegregation should become effective.

Violence Is Feared

A major part of the state's exhibits were concerned with answers to questionnaires sent to county and city school superintendents and police officials.

In essence the questions were: Would immediate desegregation work and would it work without violence?

An overwhelming majority of answers were that it would not work in North Carolina and that it would lead to violence, the brief said. It added:

A decree that may be workable under conditions prevailing elsewhere may have grave and far reaching consequences if applied in this state.

The brief pointed to the diversity between North Carolina and other states. This included:

¶The number of Negroes in proportion to whites.

¶The inter-mixture of White and Negro homes throughout rural areas.

¶The number of Negro teachers employed.

The petition states that "A spirit of good will and helpfulness has been increasingly present in recent years where agitators have not interfered. . .

"The members of the two races signing this petition wish to live on terms of peace and good will and helpfulness with one another under a program of separateness in social life."

Let 'Local' Judges Implement Desegregation, N.C. Suggests

U.S. District Jurists Best Qualified To Work Out Problem, Brief Contends

RALEIGH, N.C., Nov. 20—North Carolina's brief to the U.S. Supreme Court this week asked the court to go slow in putting its desegregation decree into effect, and urged that federal district judges be given authority to supervise it.

District judges who know local conditions, the brief said, should be given authority to implement the decree in the light of those conditions. The alternative to gradual desegregation, it added, could be destruction of the public school system and violence.

No specific plan was advanced by the brief, which contained 188 pages, including 141 pages of exhibits. It was signed by Atty. Gen. Harry McMullan and four assistants.

In Nature of Report

Except for a few statistical tables, the exhibits consisted of answers to questionnaires sent to city and county school superintendents and police officials. In substance, an overwhelming number of the answers said immediate desegregation would not work in the state and would lead to violence.

A blanket decree covering all states would be impractical, the brief argued, because conditions in North Carolina differ from those in other states and vary within the state itself.

"If the public schools and the public peace are to be preserved," the brief said, "the decrees to be entered in the South Carolina and Virginia cases must be framed to fit the conditions in the actual communities. Only a court conversant with local conditions and granted wide discretion can tailor the decree to fit the local variations."

As an example of the differences, the brief noted that recent demonstrations against integration occurred in Delaware, where there are 13 Negroes to every 87 white people. In North Carolina, the proportion of Negroes is one of four.

Cite Varied Conditions

"Even if every other condition were precisely the same, the intermixture of one Negro child with 99 white children in North Dakota is obviously a far different problem for a school administrator from the problem of commingling 71 Negro children with 29 white children in Northampton County, North Carolina, or 45 Negro children with 55 white children in Mississippi," said the brief.

Besides the proportions of Negroes to whites in the state, the brief said there were three other "major differences" that distinguish North Carolina from most of the states outside the South. These were listed as "the intermixture of white and Negro homes throughout rural areas, the general reaction to this court's present interpretation of the 14th Amendment, and the number of Negro teachers employed."

Northern cities with the largest Negro populations have the Negroes confined almost entirely to the cities and to certain areas in the cities, said the brief. "As a result, school district lines can be drawn so that there are relatively few Negro children in certain schools and relatively few white children in other schools." In such areas, the brief said, the questions presented are "largely academic."

Questionnaires sent to school superintendents showed that 128 out of 131 "believe they would find it impracticable to use Negro teachers," said the brief.

Give List of 'Dangers'

If immediate integration is ordered, said the brief, "at least the following dangers will result in North Carolina . . .

"(1) Public schools may be abolished; (2) If the public schools are not abolished, the presence in the same classroom of white children and Negro children may well bring about daily confusion, physical conflicts, ridicule of one group by another, and other conditions which will make it difficult . . .

"(3) If public schools are not abolished, parents financially able to do so may send their children to private schools, and public schools will come to be regarded as a dole to paupers, repulsive to everyone, black or white, having that pride and self-respect essential to good citizenship in a democracy;

"(4) Conflict in the schoolroom, on the playground, and between parents and teachers may lead to racial bitterness in a community and bring to North Carolina the bloody race riots which have disgraced cities and states where jutifiable racial pride among both Negroes and white people has been ignored."

Oklahoma Asks Gradual Future Integration Delay

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13 (AP).—Oklahoma told the Supreme Court today that the state's tax structure will have to be revised before it can integrate the races in its school system.

State Attorney General Mac Q. Williamson, in a "friend of the court" brief, asked the justices to bear this in mind when they issue orders as to how and when the Supreme Court's decision of last May must be carried out by the states. Arguments on this question are scheduled to start Dec. 6.

Mr. Williamson said Oklahoma's system of tax gathering for school purposes is "unique and different from most other 'segregation' states."

Funds for "majority" schools, usually for white children, are raised by ad valorem tax levies with each school district considered as a tax unit. On the other hand, so-called "separate schools," usually for Negroes, are financed by county-wide ad valorem tax levies.

Mr. Williamson pointed out that funds now being collected for the Negro schools would be unavailable for integrated schools, if a single system were ordered into effect immediately, because the state constitution forbids diversion of tax money from the original purposes of the levy.

Oklahoma Files Brief On Segregation, Cites Financial Problems

Financial problems to be faced in ending racial segregation in public schools were called to the attention of the Supreme Court yesterday in a brief filed by Oklahoma Attorney General Mac Q. Williamson.

Tomorrow is the deadline for filing briefs requested by the Court in preparation for oral arguments starting December 6 on methods of putting into effect the May 17 decision that segregation is unconstitutional.

Six States, including Virginia and the District of Columbia have not yet filed their briefs. District officials announced last week they will formally submit a report tomorrow that an integration program already is in operation here. Kansas and Florida submitted briefs last month.

Attorney General Tom Gentry of Arkansas said the brief he will file asks that Congress be given a chance to adopt appropriate legislation on integration. He also urges "gradual adjustments."

Fiscal Factors Cited.

The Oklahoma brief requested the Court to consider the State's financial problems as an important factor in setting a date for the end of segregation in public schools. It expressed confidence that the Court will make due allowance for State fiscal conditions.

"The problem of the State of Oklahoma in adjusting or changing the financial structure for maintaining public schools is a serious one, grounded on constitutional and statutory provisions of long standing, the uprooting of which in an effort to conform, will take time," Mr Williamson declared.

Noting that the laws of Oklahoma require segregation, he wrote:

"And principally because of both constitutional and legislative restrictions as to the financing of separate educational facilities for white and Negro children, it is probably more concerned than some, if not all, of the other States having segregation. . . . in whether this Court directs that existing segregated systems be stopped immediately or adjusted gradually to a procedure not based on color distinction."

Tax Structure Explained.

One of the financial problems in Oklahoma, he explained, was that district schools, usually for white children, are financed by a school district tax levy. Schools maintained mainly for Negro pupils are financed by a county-wide levy. The taxes are administered by different officials.

Mr. Williamson estimated that necessary fiscal legislation probably will be enacted before next June by the State legislature. He noted, however, that future financing of an integrated school system will require State constitutional amendments.

To file 'small' school brief

COLUMBIA, S.C. (ANP) — "Feeling that voluminous briefs would be too bulky for the Supreme Court's purpose," South Carolina will file a smaller and more current brief before the tribunal, boiling down and reiterating positions which have been stated before in the school segregation disputes.

Filed on behalf of Clarendon County, the brief is not expected to add anything new in the way of allegations. In fact, Robert McFigg Jr., attorney has said that the brief will contain no new material."

Clarendon County's school District 1 was the defendant in the original suit brought three and a half years ago to compel abandonment of racial separation in public schools.

Supreme Tribunal Urged to Permit Lower Court to Reopen Proceedings

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S.C., Nov. 20—As expected, the state of South Carolina, on its own behalf, did not accept the United States Supreme Court's invitation to file a brief in the segregation case, but the school district in Clarendon County, from which the suit arose, responded briefly, answering two of the questions asked by the highest tribunal.

Attorneys for the school district took the position that effective solution of the problems arising from he court's new doctrine "lies fundamentally in the legislative and administrative fields of governmental responsibility."

The court was urged to remand the case to the Federal District Court for further proceedings rather than to formulate a decree itself.

The State of South Carolina did not file a return because it has refrained from the start from becoming a party to the suit so as not to make a decree applicable immediately to all districts. As it stands, each district will have to be dealt with separately.

Question of 'Equity'

The two questions Clarendon School District attorneys answered had to do with equity powers of the court and whether or not the Supreme Court itself should formulate the decree.

In their conclusion the attorneys argued that "a decent respect for the sovereignty of the states affected, and a proper regard for the division of functions and responsibilities inherent in our system of government, warrant the judiciary in assuming that the legislative and administrative branches of the state government are capable of undertaking the solution of the problems confronting them under the 14th Amendment as now construed by the court, and should have the opportunity of so doing."

Said the school district attorneys, Robert McC. Figg Jr. and S. E. Rogers:

"The courts cannot compel the enactment of legislation or the adoption of administrative regulations; they cannot compel the levy of taxes or the making of appropriations. The courts act negatively in the decrees which they enter in such cases. They may annul, but they cannot create; they may prohibit, but they cannot devise affirmative solutions and command their adoption."

SOUTH CAROLINA

Comment on 'Invasion'

"There are those," they submitted, "who would like to see the Court invade the legislative and administrative fields by devising 'criteria of desegregation' to be included in its decrees in the pending cases, as conditions for the exercise of the equitable discretion of the lower courts, and hence in reality conditions for the exercise of the legislative and executive powers of the state governments."

The Clarendon District used the words of McGranery, attorney general under Truman, and of Brownell, the present attorney general, as arguments that the Supreme Court's new non-segregation doctrine should not be followed with a decree ending segregation immediately and that, exercising equity powers, it may permit an effective gradual adjustment.

Attorney General McGranery, who presented the original Department of Justice briefs in the case, had argued, it was pointed out, that "the fact that a system or practice is determined to be unlawful does not of itself require the court to order that it be abandoned forthwith."

Brownell Is Quoted

Attorney General Brownell, in his previous brief, had said: "it is one thing to direct immediate relief where a single individual seeks vindication of his constitutional rights in the relatively narrow area of professional and graduate school education, and an entirely different matter to follow the same course in the broad area of public school education affecting thousands of children, teachers and schools."

The present attorney general also was quoted as saying that, while the court has broad powers in granting judicial remedies, "the court has expressed a reluctance to enter decrees which would involve the judiciary in the administration of complete and detailed matters."

In the meantime the committee, named by legislative authority to suggest ways and means of meeting an adverse decree, resumed meetings this week to hear from special committees working since last July on certain phases of the problem.

States' school briefs ask for gradual adjustment'

Afro-American p. 21

Baltimore, Md.

Oct. 21-54

WASHINGTON

The general pattern of the school integration briefs, filed by states in the Supreme Court last week, was an appeal to the court for time for a "gradual adjustment" in the implementation of the May 17 decision ordering desegregation.

Only one brief, that from Virginia, hinted at resistance to the high court's decision. In capsuled form, the briefs were as follows:

SOUTH CAROLINA — South Carolina asked the court to remand the five school cases back to the lower courts forts from which they came for issuance of detailed decrees.

The brief states that the Supreme Court should issue no instructions to the lower courts on remanding the cases. "The lower courts are clearly in a better position to inquire into local conditions affecting the exercise of such powers than is this court," the brief states.

The Clarendon County case, the brief says, is a proper one for the Federal District Court to hold further proceedings on, to give school authorities an opportunity to present their problems fully and to appeal to the "equitable discretion" of that tribunal.

VIRGINIA — Virginia, urging the court to allow time for "gradual adjustment to new conditions," says in its brief, the decision has raised over the state "the spectre of impending educational chaos," which, if immediate "amalgamation of races" is ordered, will become a reality.

Hinting that schools may be closed if they are mixed racially, the brief says that if reasonable time is allowed, "without the heat of the emotion created by unreasonable haste,' the children of Prince Edward County may still go to school.

The people in many sections of the state have stated they will not consent to compulsory integration, the brief says. "Neither court decrees nor executive orders can force in those sections a result so basically opposed by a united majority."

OKLAHOMA — Oklahoma followed the other states in their appeal to the court for "reasonable time" and a "gradual adjustment" to the court's decision.

The brief also made mention of the financial problems that would allegedly be broght on by the compulsory changing of its segregated school system.

FLORIDA — The brief filed by Florida contained basically the apparent overall appeal in all the others. It urged the court to allow the states a "reasonable time" to make the changeover.

* * *

MARYLAND—Maryland urged "gradual adjustment,' with responsibility resting at the "lowest possible local level.

"Under no circumstances," the Maryland brief states, "should little children of any race be used as guinea pigs in experiments to support or destroy any one's social theories."

TEXAS— Texas agreed with other states that the Supreme Court should permit an effective "gradual adjustment" toward integration, because of the "complexities of the problems."

Such complexities, the brief states, include the unwillingness of Texans immediately to abide by the decision, the varying degrees in which different areas of the state would be affected and the results such a decision would have on the state's public school system.

"Any decree that affects Texas," the brief says, "must leave this administration (of the schools) in the local school districts unhampered."

U.S. BRIEF PROPOSES REASONABLE TIME TO END SCHOOL BIAS

Supreme Court Is Urged to Leave Specific Decrees to Lower Jurisdictions

By LUTHER A. HUSTON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The Eisenhower Administration told the Supreme Court today that it should give states and local communities a reasonable time to end racial segregation in the public schools.

The Government further said that specific decrees for ending the segregation should be left to the lower courts under general rules to be laid down by the high court.

In a brief filed today the Justice Department also said that the court should not fix a deadline that the areas affected by its segregation ruling would be required to observe.

However, "popular hostility" to desegregation is not a legal justification for failure to end it, the department said, adding:

"Racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional and will have to be terminated as quickly as feasible, regardless of how much it may be favored by some people in the community.

"There can be no 'local option' on that question, which has now been finally settled by the tribunal empowered under the Constitution to decide it."

States' Position Supported

The Justice Department's brief supported the position taken by ten states and the District of Columbia that a period of gradual adjustment to integrated schools should be permitted. The states and the District already have filed briefs in response to the court's invitation.

The tribunal unanimously ruled last May 17 that public-school segregation was unconstitutional. It set for argument during the present term the question of the nature and extent of the decrees it should formulate to implement that decision.

The arguments had been scheduled for Dec. 6, but the court announced postponement last Monday because the Senate has not confirmed President Eisenhower's nomination of Judge John Marshall Harlan of New York to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice Robert H. Jackson. The court said, in effect, that the issue should be settled by a full bench.

Since the Senate has postponed action on the Harlan nomination until the new Congress convenes in January, the arguments are not expected to be heard in the high court until well into the new year.

These are the "ground rules" the Justice Department told the court it should establish to guide the lower tribunals in formulating specific decrees:

¶That the lower courts shall enter orders directing the authorities in public schools subject to their jurisdiction to submit within ninety days a plan for ending segregation as soon as feasible.

¶That, unless a satisfactory plan is submitted and approved by the lower courts, "appropriate orders" shall be issued directing the end of segregation at the beginning of the next school term.

¶That on submission of a plan, the lower courts shall hold hearings promptly to determine whether the plan provides for transition to a non segregated school system as expeditiously as circumstances permit. In approving any proposed program, the court shall modify it as may be required and fix the earliest practicable date for completion of the program.

¶That the lower courts should require progress reports during the period permitted to end segregation in order to insure against unnecessary delay in the execution of the program.

¶That the Supreme Court retain jurisdiction for the purpose of making such further orders necessary for carrying out its mandate and to this end periodic reports should be required from the lower courts on actions taken to enforce compliance with the high court's ruling.

Press Conference Cited

This program would appear to conform to the ideas indicated by President Eisenhower at his news conference yesterday when he expressed the belief that the Supreme Court did not intend to be arbitararv in the procedures it would order for ending segregation.

It was indicated in informed quarters that the President had been apprised of the main provisions of the Justice Department's brief. The President's news conference comments were said to have been based on knowledg of the contents of the brief, rather than foreknowledge of what the Supreme Court would do.

The Justice Department had intended to withhold the filing of its brief for several days in view of the postponenment of the arguments. It became known that the decision to file late today stemmed from the President's statements yesterday.

The brief was signed by Herbert Brownell Jr., Attorney General; Simon E. Sokeloff, Solicitor General; J. Lee Rankin, Assistant Attorney General, and Philip Elman and Alan S. Rosenthal, special assistants to the Attorney General.

The document was filed in five cases pending in the court from specific school districts in South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

The court's rulings, however, were generally recognized as applying to seventeen states in which segregated schools are mandatory by state law and several other states in which segregation is legally permissive.

The Justice Department borrowed language from the Supreme Court's opinion to state that "the formulation of decrees in these cases presents problems of considerable complexity." It outlined many of the complexities.

Among them was the fact that many states would have to revise "state laws and regulations which were tailored to fit the needs of a segregated school system." Boundaries of school districts will have to be adjusted in many areas, school bus systems changed, and in some states new tax methods devised.

IN THE HEART of the Black Belt, Selma is facing up to the problem of school needs for whites and Negroes as few other towns of its size in the state is doing. Profoundly aware of many school problems, the Selma Board of Education has buckled down to the task of studying, meeting and solving some of them.

Joe Azbell

On Sept. 22, Selma's residents voted, is soldierly fashion, to add taxation that will help to provide these new facilities. In the face of two elections in Montgomery when additional taxation was curtly voted down by residents, the success of the Selma election showed the community's characterful responsibility.

And with the ruling of the Supreme Court abolishing segregation in the schools hanging heavy above all Black Belt counties, Selma is the first Black Belt community to make its own active survey of all needs and facilities from every viewpoint.

Unlike Montgomery, Selma operates its local schools under a city school board. The county schools are operated in an entirely different fashion by the Dallas Board of Education.

In the Selma board survey, which was published this year in an 87-page book, the entire picture of Selma's schools and their needs are focused by a "Committee of Selma Citizens." The book includes everything from history to peculiarities of the community and even some sharp comments which cut the quick of longtime Selmians.

The Old Social Order Changeth

IN A CHAPTER on the socio-economic background of the community, the book says: "These interviewed leaders feel there are in general three definite social strata. They feel that it is difficult to move from one stratum or layer to a higher one; nevertheless it can be accomplished through either the accumulation of wealth or through a willingness to patricipate in community activities. To the committee this tends to show the community is growing away from the Old South idea of family background, location of residence, length of residence, nationality or education. The people are very hospitable to newcomers and quickly accept them into the higher strata of society. They are much slower to accept into a higher social stratum those people who have been long-time residents of the area."

Negro Schools Admittedly Poor

ON NEGRO EDUCATION, the committee stated: "Negro school facilities and economic opportunities have been steadily bettered in the past few years. It is generally thought that the relationship between the two races is exceptionally friendly although this area has traditionally been one of the last strongholds of the Old South."

The authors minced no words either about the conditions of the schools or the curriculum. There are many recommendations for improvements in white schools, ranging from training for principals and teachers and overcrowded classrooms to the need for more educational aids.

But quite different from what outsiders might expect of a community that admits being a part of the Old South, the citizens committee tears into the conditions of Negro schools with gusto.

It lists 20 findings which include: no elementary supervisor of instruction coordinates the instructional program of schools; principals are often part-time teachers; no clerical personnel is employed in elementary schools; teachers are assigned duties for which they are poorly prepared; no specialist is employed to work with exceptional students; there is little planning for in-service training; classrooms are overcrowded; teachers cannot apply research findings in curriculum because of limited facilities; inadequate supply of all types of instructional materials in every classroom; only one school has tables and chairs to provide a homelike atmosphere for small children; there is a lack of library facilities and of library books; there is not enough playground equipment; there is an inadequate number of free textbooks; the health and nutrition program in the school falls short of average; Bible is not taught in the schools; the teaching of phonetics is not stressed; the three R's do not receive enough emphasis; public school music and art are not emphasized; cumulative records are not being kept for pupils; and there is no unity between the elementary and high schools.

Selma Meets The Challenge

THE SLEMA COMMITTEE goes into detail in this outstanding book on every phase of Selma's school life from needs to teacher personnel and the school buildings.

In discussing both white and Negro schools, it presents some new light for the entire community on every phase of the school system.

Faced with these facts concerning the needs in both white and Negro schools, the taxpayers of the city of Selma answered them in approving the referendum on a 5-mill ad valorem tax on Sept. 21.

In the election, 914 ballots were cast in favor of the five mill ad valorem tax levy against 680 opposed it. On the issue of a $700,000 school bond program, it was passed in a vote of 953 to 642.

Rex Morthland, Selma banker and president of the Selma School Board, said plans will proceed immediately for erecting the first of new schools. The first building will be a grammar school for whites. But tentative plans call for the construction of five other schools, one at a time, from now until 1960. These buildings will include three grammar and two junior high schools.

"We recognize there are many problems in the Selma school system. That was why this election was called. We want to do everything in our power to erase any problems we can and to work with the entire community to iron out the kinks so that we can point with pride to our schools as among the finest anywhere," Morthland said.

New Wine In An Old Bottle

ALREADY, SELMA HAS spent a half-million dollars on new Negro school improvements. The old Payne school was purchased — it had been used on a rental basis — and a cafeteria installed and the huge, modern Hudson Negro High School was erected.

"Our plans for the future construction of schools in Selma include facilities for both Negroes and whites," he said.

One of the strong points in the successful referendum was the helping hand received from educational organizations such as teacher groups and P-TA chapters throughout the city. Civic groups also joined in support of the additional taxation.

"I think that it shows real citizenship on the part of Selmians to vote for passage of additional taxation when the trend throughout the country is to oppose vigorously any mention of more taxes. I talked to one man who voted for the additional taxes who said it would cost him and his family $20,000 for the next 20 years. It did the same to many others who supported it," Morthland added.

Between 1947 and 1953, the white enrollments increased from 2,121 pupils to 2,531 pupils and by 1959 an estimated total of students will be 3,160. In enrollment of Negroes, the increase was from 2,283 in 1947 to 2,628 in 1953 and an estimated 3,300 will be enrolled by 1959.

He said at least 16 additional classrooms will be needed by 1959 in white schools and 39 additional ones in Negro schools.

All the main elementary and junior high school buildings are at least 30 years old and some buildings will have to be replaced.

There is a belief in Selma that the community can solve any of its problems by itself. In this way, the Old South town is reflecting a progressive New South viewpoint.

Up In De Nawth

ANGRY, rebellious citizens in several yankee and border states are keeping their children at home, picketing schools, turning away Negro students who apply for admission. This enables Deep South anti-integrationists to say "I told you so" and to again call attention to the Gulf of Pharisee lying between lip service to "equality" and its practical application in areas to the north of us.

Reports of revolt against integration have come from Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, and Ohio. Little Delaware has been most in the limelight. A big majority of students were kept away from Milford High School until school authorities rescinded an order permitting Negro children to attend. Delaware segregation advocates hailed this as the first triumph in their goal of preserving school segregation throughout the state.

Delaware is normally one of the most inconspicuous states in the Union. It is a state that you do not hear much about, one way or the other. It is the second smallest in area, only Rhode Island being smaller. With its 2,057 square miles, Delaware is only about 25% bigger than Alabama's Baldwin County. Population is 329,000.

Delaware is not a state that you think of offhand as a border state, or a state of divided sympathies in the Civil War, like Maryland or Kentucky or Missouri. There actually was not as much pro-Southern sentiment as in the other states mentioned.

YET Delaware was a slave state, and in that sense at least is, or was, a Southern state. The traditional boundary between North and South, between slave states and free states, in the eastern United States, was of course the Mason & Dixon Line, surveyed between 1763 and 1767. The famous line was the boundary between Maryland and Pennsylvania. A glance at the map will show that an eastward extension of the Maryland-Pennsylvania boundary would put all but the northern tip of Delaware south of the line.

Delaware is described as a state with "many Confederate sympathizers," especially in its southern part where Milford is located. But friends of the Rebels took it out mostly in sympathy—there is nothing recorded in the nature of an attempt to have Delaware secede, as was the case with Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri. On the contrary, the legislature promptly responded to President Lincoln's call for troops. Out of a population of only 112,000 in 1860 the state furnished 13,000 to 14,000 troops to the Union Army.

But Delaware retained school segregation, and in parts of it at least white parents are rebelling at integration in a way that smacks of Deep South attitudes.

Delaware is unique among the states in at least one respect. It was the only part of North America to be colonized by the Swedes—under the Swedish flag and as a colony of Sweden.

MARYLAND, with a much more "pro-Southern" overall record, has had some trouble with integration, but not as much, yet, as Delaware. This may be due to the fact that in Maryland integration has so far been undertaken only in the city of Baltimore, and not in smaller towns or rural areas.

WEST VIRGINIA, another scene of trouble, is sometimes listed as a Southern state. This classification is likely to infuriate the unreconstructed Secessionist, who regards West Virginians as deserters and renegades, since West Virgiina seceded from Virginia when Virginia seceded from the Union.

OHIO, where Negro students have been denied integrated registration, is of course an out and out yankee state. Ohio, however, had a fair share of pro-Southern "copperheads" in Civil War days.

It also has today its fair share of yankee hypocrites who preach one way and practice another. The state does not have school segregation, officially; they just turn away Negro students who try to register.

SEEING these things happen, you think again and again of the nine sociologists sitting upon the U.S. Supreme Court . . . and of what Andrew Jackson once roared: "John Marshall has made his decision—now let him enforce it!"

Integration Seen As Red Inspired

Supreme Court 'Artfully Duped,' Says Memphian

To The Commercial Appeal:

Statements made by Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, as quoted in the October 1 issue of The Commercial Appeal, compel comment.

The doctor has voiced opinions which increase the opinion of the writer that the matter of integration of the white and Negro races is communistically inspired.

When the doctor states that in his opinion "the South now stands in a position, in all probability, to determine whether the United States or Russia will become the leader of the world," he probably spoke the truth.

His statements that a large number of colored people are wavering between Russia and the United States and that he believed the South to be currently strong enough to bring about a decisive and constructive turn in the world situation are also probably true. However, it is not easily understandable how any native born citizen of the United States, white or colored, could be wavering in his allegiance to the United States where Russia or any other country may be concerned.

The writer does not accuse the doctor or anyone of being a communist, but it is not only regrettable but tragic that a peculiarly composite segment of our people, including our highest tribunal, have been so artfully and skillfully duped.

Our state and national leaders, for the greater part, seem to be blind to what is taking place and helpless to take any constructive action to forestall it.

Probably the most frequently heard cry of those promoting integration is "discrimination." The dictionary indicates there are two definitions of the word "discrimination."

One definition is "to separate (like things) one from another by discerning the minute differences; the other is "to make a difference in treatment or favor." Since the South and the nation as a whole are, and have been endeavoring for quite some time to improve the civil and educational status of Negroes it would seem that the first definition given above should be applicable.

It appears, instead, that it is the second definition of the word that is being stressed, which of course brings in the matter of social relationships. It should be borne in mind discrimination is an innate power that cannot be destroyed or controlled by legislation.

It was tried once before, in the case of prohibition, to legislate regulatory control over our personal habits and it failed miserably.

It is now being attempted to legislate regulatory impositions with respect to our social relationships, which will not work either.

For some 165 years we have lived under a constitution paramount in permitting free people to live together in harmony. That harmony was broken only once during all those years. Are we now going to be duped into a communistically-inspired plan to divide us and at the opportune time be taken over by the communist forces of the world? We wonder.

Keeping Schools Local

Schools have long been the chief activity of local government. A bigger part of local taxes goes to school boards than to any other branch of city and county government.

The parent-taxpayers want it that way, and they insist, properly, on having school boards responsive to local ideas.

This local power over schools is slipping away. More of the school money is now coming from state capitals, and with it is coming the control that money commands.

The change is being made rapidly. Local taxes paid 64 per cent of Tennessee school expenses as recently as 1940. By 1951 the local money paid only 34 per cent of the bills. In these same years, Arkansas' local school money slid from 53 per cent to 37 per cent and Mississippi's from 60 per cent to 41.

The same sort of revision is going on all over the nation, though at a slower pace.

Meantime, Federal money, and still more distant control, is rising. Tennessee's schools got 10.4 per cent of their money from Federal taxes in 1951. Only South Carolina got more (10.8 per cent) that year.

The Tax Foundation, Inc., (30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20) has issued a special report on this change in public school financing. The hope is that citizens, seeing the figures and understanding the trend, will act before it is too late.

The action may be taken reluctantly. One of the Tax Foundation's principal proposals is that property be assessed at nearer its real value instead of 50 per cent or less.

But local control of the schools has been such fundamental of our form of government that we doubt if the public is going to accept distant control at this late date.

Washington's School Example

The change-over from segregation to integration in the District of Columbia public schools is progressing with admirable calm. Some 98,000 children returned to classes this week without the slightest instance of disorder.

While the Washington plan does not envisage complete integration until September, 1955, a very substantial beginning has been made. All new pupils were assigned without regard to race; most of the national capital's 165 schools already have some classes with both Negro and white students. The details of the program are rather complex. This is understandable, for the minority race constitutes a 57 per cent majority of the school register. But the objective is simple and direct—to eliminate segregation from education in adherence to the constitutional principle stated by the Supreme Court.

President Eisenhower followed up the court's historic decision by instructing that the Federal District serve as a model for the rest of the country. What has resulted is a working example, the proof that desegregation can be accomplished with comparative swiftness even when the circumstances are admittedly difficult. The first requisite is determination, and here the District of Columbia obviously begins with a big advantage over, say, Mississippi. But the Washington plan also calls for careful planning that avoids confusion. This has been skillfully worked out by Superintendent Hobart M. Corning.

The fact that the program has gone into gear so easily demonstrates the value of intelligent preparation. When the Supreme Court begins next month to consider a practical timetable for ending educational segregation, it can point to the Washington example as evidence of success in operation.

The Mississippi Amendment

Despite encouraging progress toward ending racial segregation in Southern public schools this semester, the pro-segregation forces are still hard at work in many states. The Legislature of Mississippi, where the proportion of Negro to white children is largest of any state, has now approved an amendment to the state constitution designed to avoid racial integration by the drastic step of authorizing complete abolition of public schools. Under the amendment this could be done by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature. A majority vote could then set up a plan whereby individual counties and school districts, at local option, could abolish their schools and transfer state school property to private parties.

Fortunately, a number of factors make this development less immediately alarming than it looks. The amendment is to be submitted to Mississippi's voters at a special referendum scheduled for Dec. 21, and there is a strong undercurrent of opposition. It alarms local educators as an attack on a fundamental American principle. It controverts even the doctrine—specifically repudiated by the May Supreme Court decision—of "separate but equal public schools" supported by the Democratic gubernatorial aspirants in next year's campaign. Even if the voters do ratify it, no detailed plan for private schools has been officially advanced, and the actual transfer of public school properties would entail legal and economic obstacles that might well be prohibitive.

By the time the referendum's results are known, the Supreme Court hearings on actual implementation of de-segregation probably will have clarified the situation throughout the South, including Mississippi. Racial equality is what the majority of the American people want. Whether it comes slowly or swiftly, it will eventually be accepted in all the states.

PTA Statement

The Executive Board of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers yesterday issued the following statement on the school situation:

Because of the recent incidents occurring in the area of some of our schools, we, the members of the Executive Committee of the D. C. Congress of Parent and Teachers, wish to reaffirm our confidence in the support of the Board of Education and Dr. Corning in carrying out the ruling handed down by the Supreme Court in May, 1954.

We commend wholeheartedly the preliminary training program instituted by the Superintendent which has enabled administrators and faculty members to meet the present situation with understanding and good will.

We recognize the fine influence of parents as they try to solve problems in an orderly fashion within the framework of the laws of our land. While we deplore incidents in defiance of properly constituted authority, we are proud of the fact that the majority of students remained in school pursuing their educational responsibilities.

We commend Police Superintendent Murray and members of the Police Department for their forsight in setting up procedures to be used in case of need.

We urge all adults to furnish an example of responsible citizenship by cooperating with the school administration during this time of change.

Lest we forget, the President of the United States has asked that we set the pattrn for th Naion by an ordrly transition period in our public schools.

Regaining a Proper Perspective

The student demonstrations seem to be wearing themselves out as the authorities representing law and order move in and firmly take over. For the record and proper focus, it should be understood that only 2 per cent or less of the District's public school population of 103.334 took any part in the demonstrations or "strikes," and such demonstrations were confined to eight or nine out of 169 public schools, including those demonstrations, quickly ended, that reflected uncertainty more than deliberate intent of defiance by the children. There were, of course, many parents who kept their children at home, as a sensible precaution against involvement in disorder. The estimate of 2 per cent, mentioned above, is therefore probably excessive.

The police and the school supervisors, especially the principals and teachers at the stricken schools, have conducted themselves admirably. All of the schools remained open, and that fact calls for a special tribute of some sort to the children who remained in school and refused to be intimidated or bullied by their jeering schoolmates. It required a particular sort of courage and self-discipline to answer the school bell in all of the excitement, and these children who stayed in school, constituting an overwhelming majority, are more representative of the common sense of the community than the childish group which caused the trouble.

Superintendent of Schools Corning has put on notice the children, and their parents, who continue to defy the laws by unexcused absence from school. From now on the small groups parading the streets in search of further excitement will find that the police are abandoning the attitude of paternal tolerance shown during the first few days. Anybody can understand and forgive the impulses of children, in search of a lark and a day out of classes, that motivated many of the young demonstrators. But anybody can also understand, and insist upon, the important necessity of enforcing the laws and refusing to tolerate any suggestion of mob rule. Some of the children feel they have legitimate complaints. These should be carefully heard and investigated by the school authorities, and the proper procedure in this respect has been exemplified at McKinley. By that process the facts can be sifted from the dangerous fiction, spread in the form of rumor and whispered hearsay, that has been the source of much of the trouble.

Letters to the Editor

Virginia and the Court

Several years ago a prominent Virginia public education official was appearing as a witness for the defendant (the Arlington County School Board) in a school segregation suit proceeding. The witness was asked by the attorney for the plaintiff: "In your opinion, as an authority on public education, are the public school systems of northern Virginia prepared for the integration of races?"

Without the slightest evasive reluctance or hesitation, the official responded: "I believe that the northern Virginia public schools are ready for integration if no other schools are in the state!"

So it is, that even in an atmosphere of varied reaction to the Supreme Court's ruling in Virginia and throughout the South, that northern Virginians have continued to demonstrate that they will adhere to the decision of the highest court in the land.

There have been many recent demonstrations to this effect. The Alexandria P-TA Council opened its meetings to both races for the first time and recommended a state-wide study of the integration problem by a "bi-racial commission of the Virginia P-TA Congress."

The Arlington Education Association has launched a study of the subject of admitting Negroes to schools and to its own organization.

Northern Virginians are giving every indication that they will do everything within their power to preserve our system of free public education—a position purely opposite to the views of Governor Stanley of Virginia.

Needless to say, the so-called 32-man Commission on Public Education, connived by Governor Stanley and his crowd, and the opinions of the Governor himself, do not represent the "American feeling" of the people of the northern Virginia community. Both races are seemingly getting together and planning as people should.

Northern Virginia, in the acceptance of this democratic social change, will be exemplary for Virginia and the entire South in the end.

Temporary Victory for Intolerance in Milford

The decision of the Delaware Supreme Court refusing to order readmission of 10 Negro pupils to the Milford High School will be widely construed as a temporary victory for the forces of intolerance and mob rule in a case which has attracted national attention.

That interpretation of the court decision will not necessarily be correct. Since the State of Delaware had not adopted any policy on ending segregation in the public schools, the decision to let the Milford situation stand as it is until after the U. S. Supreme Court announces a procedure for integrating white and Negro children may be sound in law and defensible as to judgment.

But the fact remains that segregation was once ended in Milford, and now it has been resumed for an indefinite period. And it is also entirely likely that the legal proceedings before the Delaware court might not have been necessary if Milford's experiment in tolerance had not been disrupted by outside agitators and preachers of hate.

At the beginning of the school year, Milford decided to go along with the anti-segregation decision of the U. S. high court without waiting for specific orders. Ten Negro pupils began attending a previously all-white school—and there was no trouble, until outsiders came in to stir up feelings of intolerance.

That was when the rest of the country was treated to the ugly spectacle of small children picketing the schools bearing signs: "Hate Thy Neighbor." That was when the old school board was replaced by a new one, which promptly ordered the high school put back on its old segregated basis. And that was just what the outside merchants of intolerance wanted.

By the decision of the Delaware court, chances of ending segregation in Milford this term appear to have vanished. Perhaps nothing will be done about it until next fall. Meanwhile, the 10 Negro students, their schooling already interrupted, will have to travel some miles to attend school.

In a few years, segregation in the schools will be a thing of the past in Milford and many other places. By then, we suspect, the people of Milford will regret that the process of ending discrimination in the schools was delayed by a sequence of events touched off by agitators appealing to the spirit of the mob.

The School Take-Out Plan: An Estimate Of Its Legality

The state-supported "private school" plan, which was contemplated by the Boutwell Committee as a possible means of evading the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools, is treated to an exhaustive examination in a booklet by James C. N. Paul, published by the Institute of Government at the University of North Carolina. The report was prepared at the request of the governor of North Carolina.

Many Southern states have either decided to go ahead with the private school plan or are toying with the idea. In Georgia, for example, voters in the Nov. 2 election ratified a referendum which would authorize the state to proceed with such a plan.

In general the proposals involve one of two basic approaches.

First, the state could play an active role in the creation, financial support and supervision of the private schools.

Or, the state could do nothing except provide grants to pay for the tuition of all children who qualify for admittance to a private school.

ONE of the many propositions dealt with in the booklet is the probable legality of the private school plans: that is, how the Supreme Court might be expected to rule on the various evasion schemes. Paul has no positive predictions, of course. But he examines the private school proposals in the light of three important groups of cases which the Supreme Court has already ruled on:

¶ The racial restrictive covenant cases;

¶ The white primary election cases; and,

¶ The collective bargaining cases involving Negroes in predominantly white unions.

True, none of these involves public education. But they all turn on the question of "state action." Because in all three it was contended that no constitutional question was involved since the actions, agreements, or contracts—while admittedly discriminatory in some cases—were private actions, not state actions. This is all-important because the 14th Amendment, under which the Supreme Court held school segregation illegal, says that "no state" can deny "equal protection of the laws."

The 14th Amendment says nothing about private individuals or private corporations denying "equal protection."

Thus it is obvious that what the Supreme Court has already said as to what constitutes state action would tend to indicate what it will say about the same question if asked to rule on the legality of private schools.

FIRST, Paul considers the restrictive covenant cases, instances of contracts entered into by private individuals designed to achieve the same result as the private school plan—"The exclusion of persons of another race from the occupancy of specified property."

Although these covenants were the product of private, not state action, the Supreme Court held that when the parties resorted to the courts to enforce the covenants, state action was involved, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. The state had exerted governmental power to enforce exclusion of Negroes.

Paul observes:

> In the free private school plan . . . the state would exert power to assist in the creation of the private schools by providing special enabling legislation and by leasing real property to the schools; it would also exert power to maintain the schools by supplying them with the financial wherewithal to operate; it would also, under the proposad plan, exert power to assure the usefulness of the schools by supervising teacher salaries and instructional standards.

SECOND, the primary election cases.

As a result of the decisions which said that no political party organized under state law and which conducts primary elections under state law can exclude voters because of race, the legislature of South Carolina repealed all laws relating to the management of primaries. Purpose of the move was to treat each political party as a "private club," and to leave these clubs free to decide who would participate in their affairs. Thus, the South Carolina Democratic Party passed a rule excluding Negro voters.

This was held to involve state action and was hence illegal. The Supreme Court followed this same rule in the case of the "Jaybird Democratic Association" in Texas which had been authorized by the state to conduct its own all-white pre-primary.

Although the election was conducted exactly like a regular election, the Association claimed it was merely a straw ballot to pick the probable winner in the regular primary. Candidates, however, abided by the results of the Jaybird primary and the loser did not enter the regular primary. This, the Supreme Court said, involved state action—that of administering a governmental function.

THIRD, the union cases. In one case which the Supreme Court has ruled on, union members had bargained with their employes—under rights of collective bargaining delegated by state law—for dismissal of some employes because of their race. The unions admitted discrimination, but claimed to be a private organization.

The court held that because of the extraordinary rights granted the union by state law, state action was involved.

AND so on. It seems clear to even the layman that the Supreme Court will knock down the private school plan as it has the above shams and others.

What Other Newspapers Say

Milford Crime Wave

(From The New York Post)

The clearest thing about the sordid and disgraceful outbreak of violence in Milford, Delaware, is that the kids didn't start it. Up till now they have been bewildered bystanders in a wretched drama staged by self-styled adults.

At the opening of the school term, white and Negro children went peaceably to school together in Milford, as they have done in so many other Jim Crow citadels in the aftermath of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation verdict. There were no reports of classroom frictions; Negroes were also quickly accepted on the athletic field.

Then a few irreconcilable elders started raising hell. They organized mass meetings, burned fiery crosses and began ordering their children to stay away from school. The uprising spread quickly.

At that juncture the state's educational authorities, who had been promoting the integration effort, got into a foolish side argument with the Milford school board. The board members resigned. A new board was appointed—and its first act was a craven surrender to lawlessness.

It ordered re-establishment of segregation.

Thus, with hardly a semblance of honorable resistance, Milford yielded to the white-supremacy mob.

There is increasing evidence that this adult rebellion was not entirely local or spontaneous in origin. At least two distinguished "outside agitators" helped to foment the disorders. One is Bryant Bowles, a Virginian whose previous claim to renown consisted of several shady financial transactions; he is now in the racket of Negro-baiting as leader of the so-called "National Association for the Advancement of White People." Another is none other than Willis V. McCall, the backwoods Florida sheriff who achieved attention when he shot down two handcuffed Negro defendants in "self-defense" three years ago.

What makes the presence of characters like Bowles and McCall significant is that Milford may easily set the pattern for lawlessness in other places. A Baltimore school official has already warned that the Milford germ is spreading to that city, where integration had been taking place amid peace and quiet.

If the word gets around that defiance of the law can result in prompt overthrow of the law, there will be many imitations of the Milford episode. Many of the gains of recent weeks may be swiftly undone; the worst Vigilante elements may begin to run wild in communities farther south.

Certainly the situation calls for prompt investigation by the Civil Rights unit of the Justice Department. For what is under way in Milford may be nothing less than a large-scale conspiracy to deprive thousands of Americans of their right to quality in education—a right so plainly sustained by the recent Supreme Court decision.

Everything may depend now on the swiftness with which the Justice Dept. moves into the crisis, if it moves at all. Nothing encourages bullies more than the weakness of those whom they have set out to intimidate. What is needed is a clear announcement that the U. S. government will resist any terrorist conspiracy to preserve segregation. It is too late in our century for the burning of fiery crosses.

The tragedy of Milford is that once again grown men have contrived to impose their own cruel prejudices on the lives of children. The kids were doing fine in the new era; as William V. Shannon reported in the The Post earlier this week, they accepted desegregation without a flurry.

But older folks incited to riot. Soon even the kids may get into the vile spirit of the things.

Who will bring the Constitution back to Milford?

The point will be made—validly—that the Milford episode will provide material for Communist propagandists all over the world. But it is time that we defended basic democratic decencies on a higher ground than international expediency. There is no human justification on earth for requiring a Negro parent in Milford to explain to his child tonight why he is barred from attending school with the white children who seemed to be his friends a week ago.

Desegregation Steps

(From the New York Herald-Tribune.)

Shortly after the Supreme Court decision of May 17 declaring racial segregation in the public schools unconstitutional, Chief Justice Warren made the significant remark that while he may walk slowly, he does not walk backward. Deliberate, forward steps toward total de-segregation in the schools have already been taken in some parts of the South, like Washington, D. C., and Little Rock, Ark. However, hasty and ill-advised action in other areas where public feeling is still indifferent or hostile could prove a backward step.

A case in point has occurred in Montgomery, Ala., where 23 Negro children, accompanied by members of the NAACP tried unsuccessfully to register in a white school. They were refused admission on the grounds that they lived in another district. This and similar incidents could lead to lawsuit in which the NAACP or other groups would presumably seek court decision.

It appears that a wiser approach would be to curb the understandable impatience of many individuals and groups, and wait instead for the results of a series of hearings scheduled this fall before the Supreme Court. At these sessions the justices will hear debate on the machinery for implementing de-segregation. Attorney generals of the seventeen states with segregation laws have been invited to participate, and despite the political passions of custom and an election season, progress is expected toward definite rulings on how and when bars are to be lowered—rulings which must meet the divergent situations in the several states. Complicating the legal issues through ill-timed test cases before these rulings are handed down may seriously delay the final outcome, which can only be the complete and peaceful disappearance of segregation.

CAMPAIGN BUGABOOS

E. C. Sanders, The Rockmart Journal

POLITICIANS are astute enough to realize that voters have pet peeves and weak points. Like the pugilist who knows the vulnerable spots of his opponent, the shrewd office seeker can land many a knockout punch to his adversary by simply understanding the facets of the mind of the constituent back home.

In recent years in the South, for example, if a candidate says "Nigger, Nigger" long and loud enough chances are he would garner a sizeable vote. Many people have developed exaggerated fears of the Negro. . . .

Now another bugaboo has been added to the campaign weapons of the Georgia politician. The late Eugene Talmadge first employed it to advantage, and in the recent campaign it seems that Marvin Griffin, governor-nominee, has done no small job with it. I refer to the reference to the Atlanta newspaper monopoly.

About all a politician has to do now when he takes to the stump is to denounce the "Nigger" and cry monopoly at the Atlanta Newspapers, Incorporated, and a large multitude of voters will flock to the polls and acclaim him as the champion of the people's rights. No more absurd criterion has ever been used to determine the abilities and capabilities of an officeseeker than these two measures. In the first place, the Negro is with us to stay. In the second, he is better as an asset than a liability. Given a chance to earn his living and make his way in life, he becomes a contributing part of our society. Held down, as demagogues desire—even if only for votes at times—he becomes a liability.

Segregation, as an issue, is greatly exaggerated in political campaigns. No one man can defy the Supreme Court or Constitution of the United States.

The charge against the Atlanta newspaper is just as preposterous. Running a metropolitan daily now is a big money enterprise. The James Cox interests, which control the Atlanta Newspapers, Incorporated, has millions of dollars invested. The rank and file who attack the so-called "monopoly" couldn't extend their credit enough to put out one day's issue of the paper.

It's an even bet that if The Journal and Constitution were put up for sale tomorrow, there would not be an interest in Atlanta or in the state that would want to invest the money needed to buy it and underwrite the risks involved in operating the gigantic enterprise, which prints on a multi-million dollar press and uses some seven million dollars worth of newsprint a year. The Hearst-owned Georgian is said to have lost some 13 million dollars during the years it operated in Atlanta, and the Constitution sold its common stock controlling interest to the Coxes a few years ago because the paper was losing money.

I do not have any axe to grind for the Atlanta newspapers but I do defend them as a newspaper and a business enterprise. I regard them as one of the nation's best newspapers, and I feel that they have a right to exist in the state even though their capital might come, to some extent, from elsewhere.

In fact, most of us welcome new industry to our midst, and a considerable part of it originates from other sections of the country — in fact, is directed from elsewhere. Is that not true?

Delaware Tries It

It may strike many Southerners as odd that Delaware, which we aren't accustomed to thinking of as a Southern state, is now in the throes of a desegregation issue more explosive than anything so far in the Deep South. Delaware is one of 17 states and the District of Columbia where school segregation is required by state law.

The Milford School Board has voted for unsegregated schools in its area. The Delaware State Board of Education has taken the view that the problem of compliance with the Supreme Court must be decided on a state level. The Milford board has threatened to resign if its decision to open all schools to all pupils is overruled by a "no desegregation" order from the state board.

Two weeks ago 11 Negroes registered with 676 white children at a previously all-white Lakeview High school. Following a meeting attended by some 1,500 of the town's 5,700 residents, the board closed the school and also the all-Negro elementary school. When the board decided to re-open classes on an unsegregated basis, there were threats of violence. The board then voted to close the school until further notice.

The Delaware controversy will not comfort those who hold that desegregation will be uneventful, easy, or soon. Here we have Delaware, the richest state on a per capita basis in the country, with a Negro population of only 13% and the northernmost of any of the states having mandatory segregation laws. If money, a smaller problem and Northern enlightenment can be considered ameliorating factors in desegregation—and they should be—you would think Delafare could effect a small-scale transition easier than any of the other Southern states. Yet, the enrollment of 11 Negroes in a school of 676 has exploded.

What would happen in Alabama, the fifth poorest state (and money, the wherewithal to make major changes, is a big item), a state where the percentage of Negroes in the population is three times as great as Delaware's (Negroes in Alabama comprise 32% of the population), and located in the Deep South—what would happen here?

Delaware illustrates very forcefully that changes in social attitudes and customs cannot be effected with mechanical speed and ease. The Supreme Court, in its May 17 ruling, recognized this.

There are many well-meaning people who hold that discrimination, segregation and racial bigotry are such high crimes as must be nullified by swift and vengeful correction. These people would seem to prefer replacing one evil, racial bigotry, by a worse one, active hostility.

Haste might easily waste generations of flourishing harmony and respect between the white man and the black man in the South.

Civic groups beat bigotry

(An Editorial)

By RUFUS WELLS

Flushed with his success in Milford, Del., Bryant Bowles, president, founder and leading spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of White People, invaded Baltimore, determined to force that city to return to segregated public schools. Afro-American p.22

This was to be the acid test, and Bowles was careful to use the same tactics that forced Delaware authorities to bow to mob rule. Baltimore, Md.

But Baltimore would not be buffaloed, and the Florida-born agitator left in defeat after collecting an undisclosed sum of money collected from whites ignorant enough to believe that Bryant Bowles could overrule the United States Supreme Court.

Sat. 10-3-00-54

The fact that Bowles met his waterloo in this historic city is significant. It offers a lesson to Richmond and other Southern communities to soon be faced with implementing the Supreme Court ruling. Had Bowles been successful in forcing Baltimore authorities to submit to his boycott tactics and reverse themselves by returning to jim-crow schools, there is no doubt that he would have moved rapidly from city to city stirring up racial demonstrations and eventually riots, to embarrass America before the world.

Having worked in Baltimore five years as a general assignment reporter, I knew most of the city officials pretty well, and had a sneaking suspicion that Brother Bowles had bitten off more than he could chew.

To get a first hand account of the Bowles versus Baltimore battle, I drove to that city and was happy to find that the battle was over with the Floridian coming out on the short end.

— o O o —

Responsibility for his defeat may be attributed to the Baltimore NAACP Branch, the support given it by the national office and other civic, fraternal and religious organizations in the city, and the firm stand taken by city officials—from Mayor Tommy D'Alesandro to the patrolman facing the mobs on the school grounds.

I'd like to report that serious trouble was averted in Baltimore because 19 of these civic organizations stood shoulder to shoulder with city officials in support of integrated schools. These organizations included the League of Women Voters, the Baltimore Urban League, Baltimore Jewish Council, Maryland Industrial Union Council (CIO), Catholic Interracial Council, Jewish War Veterans, Methodist Clergy of Baltimore, United Churchwomen of Baltimore and others.

The Baltimore City school board took a firm stand and announced that it would not retreat from its decision to mix the schools and that pickets could not halt the integration program.

— o O o —

Mayor D'Alesandro refused to see the 2000 school children who marched on city hall. Police Commissioner Ober went on television and warned the demonstrators that the picketing of schools and the student marches were "not an orderly expression of constitutional rights" but a violation of Maryland law.

This message from the Commissioner was read to all members of the police department at roll call:

"The duty of every police officer is to be absolutely neutral in all civil matters, taking no sides, nor expressing an opinion in regard thereto. This applies with reference to segregation. The public has a constitutional right to express its opinion for or against any issue, provided such expression is not inflammatory in character and is done in an orderly manner.

"The laws of Maryland very definitely forbid any congregating or picketing of public schools when schools are in session, provided such picketing or congregating interferes with the conduct of classes.

"We have been advised that the actions of Monday did so interfere. I am confident, if members of this department continue to perform as they have, that all citizens will conduct themselves in a lawful and orderly manner by refraining from picketing or gathering at schools when they are in session."

— o O o —

Incidentally, the Baltimore police department was widely commended for its skillful handling of a difficult situation.

After Commissioner Ober's TV appearance, the school picketing stopped, but quite a few children were still staying away from school.

But the absentees returned to class the day after Dr. John H. Fischer, superintendent of public schools, announced through the newspapers that absentees would have to make up the work lost. He emphasized a school board law that "pupils over 16 years of age who are repeatedly truant shall be permanently dropped from school."

Present and vocal throughout the demonstration was Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, efficient and hard-working president of the Baltimore NAACP.

Bryant Bowles bowed to defeat in Baltimore, then ran head-on into legal difficulties as the State of Delaware sought to regain the prestige it lost by ignomiously bowing to mob rule.

When the day comes that Richmond must implement the Supreme Court school segregation ruling, it will be well for us to remember the skillful manner in which Baltimore handled those who sought to violate the law of the land.

A TEACHER TALKS

By MARGUERITE CARTWRIGHT

First Free Schools in America Built for Negroes

MUCH has been written of late concerning segregated public schools, both North and South. A glance into history reveals one curious thing about the beginnings of free public schools in New York State.

In the early eighteenth century, groups of abolitionists worked for free education for manumitted slaves. In 1704 an English missionary society undertook to teach the slaves how to read the catechism. This work was begun by Elias Neau, a Frenchman, who was followed by others.

Dr. Cartwright

John Jay and Alexander Hamilton helped to organize the first free school in America in 1787—but it was only for Negroes. If you were white and couldn't pay, you were forced to remain without a school for the next fourteen years—for, as noted last week, it was not until 1801 that a free school was established for white children. Even free religious instruction for Negroes preceded that for whites.

Courier

Secular education began with the school set up by the Manumission Society. In the beginning it was a one-room affair. The first teacher was Cornelius Davis, who resigned his position in a white private school to teach the little Negro children. The first building was erected in 1796, which in 1814 was destroyed by fire. The city then made a grant, and according to old records, "a commodius brick building was erected." Later, African Free School No. 2 was established and attended by nearly 500 pupils. By 1834 there were several of these schools and several Negro teachers.

However, it was not until 1844 that Gov. Grover Cleveland signed the bill discontinuing separate schools for Negroes, providing that all schools be opened to educate pupils for whom admission was sought without regard for race or color. In 1900, Gov. Theodore Roosevelt signed a bill repealing the law which permitted communities to set up separate schools, and which provided that no person should be refused admission to, or be excluded from, any public school in the state because of race or color.

Miracle In Georgia

Courier

TIME AND AGAIN we have stressed that there is no unanimity among Southern whites on the issue of integrating public schools, and the vote on the private school amendment in Georgia seems to prove it.

The amendment won by about 210,000 to 180,000, but the surprising thing about it was not that it won, but that it won so narrowly in a state generally supposed to be unswervingly anti-integration. Sat. 11-13-54

The amendment lost in the cities but won in the rural areas where Talmadge's woolhats remain supreme.

WHO WOULD have supposed that 180,000 Georgians (excepting the Negroes) would have voted against this amendment, supporting the argument of the hastily organized "Committee to Save Our Schools" that it would not preserve segregation and would ultimately destroy the state's school system? There, indeed, was a political miracle which may indicate a trend.

QUESTIONS DESERVING ANSWERS

Dr. Margaret Butcher, of the Howard University faculty and a member of the Board of Education of Washington, expresses the belief that PROPORTIONATELY, there are just as many Negroes opposed to mixed schools as white persons.

Globe & Independent

Well, that isn't the way we have been hearing it. What we have heard is that a great majority of white persons are OPPOSED to mixed schools and a great majority of colored persons are in favor of mixed schools.

Plainly this point needs carefully to be considered and the whole truth laid bare for the enlightenment of all concerned. For as a republic, our nation is not only committed to the preservation of minority rights but is equally committed to the preservation of majority rule, where majority rule does not rob minorities of their constitutional rights.

Nashville, Tenn. P. 2

Undoubtedly there are certain benefits of separate schools that colored Americans, well acquainted with what these benefits are, will not easily be persuaded to give them up for something that is merely theoretically better.

We know that in theory, mixed schools will reduce taxes for the building and maintenance of public schools, there will be an increase rather than a decrease in the number of colored school teachers, and teachers will be selected on the basis of their ability to meet the requirements prescribed for teachers.

Also, theoretically, new school buildings will in many instances be named without regard to the racial distinction of the eminent Americans for whom they are named. That is, a city will be just as willing to name a new school, to be attended by both white and colored pupils, for Booker T. Washington or George W. Carver as for Horace Mann, or some other distinguished American.

And of course in mixed schools the per capita allotment of money for the education of America's children, in a mixed school arrangement, will be equal.

Also, in the selection of members of boards of education everywhere, no discrimination will be permitted, nor the "field of operation" of any colored board member be confined wholly within the narrow sphere of looking after matters of interest to colored citizens, only.

Can and will the advance to a system of wholly mixed schools be as idealistic as is here set forth? Such is a consummation devoutly to be wished, but again, it might be asked, are we to see theory and practice become one and the same thing in the operation of our schools, North and South?

Fri. 11-12-54

What we know right now is that not even in the North does the colored child and colored school teacher enjoy "equality of opportunity" for participation in America's public school system.

Friendly Relations With White People Still The Mississippi Negroes Greatest Asset

Since the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the school cases and in other cases outlawing racial segregation by law the masses of Negroes in Mississippi, elated over the prospects of a brighter future for themselves and their children, are being more and more attracted by the voices of the new would be leaders of the race in the state who look with scorn upon those who council moderation in these tense and troubled times in matters of race-relations; and who ridicule and decry those who point to the need for continued friendly relations between the White and Negro citizens of the state.

In regard to the Supreme Court decision in the school segregation cases, and in any other case, in the past, and in the future, these are absolutely certain facts that every intelligent Negro in Mississippi should know and understand, and remember for himself without any aid from the new crop of loud-talking and bellicose Negro leaders now strutting across the stage where ever given the opportunity in the state, and who are getting their first notices in the national press, a fact which is driving them to greater extremes and more and more immature statements and predictions in regard to the immediate future of the Negro in the state. The number one fact is that no matter what kind of a decision the U. S. Supreme Court makes, government in the United States starts at the local level, the law is enforced by the elected officials at the local level, and that no decision by any court is stronger than the public opinion, for or against it, at the local level. The number two fact is that no matter what decision the U. S. Supreme Court makes, it has no power to send an army to Mississippi or any where else to enforce its decisions.

Every intelligent Negro citizen in the state, without the aid of the new crop of Negro leaders can also see for himself where lies the political and economic strength in his community, and can also see and understand the total dependence of the masses of Negroes in the state.

Judged in the light of history, the greatest Negro leaders yet to come upon the American scene was the late Booker T. Washington, a man who is growing in world statute with each passing year. It was in one of his most famous speeches made at Atlanta in 1895, when the times, in matters of race relations were not unlike the present, that Booker T. Washington warned the race against those who underestimate the importance of cultivating friendly relations with the Southern White Man.

The time has come, in the light of recent developments affecting race relations in Mississippi for every Negro Preacher and Teacher, and for Negro citizens of responsibility in all walks of life everywhere in Mississippi who feel a true sense of responsibility for the welfare of the Negro masses in the state to challenge the ridicule and criticism of the new would be leaders of the race in the state by proclaiming anew and at every opportunity that a friendly relations with the White people is still the greatest asset of the Mississippi Negro.

The Meaning Of Assimiliation, Integration And The Mississippi Negro

Since we wrote something last week on the subject on the front page of the JACKSON ADVOCATE, Mississippi's greatest Negro Newspaper, in which we state our views and opinions without fear or favor, we have been faced with a constantly recurring desire and urge to point out something more, in regard to the meaning of assimiliation, and its high place in what historians and scholars point to as the great American idea and ideal, as compared with that of integration, an almost wholly new term in its relations to the growth and development of the United States as a nation of many races, ethnic, and national groups gathered together from the four corners of the earth.

Those with eyes to see, unaided by high education and scholarly attainments, need only to look around them to learn the meaning of assimiliation and the part it has played from the very discovery of America, and all through the various stages in the growth and development of the United States up until the present time when it is recognized as the world's greatest nation.

From the discovery of America, when the call went out for its colonization, through the time of the American Revolution, and the Declaration of Independence, and throughout the period which lead to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the greatest promise, which America, and subsequently the United States, held out to peoples of all races and creed, ethnic and national backgrounds, was that of assimiliation; which was followed by the guarantee of liberty, and equality under law, by the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

Coming because of the promise of assimiliation, and the guarantee of liberty and equality under law, as contained in its constitution, the United States has become peopled by members of all races, creeds, colors, ethnic and national groups, each of which, wherever brought together in sufficient numbers, first established their own separate churches, schools, and social institutions, and set about to establish business and employment opportunities for members of their own group, their obvious purpose being to avoid becoming dependent upon any other group.

Any Negro in Mississippi, or anywhere else in the United States, with eyes to see, even aided by high scholarship and education, can look about him and see Italians, Greeks, Jews, Chinese, Japanese, and members of other racial, ethnic, and national groups, with business of all kinds giving opportunity to their own people, crying out, not for integration, although many of them are still victims of certain types of discrimination, but crying out only when denied the liberty and equality under law, which includes the right to be separate under the great American idea, ideal, and promise of assimiliation.

Indeed, there are many stories known to Negroes in many towns and cities throughout the United States, where members of other races and groups having found success in the United States, in direct contridiction of the idea of integration, have sent back to their mother country for a wife from among their own people, and for members of their families to share in their success, and in the great American promise of assimiliation, and equality under law.

The great American promise of assimiliation, the right to be separate and independent, liberty and equality under law, was the road to which the Negro was being pointed by the late great Booker T. Washington, and toward which he was traveling at an admirable speed before his progress was deflected and retarded, and his eyes turned toward more uncertain goals by Dr. W. E. B. Dubois, and other critics of the education theory and philosophy of Booker T. Washington. Having all but lost sight of the goals set for him by Washington, whose theory and philosophy of education has since been adopted and proclaimed throughout the educational world there are those who would hold up to the Negro, integration, as the only cure for his ills.

Yet, in all the history of the United States, no racial or ethnic group, with the exception of the voices now being heard from certain sections of opinion among Negroes, have cried out for integration in exchange for the promise of assimiliation, the right to be separate and independent, and the guarantee of liberty, and equality under law, as contained in the Constitution of the United States.

The loss of race pride, of which the cry for integration is the first and best evidence, is already causing efforts of Negroes to establish business and give opportunity to other Negroes to wither and die; with this trend pointing to more disastrous results to come.

The great promise of assimiliation, the right to be separate and independent, liberty and equality under law also gives to each of the various racial and ethnic groups in the United States, including the Negro, the right to resist integration with any other group. It is for this reason, and because of this right, that the demand for integration is arousing such bitter opposition and causing the Negro to lose so many friends, and the help that he was receiving from white people in the South, even in his effort towards the right to vote during the past few years, when his aim was seen as only the right to be separate, and liberty and equality under law as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

In the above views it should be plain to every thinking Negro that the demand for integration will never become the foundation upon which to build mutual respect and understanding, harmony and goodwill between white people and Negro people of Mississippi, and of the South, and to a large extent those of the entire nation.

Finally, and in the above views, the JACKSON ADVOCATE and its Editor, where ever equality can be provided would have Negro teachers teaching Negro children in Negro schools through all the years of future history.

What Other Newspapers Say

Integration Proceeds

(From New York Times)

The sporadic student "strikes" against the end of school segregation are reprehensible, but they should not be allowed to distort the entire picture. With a few notable and well-publicized exceptions, the program of integrated education has been going ahead smoothly since the opening of the academic year in most of the border areas where division of races had heretofore been enforced in the schools.

In Delaware, for example, integration is being successfully introduced in Wilmington, even though it has been successfully resisted in Milford. In Maryland nothing was heard about anti-integration moves until after the ugly incidents in Milford were well publicized; and since then apparently the only city affected has been Baltimore. In West Virginia twenty-five counties have proceeded quietly to complete or partial integration, while the new order has been temporarily abandoned in just one. In Missouri school integration has been wide-spread with no reported incidents. In New Mexico and Arizona the story is the same.

In view of this record it appears that considerable advance has already been made toward a general recognition that race has nothing to do wth education or with any of the other civil rights that belong to all citizens equally. The revolution this implies in the thinking and customs of some citizens cannot be accomplished overnight, but it will eventually be accomplished. The young men and women of Washington and Baltimore and a few smaller towns who have been demonstrating against desegregation are fighting a lost as well as a worthless cause.

These youngsters deserve blame for their disorderliness and pity for their ignorance; but the blame if not the pity belong in far greater measure to those among their elders who have egged them on. One of the most tragic photographs to have emerged from the present agitation is that of a few young children sitting quietly at a protest meeting against desegregation in Atlanta at which a fiery cross was burned by adults —presumably their parents—decked out in Ku Klux Klan uniforms. One cannot help but think of the lines from "South Pacific": "You've got to be taught to be afraid of people whose skin is a different shade. "You've got to be taught before it's too late. Before you are six or seven or eight. To hate all the people your relatives hate—You've got to be carefully taught" But that kind of teaching is on the way out in this country, and the ultimate ending of segregation in the schools will help speed its demise.

The full measure of the school problem facing Alabama can be understood only by including estimates of future attendance. Some estimates by race and year were printed in the latest issue of "The Education Bulletin," published by the Alabama Education Association. They show considerable variation between the races as to changes in school attendance.

Broadly speaking, the figures indicate a rising interest among Negroes in education. The number of Negro pupils has been increasing faster than the number of white pupils, and in excess of the increase in population.

For example, between the school years 1929-30 and 1953-54, there was a slight decline in white students in the elementary grades in Alabama, but Negro students increased 12 per cent. In high schools in the same period, white students increased 70 per cent, but Negro students increased 560 per cent.

There were no comparable changes in the makeup of the population in that period. In fact, there was a comparative decline in the percentage of the Negro population. The changes indicated above reflect the increasing attention being given by both Negroes and whites to education for the Negroes.

And the variations in such figures are not yet ended. The Southern Regional Education Board estimates that between the school years 1953-54 and 1959-60, there will be an increase in Alabama of white elementary pupils of 7 per cent and of Negro pupils 14 per cent. The increases in high school enrollment in that period are expected to be: whites 10.1 per cent; Negroes, 31 per cent.

Thus are made clear important aspects of the problem as Alabama strives to bring about equality of educational opportunity.

Our Opinions

A Judge In Need

A new name appeared in the news columns of the American press this week. The name which will long be remembered is that of J. Harper Meredith of the West Virginia Circuit Court.

Faced with a miniature duplicate of what happened in Baltimore, Washington and Milford, Del, at the Annabelle school in Four States, W. Va., Judge Meredith took a firm position that ended the resistence by parents to the new law of desegration in record time.

First he described the school strike as "a rebellion against the government," then he added:

"Such a rebellion as this cannot be tolerated. It cannot continue and I won't permit it to continue. In this case the state is being attacked by a group of citizens. It amounts to rebellion. They are attempting to wreck a function of the government.

"If necessary I will fill the jails until their feet are sticking out of the windows."

He criticized the school board which had attempted to reason with the parents before going to court for not bringing the matter before him sooner.

Twenty-four hours after Judge Harper issued the injunction restraining the parents from interfering with the operation of the school the strike was over—desegregation had become an accepted fact.

The judge has exemplified and proved the efficiency of the belief we have always held: that a firm stand by persons in authority can overcome the resistance of malcontents to social progress.

There is a great need in many other localities for men like Judge Meredith—Chicago for example where the city authorities have been clumsily fumbling with a housing situation for more than a year.

Business And The May 17 Decision

Defender

EDITOR'S NOTE: At the National Negro Business League convention in Chicago last week, John H. Sengstacke, publisher of the Chicago Defender related the effects of the Supreme Court decision of May 17 on Negro business in his introduction of Atty. W. Robert Ming on a program paying tribute to Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief legal counsel. Because it sets forth clearly the change that must come in the thinking of Negroes in business we reproduce it here.

It is fitting and proper that the National Negro Business League should pay tribute to a great American — Thurgood Marshall. We owe him a debt of gratitude. But I wonder if we, as business men and women, fully realize the effect that the Supreme Court decision will have upon us as business people.

Chicago, Ill.

Barriers have been falling all around us and now with the school segregation decision, barriers will be falling faster than ever.

Sat. 11-30-54

In his annual address, our president Mr. Sudduth stated that "In 1948 at our Atlantic City Convention, it dawned upon us that our survival in business was threatened by the discovery of the Negro market."

I don't believe that this point can be over-emphasized.

P. 9

Three years ago in Detroit, before the Booker T. Washington Trade Association, I made an address entitled "The Dollar is Green."

I tried to emphasize that if we do not wake up hurriedly to what is going on about us, competition for not only the Negro market, but just plain business competition would force us out of business; that we must stop thinking in terms of Negro business and start thinking of just plain business.

In my own organization, I say frankly, our competition is not the Pittsburgh Courier, Afro-American or Ebony Magazine —for when you think in terms of big business in America, all of us combined have not scratched the surface.

The Defender's competition in Chicago is the Chicago Tribune, Daily News, Sun-Times and American the city's dailies. The Tribune, for instance, not only sells advertising on the national scene on the basis of covering the Negro market, but has salesmen here on 47th street selling at a rate camparable or lower than ours.

Much more serious than that is the integration of workers. We are finding it increasingly more difficult to get competent workers. In most cases, they can get better wages and working conditions with white firms.

We should thank Thurgood Marshall and all others who are working in this field for the breaking down of segregation will make better businessmen out of all of us.

Under our capitalistic system, even with complete integration we will not become a real factor in American life until we have become an economic factor.

Integration will make us walk from the vestibule into the living room of American business life.

Courier Editorials

Mississippi Amazed

GOVERNOR HUGH WHITE and most of the other white people of Mississippi were amazed a few days ago when a group of ninety Negro leaders from all parts of the state stood up and frankly told him that they would not accept a plan of voluntary segregation presented to them in an attempt to by-pass the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregated public schools.

White Mississippi was amazed because this stand of the Negro leaders was so contrary to what it had come to expect from Negroes in positions of leadership in that state and supposed to be fearful of speaking up to the white powers-that-be.

It is no news that much of Mississippi is living in the past but it takes an incident like this to show how far in the past it is living, as far as "understanding" the Negro is concerned.

Indeed, there are a whole lot of people outside Mississippi who have swallowed for so long the propaganda about the supposedly terrified Negro leaders of that state that they, too, were amazed by the actions of these representatives of black people.

The Courier has never held this view of Mississippi Negro leadership, so we were not amazed by the stand of the dauntless ninety.

Throughout the South we have been witnessing a wonderful demonstration of real leadership on the part of Negroes of prominence in various fields who have something to lose but have set a fine example for others to follow by refusing to support the segregation which has degraded our people so long.

Of course Governor White has announced that he will call the Legislature into special session on Sept. 7 to consider a Constitutional Amendment to abolish the state's public school system.

This is the latest gimmick of the unreconstructed South to disloyally by-pass the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, but like all of its other efforts to set back the clock, it will fail.

We doubt that the majority of the white people of the South will permit their legislatures to destroy the public school system so laboriously and expensively built up through the years.

We think the politicians like White, Talmadge, Byrnes, et al, are going to be even more amazed by the reaction of their white constituents to ending the public school system than by the courage and determination of the ninety Negro leaders of Mississippi.

Americans, regardless of color, are rejoicing over the U. S. Supreme Court decision desegregating public schools as a long step in the direction of full freedom, one of the Daily Worker's columnists, Abner Berry, himself a Negro, devoted his Aug. 3 column, "On the Way," to a discussion of the question, "Will Integration Equal Disintegration?"

The burden of the piece is that while desegregation is desirable, "there are indications that some persons in the campaign for integration would go much further. They would like to cease being Negroes."

Berry then goes on to say that "I want all my rights as a United States citizen, an American, but within this is also the right to be a Negro," and proceeds with a lot of phony "arguments" stressing the continuing necessity for Negro organization as Negroes.

He even slaps at the Negro graduate nurses for having dissolved their organization some years back because their battle for integration had been won.

Stripped of Communist Aesopian verbiage, this means that the Reds are fearful that progress may be swift in eliminating practices, laws and institutions that set colored people apart as Negroes that Communist propagandists will lose one of their main hole cards.

It is through harping on "minorities" and their problems, in accordance with the policy laid down by Stalin, that communism has everywhere been able to annoy, disrupt and divide nations preparatory to destroying them; and this has been especially marked since the 1928 congress of the Third Internationale began concentrating on the Negro problem.

Berry and his kind want and need Negroes to remain Negroes in the sense of a social class whereas all thinking American Negroes simply want to be American citizens without racial distinction.

Reds are alarmed by any reform which threatens the color caste system upon which they have been profitably feeding at the expense of America for thirty years, and they have done their utmost to perpetuate it while pretending that they want to eliminate it.

It was for this reason that they strove for years, not without success to popularize the expression, "the Negro people," the fantastic program of "Self-Determination for the Black Belt," and the constant and loud-mouthed emphasis on "racism."

Just as they admittedly made an alliance with the Southern Bourbons during World War II (after Russia was attacked by Hitler) and soft-pedaled their program of "Negro liberation," so today in veiled manner they are taking substantially the same position as the Byrneses and Talmadges who also harp on the need for racial integrity.

"While there is emphasis on integration," says Berry, "there will also have to be an intensified drive to strengthen their organization of the Negro people to achieve and enforce the final victory."

In other words, he means, "Please, Uncle Sam, don't take our meal ticket away."

Integration—A Two Way Street

THERE ARE A NUMBER of panels being conducted throughout the community in which the audiences are getting a frank and spirited discussion on the integration of St. Louis Public Schools. Such discussions are not only informative and helpful, but they also serve to condition the parents for whatever adjustments are necessary in the various phases of the public school program. The Board of Education has announced the school districts for the second step in its desegregation plan. From all evidences, the redistricting has been done carefully, fairly and with the best interests of the students uppermost. Such things are the mechanics of the new program, the human side is yet to follow.

IT MIGHT BE WELL TO keep in mind that racial integration is a two-way street. There is equally as much responsibility on the part of Negroes as it is upon their white brothers. We were intensely interested in the remarks of Mrs. Reba Mosby, Vashon high school teacher, at one of the panels held last Sunday evening. "Good race relations is built from both sides," said this teacher, who has had much experience in this field working wth young people of high school age. She said "we have been accused of being oversensitive," adding that the role of the Negro in this transition period must be to assess it fairly.

SHE WARNED THAT SHE did not mean that Negroes should think in terms of some collective conduct, but rather as American individuals determined to shoulder each's responsibility in a social change. And speaking on this matter of "social" change, Leo Bohanon of the Urban League had a good answer for this one. Answering a question from the audience as to whether or not Negroes could achieve economic equality without social equality, Bohanon said much depends upon one's interpretation of social equality.

THE WHOLE SOCIO-ECONOMIC pattern must move forward as one, said Leo, explaining that both social and economic rights means the right to own and buy a home of one's choice where one pleases; the right to employment on the basis of ability; the right to a night's lodging in a public hotel; the right to enjoy public accommodations and other such basic American rights. Some people, said Leo, (too many, we believe) think social equality means the right to invite oneself into my or your home without being invited, the right to marry someone's daughter with or without her consent or the right to invade someone's private party." Those, said Bohanon, are personal and private rights and should not be confused with social rights.

IN THIS WHOLE AREA of discussion, however, it might be well for all of us to approach the question, as Mrs. Mosby suggested, with a quiet voice. This community has progressed well in the field of human relations. There is no need to fear that it will do less in the months to come. That progress has not been without effort on the part of good forward thinking citizens. It must continue unhampered. The hotheads and intemperates, whether white or black must not be allowed to impede this program for the healthy well being of us all.

The Hypocrites Rave

Proponents of segregation are now making strenuous efforts to convince the American people the Supreme Court of the United States is just about to invade the legislative branch of government, and thus cloud the vital issue of observance. Down in the deep recesses of Dixie there is determined opposition to the court's ruling bordering on open rebellion, and it is felt a deft method by which to dodge compliance will be to stage a fight between the legislative and judicial branches of government.

Black Dispatch

The high court, when it ruled segregation invalid earlier in the year, told the various states it would have more to say about methods of implementation later on, and more recently has said this spelling out of an action program for the states will be developed and enlarged upon in September or October. Because the court took this position many officials in state government have seized upon the questionable notion that the court has not rendered a final decision, which everyone having discourse to reason knows is not true. Unquestionably the high court has decided that it is unconstitutional to separate citizens, based upon color or race, in any tax-supported facility. The court is not meeting in September to ponder that issue.

Put

Our notion is the high court simply adopted this formula for observance to give the recalcitrant South a cooling-off period. To have decided that observance must immediately follow the judgment of the Washington tribunal might have brought about open revolt. There were Talmadge and Byrnes threatening to abandon the public school system, and other units of state government standing ready to throw road-blocks in the path of observance. The Supreme Court knew this. The court knows that to delay observance, as it has done, it could thus bypass the threats of both the Georgia and South Carolina governors, for both of them will be out of office following the first of the year, and the newcomers will have had an opportunity to feel the public pulse on this subject. We think the action of the court in delaying enforcement and performance was a wise and judicious step.

Oklahoma City

Then too, in the trial of all of the segregation cases this writer has been identified with, southern attorney generals have always pleaded for time. The argument in the Sipuel and McLaurin cases, from the lips of Attorney General Williamson, was that Oklahoma was entitled to a reasonable period in which to make the change-over to an integrated program. Surely no sincere approach to this controversial subject will not overlook the fact that state legislatures will have to pass new laws and as in Oklahoma a new system of taxation for education will have to be forthcoming. There are numberless things that will have to be done in disposing of our dual system of education. The court doubtless thought about this phase of the subject and assumed that in many instances some states would voluntarily make the change-over, thus giving other states a pattern to follow. Our belief is the high court did the only reasonable thing it possibly could have done in the premises.

But the folk who dissent want to make a monster out of the Supreme Court's action. Numerous editorials are being published alleging that the Supreme Court is now invading the sacred precincts of the legislative branch of government attempting to dictate what type of laws shall be passed. The traditional ire Americans develop when one branch of government trespasses on another is being currently whipped up at a furious pace. The real issue may get lost in this sort of shuffle, and that it what we believe dissenters have in mind.

Ltr 8-14-54

No objection is made when the President of the United States sends a message to congress telling the legislative body what laws the chief executive believes should be passed, but the pro-segregationists are going to throw a blue fit if, and when the judiciary indicates from the bench what type and character of rules should be formulated to make effective its ruling on segregation. What is the difference between the President of the United States sending a message to Congress and the judiciary expressing a viewpoint for the benefit of the legislative branch of government? Will someone please disclose where right ends and wrong enters in such an argument? There should be some point where the three branches of government enjoy speaking acquaintance one with the other.

What we fear is disturbing Dixiecrats these days is belief the Supreme Court may suggest a rule of action which will obviate the declared intention of many to escape and evade the ruling of the high court. What the high court says might morally invade the sacred precincts of states' rights. In fact we believe this is the bottom of the whole matter. We have always viewed states' rights as a principle which permits state government to do anything state government wants to do. It was this principal that shunted us off into the Civil war, based in the idea that any directive from the central government could be ignored and nullified by local self government. Almost 100 years following Appomatox the South is moving back to the same subversive position of ante-bellum days. Dixiecrats do not want a sane and loyal course of observance charted because that is not what Dixiecrats have planned.

One of our contemporaries said this week:

> "If segregation school laws are unconstitutional it follows naturally that all segregation laws are unconstitutional."

Now that is precisely the position of the Black Dispatch, and we have said this before in this column since the Supreme Court decision on segregation. From where we sit and observe what is going on we know now that in many sections of the South there is not going to be acceptance of the idea that all forms of segregation based upon race and color are unconstitutional and invalid. Some cities are saying the decision relates solely to schools, and thus will hold tenaciously to all forms of segregation other than schools. This is the intention of the dissenters if we interpret correctly what they are saying just now.

With this subversion and disloyalty in mind, the South is in no temper to have the Supreme Court of the Uinted States issue a clarifying statement. The South does not want anything spelled out so that no fool can err. The South wants to be left alone in the adoption of vicious dilatory tactics which will completely devitalize the judgment of the high court. Those who have this in mind feel the thing to do is to attack the court, and allege the judiciary is now attempting to take over the duties and functions of the legislative branch of government.

NEGRO PRESS

Some Will Fight

REPRISALS against Negro teachers refusing to endorse continued segregation in public schools in the South and the passage of recent legislation designed to perpetuate racial discrimination indicate that there are some elements in the South who have every intention of fighting the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

Moreover, the number and power of these ilk are likely to grow as the time approaches for definite implementation of integration.

This new terrorism is clearly designed to intimidate both the Negroes and the High Court so that an atmosphere will be created conducive to softening the determination of the powers-that-be to end public school segregation at this time.

Of course no one expected that all would be smooth sailing, knowing the undeniable opposition to racial integration which exists in many parts of this country.

Revolutionary changes have nowhere been brought about over-night, not even in the armed services and the various Government departments and jurisdictions.

Nevertheless, progress has been and will be made, and it will continue because in our view the majority of white Americans have outgrown the psychological need for racial separatism.

For one thing, Negroes are not being intimidated but are going ahead with plans to do all in their power to support the stand of the Supreme Court, opposition or no opposition.

For another thing, it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of all thinking people that the dual school system is too costly and will become more so with the tremendous increase of school-age children. This is especially true in the rural areas where the greatest opposition to desegregation seems to center.

Again, the rapid closing of the cultural gap between the two groups, which is clearly obvious to all observers, removes many of the basic objections which once were held.

Finally, there is a tremendous shortage of teachers in all parts of the country, and this, coupled with the large body of well-trained Negro teachers who are generally equal in competence to the whites, will serve as a guarantee that few of the Negroes can be spared.

There will be reprisals here and there, injustices, discrimination against Negro teachers and pupils, and perhaps occasional violence, but eventually the opposition will weaken and die out.

Nowhere in the world have so many drastic changes taken place in such short time as in this country because Americans are accustomed to and welcome change. In time the vast majority will welcome this one.

History Writing Virginia Ticket

Norfolk, Va.

Editor, Journal and Guide:

Attorney -General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. said recently that the NAACP would not be allowed to write the ticket for Virginia. Surely one of his intelligence would not fail to see that history is writing the ticket for Virginia. The NAACP merely interprets it.

It perhaps, would be well for the gentleman to accept the fact that the NAACP and the Negro are inseparable and are indestructibly one. Nothing but futility will result from any attempt which may be made to drive a wedge between the Negro and the NAACP. Futhermore, the Negro is not begging or asking for a gratuity. He is demanding a constitutional right. In order that our thinking may not be clouded with emotion and that the issue be kept in its proper prospective, we can not over-emphasize the latter point too strongly—the right as an American citizen to choose for himself that which he thinks best for himself, his right to equality, justice and freedom. These rights he has earned and purchased with the sweat and blood of his enslaved ancestors, and the blood of his kinsmen who died on Pork Chop Hill in Korea. No, not a gratuity, a right. He demands nothing more; he will accept nothing less.

Sat. 1-30-54

THE NEGRO takes heart from the fact that these are momentous times in history. He realizes with acute awareness that the flame of freedom burns with added resilience not only on his breast, but is aglow in many lands—India, China, Burma, Indo-China and Africa. He knows that God and history and right are with him. Too, he senses the fact that world opinion lies in the balance for him. Not to seize this propitious moment would be a catastrophic blunder which future generations would never forgive. His means is integration; his guide is faith; his end is equality. Therefore, he intends to press the end with relentlessness, but with the calm assurance that equality, justice and freedom will come. They will come as inevitably as tomorrow comes. Freedom to pursue happiness-freedom to live wherever he wishes; yes, and freedom to attend school where he is academically qualified.

Editorial

THOSE WHO labor under the delusion that Negroes seek integration merely to mingle and associate with the whites because they believe the whites to be a superior race indulge in erroneous thinking. Any superiority or alleged superiority which requires force or law to sustain itself is, in the judgment of many educated persons, not superiority but weakness.

EDITORIALLY SPEAKING

Myth About Negro Teachers

All who read this will remember that one of the myths and goblins that has been manufactured by the opponents of desegregation, to frighten Negroes in general and Negro teachers in particular, has been the charge that Negro teachers would lose their jobs in an integrated school system These prophets of gloom have said: "Look at the thousands of Negro schcol teachers in the South. Do you want to lose those teaching jobs?" It is always good, when these myths and goblins are paraded in front of us, to take time out to separate the facts from the fiction.

Well, Kansas was one of the states involved in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States holding segregation to be a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. There was a recent Associated Press dispatch on what has happened on the desegregation front in that state, which just a few months ago was trying to get the Supreme Court to uphold the "separate but equal" doctrine. What is said in this article about the situation of Negro teachers is of special interest. Listen to this:

"Atchinson, the proslavery center in the days when Free Soilers and Dixie partisans clashed in 'bleeding Kansas', set a fast pace with integration of all but one of its divided schools this fall. It took the further step of hiring for the first time, a Negro teacher to instruct white--and eventually mixed--classes." Listen also to this:

"Lawrence, also in eastern Kansas, has hired a Negro to teach elementary school physical education."

It just shows that, instead of Negroes losing their teaching jobs, new teaching jobs are actually being opened to Negroes, where none existed before. It is always so with freedom, the more freedom there is. the more blessings there are for all. It is only where freedom is limited that the blessings to the sons and daughters of freedom are limited.

INTO AMERICA'S MAIN STREAM

One of the hopeful prospects from the era of integration now opening up is that, as Negro boys and girls prepare themselves in high school, college, or university, they will have opportunity for using their knowledge and skills in the main stream of American life, rather than only in the ghetto life of a segregated society. One glaring example for this needs is the field of journalism in the United States. Up until now the journalistic talents of Negroes have been confined almost exclusively to segregated Negro publications. There is now some hope that Negroes may have a wider opportunity for moving into America's main stream of journalistic endeavor.

One illustration is that George S. Schuyler, New York editor of The Pittsburgh Courier, is now writing for the Spadea Syndicate, and one of his pieces, "Governments Are Still Unsettled Below the Rio Grande," was the feature item in cartoon on the editorial page of a recent issue of the Twin City Sentinuel, afternoon white daily in Winston-Salem, N. C. The editors knew that Mr. Schuyler was a Negro. His piece was not the traditional discussion of race and color, neither of which was even mentioned. It was simply a critical analysis of the Communist problem in South America. If Mr. Schuyler's name had not appeared as the byline, there would have been no possible way for anybody to know that the piece was written by a Negro. Doubtless thousands of white readers of the paper still do not know that he is a Negro.

More and more Negroes must learn to develop skills and services and products and offer them into America's main stream purely on their merits. The fact that George S. Schuyler had this piece accepted by this syndicate and that at least one Southern daily feature it, with knowledge, on its editorial page is some indication of the possibilities.

The Economy Of Integration

The nation's capital is already proving the economy of integration of the schools in the District of Columbia. This is brought into graphic focus by the case of the two segregated teachers colleges which have been maintained in Washington: Miner Teachers College for Negroes and Harris Teachers College for whites. According to a news dispatch, there has been "an enrollment of 588 with thirty-five teachers" at Miner and "an enrollment of 348 with thirty-eight" instructors at Harris. After the present school year, the news story continues, "the two colleges will become one unit and will be located in the present Cardoza High School which is to be closed in June."

The closing of Cardoza, which has been made possible by integrating its Negro students into the other high schools of the District, will thus bring about a double saving. Under the segregated system Cardoza was needed to accommodate Negro students It is no longer needed under integration. Thus the District school system saves the operation of one full high school. That this is quite a saving is indicated by the statement in the news story that "it is also planned at the same time to open a junior high school unit in the Cardoza building to serve as a laboratory school for the merged colleges." The Cardoza building is thus large enough to accommodate the two merged colleges and to provide a laboratory junior high school as well.

On the side of the colleges, the economy will come in the elimination altogether of one of the two colleges which have heretofore been operated under the segregated pattern. This will save on building facilities and on staff as well. These savings can thus be made available for enriching and enlarging the training of prospective teachers. Justice thus results in economy and the net result is an enlargement of freedom and the improvement of citizenship.

THE REAL TROUBLE

By DEAN GORDON B. HANCOCK for ANP

In Richmond, Va., a public hearing is being held concerning the course Virginia will take in the current controversy over the Supreme court decision on segregation in our schools. Obviously the segregationists have "packed" the hearing; and they are attempting, by a strategy of numbers, to carry the day for segregation; and because the commitee was appointed by Gov. Stanley, who is himself a pro-segregationist, it takes no prophet to foretell the outcome of the hearing.

From the way the segregationists went about it, they are determined to keep segregation in Virginia and are refusing to face up to the problems integration will pose. But as was so aptly expressed by one of the integrationists, problems have never been solved by evasion and sooner or later they recur with multiplying possibilities.

Strangely enough, not a segregationist offered any good reason for continuing segregation. The most they had to offer was the suggestion that segregation was "better for both races;" but in just what particulars it was better, none dared to venture a reason.

But as every intelligent person knows, segregation is a concomitant of white supremacy, and is one of its buttresses. Without the assumption of white superiority and white supremacy, segregation looks silly; but with white supremacy predicated, it becomes a necessity and must be maintained at any cost. Nothing was said about the moral corruption that will come of trying to evade and destroy the law of the land; nothing has been said about the absurdity of looking to the law for protection on the one hand and descreating and destroying the law on the other; nothing has been said about the conflict between segregation and Christian ethic and the fundamental conflict between segregation and the teachings of Jesus Christ. In fact, the highest hurdle the segregationists are called upon to scale is the teaching of Jesus Christ. If the segregationists could somehow dispose of Jesus, they would have smooth sailing in their attempts to foist upon this nation forever the curse of segregation.

But as in that day that Jesus stood before Pilate, and forced upon the Roman official the choice between Himself and Barabbas, the real issue in this matter of segregation is Jesus Christ himself. The strength of the men fighting so valiantly for human rights and decency stems from the teachings of Jesus Christ. Even the Constitution, whose word and spirit are embodied in certain definite amendments, is motivated and grounded in the teachings of Jesus Christ.

If somehow Jesus Christ could be taken out of the picture, the segregationists would be divested of their pricking conscience which at present vexes them sorely. If somehow they did not have to deal with Christ along with the Negroes, they could maneuver their forces with more marked facility than at present. Even as was said of the chariots of Pharoah, "They drove them heavily," it may be said of the chariots of the segregationists, their chariots are driving heavily under the impact of the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. Let us not deceive ourselves, the real trouble in the premise is none other than Jesus Christ himself. If He could be taken out of the picture somehow, the decks of the segregationists would be cleared for action.

One of the heartening aspects of the hearing has been the stand taken by Christian whites in the name of Christian ethic. The sentiment on segregation among the whites is by no means unanimous. Although the audience is heavily packed, here and there a positive and timely voice is lifted for integration.

It is more than heartening to know that there are whites here in boss-ridden Virginia who are willing to stand up and be counted on the side of Christ and true democracy. Not only here and now, but wherever the cause of democracy and Christianity are jeopardized by color considerations, we will always find some democratic and Christian whites vigilant and valiant in their stand for righteousness. Herein lies the hope of the nation. The real trouble in the segregation issue is Jesus Christ.

Educators Take Stand For Intergration

Probably the best, most comprehensive, meaningful and sober statement endorsing the Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregation came from a group of Southern Negro educators a fortnight ago at Hot Springs, Arkansas. The statement referred to was published in its entirety in the columns of this newspaper last week.

With the essence of true statesmanship, tact, restraint but resolute firmness it was clearly obvious as to where intelligent and militant Negro leadership stands on the whole matter of segregation in our Nation's Public Schools.

Briefly their position was that the decision was inevitable and consistent with the movement toward full democracy in this country and that its immediate implementation should and can be effected through sober and intelligent planning by Americans who believe in the ideal of human brotherhood and true democracy.

Their advice to other educators, clear and unmistakable was: "Negro educators should not and cannot afford to be a party to any plan designed to nullify the court's decision . . . to do this would be tantamount to sharing in a plan to destroy the very fabric of our Constitutional Government."

Further that they stand ready, willing and able to cooperate with those of goodwill and honest intent to implement the court's decision.

The statement was truly one which every Negro living in America could be intensely proud of because it spelled out once and for all times where our leadership stands . . . on the side of law and order.

Without a doubt the statement made the bitter and bigoted opposition look extremely small and cheap, as well as totally unaware of the decision's significance to an uneasy, tension filled world.

Surely the statement should be reassuring, heartwarming and inspiring to all Negroes.

Louisiana educators who had a hand in making the statement were Dr. A. W. Dent of Dillard U. and George Longe of the new Alfred G. Lawless School of New Orleans.

We hope that every Negro thoroughly familiarizes himself with the historic statement because it is truly great as well as informative.

In our humble way, we sincerely and proudly commend the makers of the statement for their wisdom, courage and good sense.

Our Opinions

It Is Still Wrong

We regret that the four to four decision of the United States Supreme Court failed to change a lower court opinion that constitutional violations were involved in the denial of a burial plot to an American soldier hero because he was not white.

Sgt. John Rice, who was part Indian was killed while fighting as a soldier in the United States army in Korea in 1951. His white widow, Evelyn, was prevented from burying his body in Sioux City Memorial Park cemetery because of a racial restrictive clause.

Former President Truman was so disturbed when he heard of the incident that he ordered that the body of the hero be taken to Washington for interment in Arlington National cemetery with highest military honors.

The widow sued the cemetery for $60,000 damages. The cemetery justified its action on the strength of the restrictive clause and was upheld by the Iowa courts.

Her lawyers in appealing to the U. S. Supreme Court argued that the ruling gave judicial sanction to racial discrimination and pointed out that the Supreme Court had earlier decreed that restrictive clauses in real estate contracts could not be enforced in the courts.

Attorneys for the cemetery successfully argued that no effort was being made on the part of the state to enforce restrictive agreements.

Enough of the justices agreed to allow the lower court decision to stand.

The legal complexities baffle us, but we know an injustice exists when an American citizen who has given up his life in defense of his country can't be buried in a plot of ground because his ancestors were the wrong color or race.

If a legal attack were made uopn this restrictive clause from another angle we feel it might be ruled out.

It should be done so that no other hero's body must be brought home to dishonor and his homeland humiliated.

The Sooner The Better

The southern press seems to feel that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is unfairly pressing an advantage in asking that the United States Supreme Court set next year as the deadline for compliance with the May 17 decision.

This is not so.

The decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools should never have been necessary. But since it had to be made because of the blunder made 50 years ago in the Plessy vs Ferguson case, it came very late.

It was made to correct a situation as damaging to the United States as a cancerous growth is to the human body. It was like the first step of an operation. The sooner it is completed the better. It may hurt, but pain sometimes is necessary to

Most of the states are seeking a way not only to delay the execution of the decision but also means of circumvention. They don't want to comply this year, next year or ever.

It would be making a mockery of our highest court to indulge these whims. The court has spoken and the sooner the law is affected the sooner a handicap is removed from millions of little Americans who have been disadvantaged because of color.

The NAACP is right. Now is the time.

Nickles And Dimes Will Not Do The Job

One of the decisions Negro leadership must instantly come to is that to secure the new advantages and opportunities looming just ahead of us, Negro leadership cannot afford the nickle and dime attitude and approach any longer. From here on out it is going to take leadership that spends its cash until it hurts. Instead of the average man in his community giving nothing more individually than the crowd he leads ,he must set a definite and positive example of going deep into his pocket for cash in order to spell out clearly what his followers should attempt.

No more must we have a leadership that says "Don't do as I do, but do as I say." We cannot get far with that type of leadership. We are now moving out into the field of freedom and opportunity where we must copy the action and attitude of the dominant group who offer positive and concrete leadership in giving until it hurts.

Take the NAACP. It has set 1963 as the date when the American Negro will attempt to achieve absolute freedom under the American system of government. This advance in democracy is not something that is going to just happen, 15,000,000 black men and women are going to have to make it happen, and it is going to take an entirely different approach to public questions and issues to achieve the proposed end.

In keeping with this idea the NAACP has created life memberships in the NAACP in the sum of $500.000. This is a wide leap from the $2.00 membership, but it is essential and necessary that this be done as a guide post for Mr. Ordinary Citizen, and what he should do. There are in every community scores of citizens who can purchase life memberships, for it is split up into ten equal payments of $50.00 each, and who is there among the Negro group, who, if he will, cannot afford to set aside $50.00 annually for this worthy cause, and for the dream all Negroes have of a society where he will be accorded every immolument and privilege given other citizens.

The time has come when Negroes in every community who have prospered should be able to say "I am a life member of the NAACP." You know up to now we have been saying "Yes, I have my membership card in the NAACP, and reach in our billfold and pull out a little measely $2.00 membership card. That time should be past with every black man who seeks to lead black men and women in the United States. Negro business and professional men, prosperous farmers and everyone who has gotten out of the reach of an emergency economy, where the average Negro has hitherto been held in a vise, should immediately make arrangements to purchase life memberships in the NAACP. In fact a life membership card in your bill fold should be the identifying mark of your leadership.

One can see right at the present moment that the task of integration as ordered by the high court is going to be resisted. It is going to be opposed in many strange places, and to perform the legalistic task necessary to force compliance money will have to be requisitioned as never before. Reaction is going to try every method possible to prevent full citizenship from settling down upon the shoulders of black citizenry and now is the time to give of your substance as God has prospered you.

It used to be that $500.00 was a whole lot of money, but it is not any more. There are at least two thousand Negroes in Oklahoma City, who if they decided in their own minds they wanted to set aside $50.00 annually for freedom, could do that just as easily as they could the $2.00 they have been giving. There is not a doctor, preacher or school teacher in Oklahoma City, who could not purchase a life membership in the NAACP if he would. It would mean no more to them than omitting to get that new suit or new dress. It is just that simple.

But whether it is done or not, we still want to point out that this traditional yanking out of $2.00 membership cards to display, on the part of prosperous, outstanding leaders in the community, should end. From here on out, a man who cannot pull out a life membership card should be looked upon with suspicion.

Motive for Gradualism

The United States Supreme Court should decree an immediate end to segregation in public schools, the NAACP boldly declares in its brief filed Monday.

Acting for the parents in the Kansas, South Carolina and Virginia cases and respondents in the Delaware case, it has hammered home two strong irrefutable points.

They contend:

1. That having decided that states which segregate public school children are acting unlawfully, the Supreme Court lacks the power to decree desegregation gradually, and

2. If the Court does decide that a gradual approach is desirable, under no circumstances should desegregation be delayed beyond September, 1956.

In support of Point No. 1, the NAACP asserts it has been unable to find any precedent for delay after the court has made a ruling involving constitutional rights.

"It would be paradoxical indeed if it were decided for the first time that constitutional rights must be postponed because of anticipation of difficulties arising out of local feelings," it was argued.

Cited were two cases which involved the question of imperilling national defense.

In each case, the court held that granting relief to persons being deprived of their constitutional rights cannot be delayed even to further the war effort.

"Each day the relief is postponed is to the appelants a day of serious and irreparable injury," asserts the NAACP, "for this court has announced that segregation in public schools generates a feeling of inferiority . . . that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely even to be undone."

The NAACP, too, is on sound ground when it contends there simply is no basis for the assumption, held by all of the affected states, that gradual desegregation is better, smoother or more effective than immediate desegregation.

On the contrary, all experience indicates that gradualism only serves to make the situation worse.

Certainly opponents of immediate desegregation have no logic to support their belief that the process of transition would be more effective if allowed to lapse into years.

It is conceivable as the NAACP points out, that in some communities brief delay might be made mandatory because of administrative difficulties.

But even here, a definite and specific deadline must be fixed by the court or the momentary delays could be allowed to drag out for years.

Florida has already suggested that it would take a "generation." Virginia has frankly said, "We do not foresee a complete solution at any future time."

Here is sufficient evidence that the court must not send these cases back to the lower courts without writing into the decrees a deadline not later than September, 1956.

The truth is the NAACP has put its finger on the real motive behind outbreak of impassioned pleas for gradualism.

"Much of the opposition to forthwith desegregation," its brief pointedly concludes, "does not truly rest on any theory that it is better to accomplish it gradually.

"In considerable part, if indeed not in the main, such opposition stems from a desire that desegregation not be undertaken at all."

Washington Post Hits Postponement

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — The Washington Post and Times Herald saw in the action of the Senate Judiciary committee postponing until January consideration of the nomination of Judge John M. Harlan as an associate justice of the Supreme Court use of "a senatorial prerogative to make it more difficult" for the court to go ahead with the school segregation cases.

Commenting editorially on the delay under the heading, "Mr. Eastland's Obstruction," the Post said Senator James O. Eastland, Democrat, of Mississippi, whose objection caused the committee to postpone hearings on Mr. Harlan until January, "cited no good reason for his course." The Post added:

"But everyone knows that the argument on how the court should carry out its antisegregation ruling has been set for December. The effect of the Eastland objection is to force the court to go ahead with only eight members on the bench or postpone this important and long-scheduled hearing.

"Of course, the Senator had a right to object, and if any serious question concerning the nomination of Mr. Harlan had been raised, a careful investigation would be necessary.

"But the only objections filed with the Judiciary Committee have been too trivial to justify a moment's consideration. One letter complained that Mr. Harlan was a Rhodes scholar, others that he has been a member of the advisory board of the Atlantic Union, that he lacks sufficient experience and that his law firm once represented a telephone company.

Senator Eastland did not dignify these objections by referring to them and the effect was to leave his obstruction entirely without justification. In the circumstances, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that he used a senatorial prerogative to make it more difficult for the Supreme Court to go ahead with the segregation case."

THERE WAS MORE than passing significance in the action of the Southern Governors Conference, representing 13 states, in refusing to support the move of Florida's governor to put the conference on formal record as rejecting the Supreme Court school desegregation decision and calling for a constitutional amendment to permit states to continue dual systems separating the races educationally.

Governor Johns of Florida surprised his associates at the beginning of the meeting with his resolution, and met initial defeat when it was ruled that the matter could not be voted on until referred to the governors' resolution committee. This latter body rejected the resolution.

There was every reason for the state executives to "play ball" with the Floridian from an emotional and political standpoint. Although seven governors and one governor-elect issued a statement in their individual capacities protesting against racially mixed schools, five other governors and one governor-elect declined to be co-signers.

As a harbinger of things to come, the lists of for and against governors, in the matter of the protest statement, is worth study and thought. Signing up were Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia, Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, Allan Shivers of Texas, Charley E. Johns of Florida, Herman E. Talmadge of Georgia, and Johnston Murray of Oklahoma. That any of these signed occasions no surprise at all. They represent the worse in southern politics. They range from hide-bound conservatism to outright demagoguery.

The non-signers rate special attention. They were Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland, Lawrence W. Wetherby of Kentucky, Frank G. Clement of Tennessee, Francis Cherry of Arkansas, William C. Marland of West Virginia, and (guess who!!) James E. Folsom (governor-elect) of Alabama. The governors of North Carolina and Delaware were not on hand, nor was Governor Gordon Persons of Alabama. The standpatters said that Governor Hugh White of Mississippi and Governor-elect Leroy Collins of Florida had left the conference site before their statement was signed.

What we believe is the real attitude of the silent but conscientious good people of the South, as contrasted to the noisy irreconcilables and outright bigots, was voiced by Maryland's McKeldin:

"It is the duty of every citizen to accept the Supreme Court decree regardless of how he feels about the matter . . . Any other course would undermine the very foundation of law and order."

In Contrasting Earl Warren And John Marshall Southerners Ignore Events Of History

(An Editorial)

IN CONNECTION with the organized official snub which the top figures of Virginia's government staged at Williamsburg last Saturday it has been interesting to read some of the contrasts drawn between CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL who was being honored, and CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN, who was the principal speaker for the United States on the occasion.

MR. WARREN is credited with having written, as well as having delivered the Court's unanimous opinion in the school segregation cases. The entire Court agreed to the opinion. Three of its members were bred and born in the South—JUSTICES BLACK, CLARK, and REID, and JUSTICE MINTON has a distinct Southern flavor. They joined in making the decision unanimous.

But MR. WARREN has drawn all of the censure from those who dislike the decision. When he was invited to Virginia to share in honoring MARSHALL, who was a Virginian and a distinguished Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointment of PRESIDENT ADAMS on January 31st, 1801, some Virginians, unaware of his nearness to the MARSHALL pattern, thought they were honoring MARSHALL by showing official discourtesy to WARREN.

As compared to CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL the present Chief Justice has been referred to by some lawyers in private practice, some legislators, some governors, and some attorney generals (particularly Virginia's MR. ALMOND) as a law-breaker. They claimed that the May 17th decision was an unconscionable violation of States' Rights.

DONALD RICHBURG, a long-time corporation lawyer, and now a visiting law professor at the University of Virginia, addressed the Maine Bar Association last week on the subject of "Lawlessness in High Places." His target was CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN, and his motive was to brand the Chief Justice as a lawbreaker—a violator of constitutional principles.

Commenting on MR. RICHBURG'S address ROSS VALENTINE, a Richmond newspaper columnist, said that if the Court undertook to implement the principle that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, "the court will no longer be a freeman's court." MR. VALENTINE added that "It will have constituted itself into a 'people's court,' uninhibited by constitutional restrictions."

The history of JOHN MARSHALL'S legal independence and of some of his decisions have been forgotten by present-day Virginians. It was his judicial breadth and independence that made him great.

The Encyclopaedia Britannica says of him:

"The advent of the new chief justice was marked by a change in the conduct of business of the court. Since its organization, following the prevailing English custom, the judges had pronounced their opinions seriatim. But beginning with the December term 1801, the chief justice became practically the sole mouthpiece of the court. For eleven years the opinions are almost exclusively his, and there are few recorded dissents. The change was admirably adapted to strengthen the power and dignity of the court. Marshall . . . delivered the opinion in . . . practically all cases involving the interpretation of the constitution."

The Britannica notes that "the task of expounding the constitution in the most critical period of its history was his," and quotes historic cases in which MARSHALL'S decisions "adopted a principle which is now generally perceived to be essential to the preservation of the United States as a Federal State." We quote from two of them:

In Marbury vs. Madison MARSHALL decided "that it was the duty of the court to disregard any act of Congress, and, therefore, a fortiori, any act of a legislature of one of the states, which the court thought contrary to the Federal constitution."

In Cohens vs. Virginia, he held that Congress could lawfully pass an act which permitted a person convicted in a State court, to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, if he alleged that the state act under which he was convicted conflicted with the Federal constitution or with an act of Congress."

Britannica says further: "During his life he was charged by followers of the States Rights school of political thought with upholding Federal power in cases not warranted by the constitution."

That is exactly what many Virginians, and others, who revere MARSHALL, charge WARREN with doing. He started out in the MARSHALL tradition. We venture the assertion that if JOHN MARSHALL and his associate justices had been given the task of deciding the question out of which came the historic decision of May 17, 1954, and had been given the same circumstances, it would have been decided just as it was decided by WARREN and his associate justices.

It is not conceiveable that anyone could reasonably charge the Chief Justice and his eight associates (including three southerners) with "breaking the law" and "disregarding" the Constitution. Such a travesty on justice just would not be unanimously participated in by nine great jurists, all wholly free of political reprisals by virtue of life-time appointments, and all men of great integrity, dedicated (as CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN said Saturday at Williamsburg) to "do equal and impartial justice to all its citizens."

The Federal Government's Plea For Moderation In Integration

Journal & Guide p. 10

Norfolk, Va.

THE PAST WEEK and a half has been a period of momentous incidents along the road toward desegregation of the public schools of the country not now integrated.

Virginia held and completed its public hearing on the question, then the commonwealth's school segregation commission decided against any further hearings "at this time."

12-11-54

A number of affected states filed briefs with the U. S. Supreme Court relating to the manner of desegregation, as did NAACP attorneys for the parents of children who were plaintiffs in the five historic suits, and the government of the United States, thru its Attorney-General, filed its brief as a friend of the court and on the side of desegregation.

At a press conference PRESIDENT EISENHOWER gave some extended comments on school integration, in an unprecedented exposition by a Chief Executive on a pending court case. And the Senate's judiciary committee, at the instance of a southern member, decided to put off until the new Congress convenes next year action on the President's nomination of a new justice for the high court, JOHN MARSHALL HARLAN.

Finally, the court postponed the December 6th hearing on its forthcoming desegregation decrees, which will implement its May 17th ruling, because it does not deem it wise to act until it has a full membership (MR. JUSTICE JACKSON recently died).

THE LAST EVENT may have a most vital effect on the time when the implementing court decrees are finally handed down, for if the court chooses not to tackle the admittedly prickly problem of actual desegregation procedure and timing except when it has a full membership, then southern senators can be counted upon to postpone that day to the limit by filibustering the HARLAN appointment or even, with Democratic control of the Senate next year, forcing the President to withdraw the HARLAN nomination and substitute another more acceptable to the anti-integrationists.

They have a hunch that the justice-appointee will decidedly be on the side of the desegregation devil because his grandfather was the lone dissenter from the Ferguson vs. Plessy decision of 1896.

That decision held segregation to be constitutional provided the Negro got equality under separateness a pious belief never realized in practice.

THE NAACP attorneys the week before told the high court that they would like integration to commence not later than September, 1955, with September '56 as the deadline, in the process of complying with the court's finding of unconstitutionality of school segregation. Six southern states' briefs all held that an abrupt abandonment of dual school systems would be dangerous. Virginia argued that in some areas of the state they could never be combined and North Carolina predicted bloodshed and race riots in some places when integration is tried.

Five of the six state briefs relative to the decrees, and the NAACP lawyers', as well as U. S. ATTORNEY GENERAL BROWNELL'S, recommended that the Supreme Court delegate to the various U. S. District Courts the actual implementation of the desegregation decision. Only MR. BROWNELL and the plaintiffs' attorneys, headed by the brilliant THURGOOD MARSHALL, urged the court to retain jurisdiction in any case, so that any unreasonable delay and obvious evasion could be promptly handled.

While the NAACP formally is against more than a year's delay in full school integration, MR. BROWNELL voiced the federal government's willingness to permit the states more time, where needed. But the government is not willing to let that time be interminable. Said MR. BROWNELL:

Popular hostility to desegregation, while admitted and recognized, "can afford no legal justification for a failure to end school segregation . . . Racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, and will have to be terminated, regardless of how much it may be favored by some people in the community."

And he significantly adds: "Any proposal for desegregation over an indefinite period will be unacceptable." (Our italics.—Editor)

IN COMMENT we've seen to this writing, a most notable aspect of the BROWNELL brief seems to have been overlooked and its meaning missed. In his reasoning for a position of moderation and patience in the process of integration, the Attorney General speaks of the reluctance of parents sending their children to schools "markedly inferior to those previously attended, "meaning perhaps the impact of integration that moves a child from a previously all-white to a previously all-Negro school.

It stresses the fact that Negro schools have not been equal in the training and the curriculum offered, to white schools, a finding recently stressed after a study by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. Because of this he foresees difficulties for Negro students transferring, without loss of class standing, to a superior white school, and even envisions a mass examination to reclassify transferring Negro students.

The importance of this official concern with the past and present quality of Negro schools is the indirect affirmation it provides of the key complaint of integrationists—that segregation itself is discriminatory and no real equality of schools ever exists under a dual system. If anything, it should satisfy the court that its May 17th finding was sound, reasonable, and eminently timely.

If the inequality which exists is so monumental as to constitute one of the major administrative roadblocks to integration as MR. BROWNELL contends, then the educational short-changing which has gone on for decades is notoriously bad, as bad as claimed, and is overdue for elimination.

NO REASONABLE white southerner can sensibly complain that the federal government, speaking through its chief legal officer, has been anything but reasonable and sympathetic in the position taken through the brief just filed. In some aspects it will disappoint some people. It is a middle-of-the-road proposal. It completely disarms those die-hards who have contended that "extremists" have been in the saddle on the issue.

It will be a sad day when the contemptuous label of "extremist" can be pinned on a citizen, a lawyer, an editor, or a governmental official who simply says with MR. BROWNELL that everyone is obligated to "respect and abide by the law" (our italics) and that "every officer and agency of government, federal, state, and local, is likewise charged with the duty of enforcing the Constitution and the rights guaranteed under it."

To hear the comments of some southerners, one must conclude that their memories of the oaths of office which they so solemnly swore, are lamentably short.

Urges "Lower Court" Handling Of School De-Segregation In South

Homer P.1 Sat. 12-4-54 P.1

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — Final decrees of the United States Supreme Court in the school segregation case should require rapid desegregation of public schools but permit an "intelligent, orderly, and effective solution" of the problems arising in desegregated school systems, Attorney General. Herbert J. Brownell, Jr., declared Wednesday. Mr. Brownell urged that the case be remanded to the lower courts with instructions to order the immediate admission of colored pupils to former all-white schools or require school authorities to submit within ninety days plans for desegregation.

This was stated in a brief filed in the Supreme Court by Mr. Brownell for the United States. It was in response to an invitation from the court to him to participate in the further argument of the cases on the questions of how and when the court's decision against segregated public schools shall be carried out.

The Government urges that the final decrees declare that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional and that all provisions of law compelling or permitting such segregation are invalid.

Houston, Texas P.12

Mr. Brownell suggests that the final decrees contain the following instructions.

1. That the lower courts immediately enter orders directing the defendants to submit within ninety days a plan for ending, "as soon as feasible," segregation in public schools subject to their authority or control.

2. That, unless a satisfactory plan is submitted to and approved by the lower court, it shall immediately order the admission of the plaintiffs and other children similarly situated to nonsegregated public schools at the beginning of the school year.

3. That, upon submission of a plan by the defendants, the lower courts shall promptly hold a hearing to determine whether it provides for transition to a non-segregated school system as rapidly as the circumstances permit.

In approving any proposed plan, the court shall make such changes as may be required, and shall fix the earliest practicable date for completion of the program.

4. During the period, if any, allowed for the changeover to a nonsegregated system, the lower court shall require the defendants to submit detailed periodic reports showing the progress made in ending segregation.

Homer

Mr. Brownell also suggests that the Supreme Court itself retain jurisdiction so that it may enter any further orders which may be necessary for carrying out its mandate.

Sat. 12-4-54

He proposes that the lower courts be required to submit reports to the Supreme Court at specified intervals showing in detail the actions taken in bringing about compliance with constitutional requirements.

P.12

"The responsibility for achieving compliance with the court's decision in these cases does not rest on the judiciary alone," the Government brief states, adding:

"Every officer and agency of government, federal, state, and local, is likewise charged with the duty of enforcing the Constitution and the rights guaranteed under it. And, ultimately, it is the obligation of every citizen to respect and abide by the law, once it is authoritatively declared.

"We have no doubt that the American people and the officials through whom they act will meet these responsibilities in the spirit, to quote the words of the President, of "patience without compromise of principle."

Houston, Texas

School authorities and the judges of the lower courts in each area, the brief says, have the greatest familiarity with local conditions and are in the best position to evaluate their significance and effect in ending segregation in as short a period as feasible.

For the reason, the brief, the Supreme Court should not outline the precise steps that each of the defendants should take in ending public school segregation.

"Instead," the brief says, "the primary responsibility for both devising and carrying out programs for the expeditious accomplishment of the required transition should be placed upon the defendants, to be exercised under the continuing direct supervision of the district courts or appropriate state courts."

But the Supreme Court, the brief adds, should lay down standards to guide the lower courts in carrying out its decision. "A remand for further proceedings, without more," it states, "would add to the uncertainty and doubt which already exist and would only serve to make the process of adjustment more difficult."

The lower courts should be instructed to order the defendants to admit colored children immediately to public schools on a nonsegregated basis or propose promptly, for the court's consideration and approval, an effective plan for making the changeover as soon as practicable.

In passing upon proposed programs, the brief states, their acceptability should be determined by showing of the defendants that their particular plan will bring about the "total elimination of racial considerations in the admission of pupils to public schools as rapidly as local conditions allow."

"Where there are no solid obstacles to desegregation, delay is not justified and should not be permitted," the Government declares.

It is only where the lower court finds, upon clear and convincing evidence, that the defendants have met the burden of showing that abolition of segregation by the beginning of the next school term is impracticable that any delay is justifiable, the brief states.

In such a situation, the district court should fix the shortest practicable period of completing desegregation, it adds.

The Supreme Court should not enter any order which will have the effect of slowing down desegregation where it could be swiftly accomplished, the Government states.

But it should make clear that any proposal for desegregation over an indefinite period of time will be unacceptable, the brief states, and that there can be no justifications anywhere for failure to make "an immediate and substantial start toward desegregation, in a good-faith effort to end segregation as soon as feasible."

"Any period during which little or nothing is being done to further the transition would serve no useful purpose and, indeed, would only intensify the difficulties", the Government states adding:

"Where a period of time is allowed for transition, it should be for the sole purpose of enabling necessary constructive measures to be taken, and not for the purpose of permitting postponement per se."

If the plan for desegregation, proposed by school authorities, will remove, as rapidly as possible, state-imposed or state-supported racial classifications of public school pupils, the lower courts should not substitute their judgments respecting the administrative features of the program for that of the school authorities, the brief states.

'Desegregation Differences Minor' - Lautier

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Differences between the Eisenhower Administration and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People over the questions of how and when the United States Supreme Court shall put into effect its decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools, are minor!

Courier P.1

The position of the Administration is set out in a brief filed in the Supreme Court by the Department of Justice for the United States as a friend of the court.

Both the Justice Department and the NAACP are agreed that there should be no unnecessary delay in desegregating the public schools.

Marshall argues that only a decree requiring desegregation as quickly as necessary adjustments and mechanical changes can be made will uphold the Constitutional rights of all children.

In asking that the cases be remanded to the lower courts, Mr. Brownell urges the Supreme Court to instruct the lower courts to order school authorities to submit within ninety days plans for desegregation of the schools; to hold hearings on the proposed plan to determine its feasibility, and to supervise the program.

Court decision, nothing to crow about. On its very first page it declares that "It is now the settled law of the land that segregation of white and colored children in the public schools of a state or of the District of Columbia is unconstitutional."

In its conclusion it places responsibility for achieving compliance with the decision against segregated public schools where it properly belongs—not solely on the judiciary.

Eisenhower Issues Orders to the Supreme Court

Somehow we cannot get away from the idea that the Republican party has abandoned the Negro vote, since the announcement from the President and the attorney general that they are proposing the Supreme Court permit the inferior federal courts in the United States to enforce the court's order on a regional basis. There is not enough centralization of authority in government and it looks as though this is a bid made to the reactionary wing of the party who believe in state's rights. To sum it up, it appears the South would be left to administer its own idea about the intermingling of the races.

But the President and his attorney general have no more power and authority over the Supreme Court than this writer. All they can do is recommend, and this suggestion will be recognized as such by the Supreme Court. The suggestion simply serves to reflect the position taken by the executive branch of the government since the recent election.

But if the President and his assistant are actually reneging from their previous position, it immediately faces the Democratic party with a challenging situation. It places the Republcans in the states rights lair and forces the progressive wing of the Democratic party to carry the ball of freedom.

Everyone knows that in a more or less degree, Byrnes, Talmadge and Hugh White of Missippi have a following and that if left alone there would not be any change in the relationship to services offered Negroes in public places in Dixie. That's what the President and Brownell suggest.

But thank God we have men who will be in the congress, where through legislation much of the segregation question will have to be implemented, like Alben Barkley of Kentucky, who was elected to the senate on a platform demanding a national FEPC law, and for carrying out the Supreme Court's ruling on ending school segregation. Such men, along with other liberal Democrats in the senate, are likely to carry the ball for civil rights. Barkley also seeks repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, which means that labor, plus the Negro, will be in the same political pool together.

During the next two years, leading up to the presidential election, all of the New Deal and Fair Deal programs will get a thorough going over, so that every American citizen will have a fairly good idea as to where both parties stand on these questions including the matter of segregation and the method to be used in implementing the Supreme Court's order.

We have said this before, and we repeat: the Republicans have no right to claim they are responsible for the vote of nine men on the Supreme Court bench, and it appears that is the way they feel about it, which they quite evidently did when the President and his attorney general direct the Supreme Court to settle the matter on a state's rights level. We have an idea there are some men on that court who think quite differently. When you elect a man for life to a job, he reaches his judgments outside the realm of transient expediency. He is likely to determine the right and wrong of matters far more carefully than the man who must seek his office at the gift of the people every two or four years.

This recommendation is certainly a challenge to the Democratic party, and we are wondering if they will accept the suggestion of the Republicans to change horses in the middle of the stream. Here we are almost at the door o social decency and the Republicans suggest that the naughty boys down South be permitted to decide what is and what is not segregation; what is right and what is wrong about the separation of the races.

Of course, it should be recalled the South was all primed to argue the judiciary had no right to dictate to the legislative branch, if the Supreme Court should have suggested certain legislation necessary for the enforcement of desegregation. We wonder now, since the executive branch has seen fit to tell the judiciary where to head in, whether there will be any discussion raised regarding the invasion by one unit of the federal structure by another. It appears to the Black Dispatch it is just as unconstitutional for the President and his attorney general to tell the Supreme Court what to do as it would be for the Supreme Court to advise the congress what laws it should pass. The South, however, does not seem to be affronted by this unusual action of the President and his attorney general.

At any rate, Negroes in the United States are going to stand with bated breath to find out whether seven Democratic members of the Supreme Court will be dictated to by a Republican president. It is our judgment the Democratic party has within its reach the opportunity to cement the Negro to the party of Jefferson as never before. If seven men take the position on the court that desegregation should be implemented by the Supreme Court itself, Negroes will know then that freedom from second class citizenship came from Democrats. If they follow the Eisenhower formula there will be no one to profit by such proceedure except Republicans.

The court has held that the separate but equal doctrine is a myth. It has said that segregation of the races in public places is unconstitutional. It set November 6 as the date to inaugurate this revolutionary program. It seems to us that President Eisenhower is now asking the court to reverse itself. He knows to leave this matter up to the states is to retain the status quo. The issue rests between centralization of authority and state's rights.

Milford and Mobs

This is a mob scene.

The above photograph was made by AFRO staff photographer Henry Phillips in front of the Lakeview High School at Milford, Delaware last week.

The picture could be duplicated in many small communities where desegregation must soon be attempted.

But it doesn't have to be.

The inevitable step toward obeying the Supreme Court's public school decision can be brought to pass without incident.

Where official action is firm, determined and unwavering as in Fayetteville, Ark., Carthage, Mo., Wilmington and Dover, Delaware, Baltimore, Washington and scores of communities across the land, nothing has happened.

Where a governor, or an attorney general, or a State Board of Education or a local Board of Education has displayed timidity, uncertainty and weakness such as was the case at White Sulphur Springs and Fairmont, West Virginia and Hillsboro, Ohio, scenes like the one above are certain to result.

When responsible officials fail to assume their legal responsibilities, the door is left wide open for the cynical irresponsibles to step in and fan to flame whatever smoldering coals of hatred and bigotry that may exist.

That's what happened at Milford.

Into the breach left by the indecision of constituted authority walked a brash, young opportunist named Bryant W. Bowles.

The president and founder of the modern successor to the Ku Klux Klan, he proceeded to harangue Milford's misguided majority of parents to giving him $5 each for dubious memberships in what he ironically calls the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

And it's fairly certain that $5 is just the beginning.

What will come the sale of badges, night sticks, storm trooper boots, bedsheet regalia and all the other equipment used by bombers and night riders.

But despite all this ten out of the 11 colored children who were entitled to attend Lakeview High School showed up for class until a new school board surrendered to bigotry and lawlessness and forced them out.

But the setback can only be temporary.

The eventual outcome of this small struggle in the momentous fight for equality has never been in doubt. These ten courageous youngsters can be assured of that fact.

They can remain fortified with the comfortable knowledge that on their side are the U.S. Constitution, world public opinion, and the great majority of Americans who sincerely believe in freedom, fairplay and equal justice.

The 1st and 14th

Some of our white friends who are vocal in their advocacy of freedom of religion, freedom of the press and freedom of speech are equally as vocal in arguing for segregation.

The three freedoms are guaranteed in Article I, sometimes referred to as the Bill of Rights of the United States Constitution.

The freedom of all citizens to use public institutions alike is guaranteed in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

If our friends are consistent, all of the amendments to the Constitution should be equally sacred.

Ready For Integration

It appears that Lester Granger, who writes a column just across the way from this space, went down to the North Carolina Teachers Association while it was in session at Raleigh in April and made a speech.

Mr. Granger, according to the copy of the script we saw, went on to give his reasons why we aren't ready.

According to him, the answer can be found in any Negro conversation. He is concerned about the "sly little jokes" that reflect our lack of confidence in our own group life and our group abilities.

He spelled out the clownish ways that some of our youngsters walk, talk and dress and saw their "rejection" of what we consider the cultured standards of American life.

He offered the social records of the various Negro communities as evidence for his conclusion and pointed out the high incidents of delinquency among Negro youths and the high mortality rate in the Negro neighborhood.

Mr. Granger is an experienced and a distinguished social scientist with a solid background of outstanding achievement in his field and what he says cannot be dismissed lightly.

But we think the gentleman is wrong. After 300 years of sweating and praying and cursing and fighting for first-class citizenship, we should be ready for all the rights and privileges and duties that go along with full integration in the American life.

We havec ertainly waited long enough for a chance to prove whether we are ready or not and we think we are entitled to have that chance unmolested by our impatient superiors.—Amsterdam News.

DELAWARE'S DISGRACE

Wilmington, Del. — The school incidents at Milford have served to disgrace Delaware before the eyes of the world.

Such bigotry and prejudice is expected in South Carolina or Mississippi, but comes as a rude shock to most Delewarens to find that it exists in their state.

(Mrs.) VIVIAN WADE

New York — Why would the Delaware State Board of Education seek a ruling on the Milford situation from the State Supreme Court?

Both the Delaware court and the U.S. Supreme Court have held that to compel one race of pupils to travel 19 miles to school, while another attends class right in the community is discrimination and therefore unconstitutional.

And this decision pre-dates by several years the Supreme Court's momentous decision of May 17, 1954 holding that segregation, itself, is unconstitutional.

MARIAN WATKINS

Harrisburg, Pa. — Gov. J. Caleb Boggs didn't reflect any glory upon himself by his dilly dallying tactics in the Milford matter.

If he had moved without delay to back up the Milford board of education when it made its courageous and legal move toward integration, there would have been no trouble.

Instead his early attitude of 'looking the other way' merely encouraged the bigots to become bolder.

It was a sorry exhibition of a responsible official ducking his responsibilities.

ARTHUR COATS

Washington—I think it's about time for Attorney General Herbert Brownell to begin an investigation of a new trouble-making agency which ironcially calls itself the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

It is this outfit, one gathers from news reports, that was behind all the disturbance in Milford, Del. It is the NAAWP that is whipping up hate talk and keeping things in foment.

Delaware has a law providing severe penalties for persons found guilty of fomenting riots. If this isn't what the NAAWP is trying to do, maybe I don't understand the law.

PAUL McKINNEY

Atlanta — Bryant W. Bowles, the Florida - born president of the NAAWP, has taken a page out of Ku Klux Klan history and is making it pay off.

He's collecting $5 from each sucker he can find who's willing to pay for being prejudiced. Thus far he claims to have roped in 50,000 members.

That's $250,000 and no end in sight. Maybe the Internal Revenue Bureau should start checking up on his income.

CHURCH COUNCIL BACKED

New York — In upholding and teaching the truths on which our free institutions are based, the National Council of Churches officially represents 143,000 local parishes with 35,000,000 members and is one of the greatest sources of good in our country.

The council's program strikes at the very roots of forces that would undermine the life of our nation.

It is a practical, down-to-earth operation, carried on more effectively and at lower cost than was posible when each communion was functioning independently of the others.

CHARLES E. WILSON

QUESTION OF COLOR

New York — I was more than once asked whether the colored community of America would join with the colored peoples of the world in a war against the white man."

This question is crudely put. But the truth behind it is in the minds of many Americans, and on the tongues of people all over the world when they think of the status of colored people in the U.S.A.

That is probably why writers of two leading New York dailies gave so much prominence to it in reviewing Saunders Redding's book, "The Wild Dogs Are Close."

One of the reviewers writes "Saunders Redding tried to travel in India in a spirit of detached intellectual curiosity . . . (but) was only too painfully aware of some of the vulnerable aspects of our society."

The other says "one can feel compassion for a man torn between the loyalties of patriotism and color . . . " It was a pity, she says, that he was unable to disarm his Indian interrogators.

When he tried, according to these reviewers, to refute lynching and terror in the USA and "describe the enormous progress made by American Negroes, he was openly doubted."

There is no use trying to dodge the question posed to Mr. Redding by Indian public opinion.

Colored peoples of the world are deeply concerned over the colored Americans in a country that boasts of the "free world."

And with the growing national liberation struggles of the peoples of Asia and Africa, the question has been placed for solution, not by "war against the white man" but through united struggle for peace and freedom, against jim crow, colonialism, and the subjugation of peoples and nations by imperialism.

JAMES W. FORD

MRS. RUBY McCOLLUM

Jacksonville, Fla. — There's something mighty peculiar in the unseemly haste with which Judge Hal Adams rushed Mrs. Ruby McCollum off to the state asylum.

This, plus the fact that he had refused to allow visitors to see her during all the time she was awaiting re-trial suggests some dirty work at the cross roads.

CHARLES MADISON

Valdosta, Ga. — The determination of Judge Hal Adams that Mrs. McCollum would not have the opportunity to talk to any outsiders adds to the cloud of mystery hovering over this tragic case.

Now Judge Adams has held William Bradford Huie, a writer in contempt. It seems that Huie in his investigations, was getting too uncomfortably close to the truth.

(Mrs.) VERA BLACK

Tallahassee, Fal. — I am hopeful the real truth of the McCollum case will be bared during the Oct. 9 contempt trial of William Bradford Huie.

Judge Adams has done everything in his power to keep the dirty linen in this case hidden in the hamper. It should be brought out in the open for all to see just what his motive was in taking such an adamant position.

BILL MATNEY

STILL AFTER GRANGER

New York — Lester Granger is still spewing out false and petty little statements trying to take credit from the NAACP which made the great fight against school discrimination.

All Granger is trying to do is to cover himself up. Neither he nor the National Urban League ever did anything to help break down discrimination in education before May 17, 1954 when the Supreme Court handed down its decision.

Now in one breath he says it's a great decision. In another he runs down the Supreme Court by saying that it should have ruled as it did 50 years ago.

The truth is we can do without Granger. He is not fit to head of any organization which claims it is trying to help the cause of colored people. Granger must go.

EDUCATION [illegible]

Journal and Guide P.10
Norfolk Va. Sat. 10-23-54

While a great deal of progress in providing good public school buildings for Negroes in Virginia and the Carolinas has been made since the suits brought in Federal Courts for equal facilities, the above building represents the average Negro rural school building in these States. This one was used during the school session 1950-51, in Franklin County, Virginia. It, along with six others of similar or slightly better type, have now given way to an $80,000 consolidated elementary school building, provided out of the $75,000,000 Battle school fund Act.

Mr. Boothe's Alternate Plan For Virginia Public Schools

Journal and Guide P.10
Norfolk Va. Sat. 10-23-54

WE DID NOT HEAR MR. ARMISTEAD BOOTHE'S address to the "District L" teachers group in Norfolk last Friday because it was a highly segregated affair. We are reading your daily newspaper report of Mr. BOOTHE'S "Virginia Plan" on the basis of this editorial.

We have expressed disagreement with MR. BOOTHE'S plan, because like GOVERNOR STANLEY'S plan — even though it differs from it in most respects—it will reduce all of the chances Negroes will have of attending public schools in Virginia.

Among MR. BOOTHE'S proposals are these (not stated in their numerical order):

1. No child of either race should be compelled to attend a school for children of the other race. Same latitude would be given teachers as to which schools they would prefer to work in.
2. Placement of exceptional Negro pupils, if agreed to, in white schools, in limited numbers (as we understand it).
3. Local autonomy in carrying out desegregation in the schools.
4. He is quoted as saying that "good faith" could be shown by local authorities in carrying out desegregation "by eliminating discrimination and desegregation wherever no social problem is created by it."

His proposal (1) assumes that there will continue to be separate schools for white children and Negro children when the Court's final decrees are issued. His proposal (2) would be a morale wrecker for Negro children, as it amounts to "awarding scholarships" to a white school on the basis of scholastic achievements. Who will determine this special fitness, and how?

HIS NUMBER (3) proposal carries public school education back to where it was in 1908. The Constitutional convention of 1901-1902 laid the foundation for "autonomous" school districts. This abolished any uniform system of public school education, or any fairness in the distribution of funds or the provisions for educational facilities.

There were a hundred and some-odd school districts, each one with a separate pattern, evolved to fit the financial or racial situations in the district. There was no coordination of public school educational policy or program. Under this arrangement opportunities Negroes had for receiving a decent public school training were fragmentary, and in some districts merely a token compliance with the very weak State laws on the subject, which could be exercised or ignored at the discretion of the local school board.

MR. BOOTHE'S proposal (4) sounds foreign to a man of his education and experience. Desegregation may take place "wherever no social problem is created by it." In the absence of a firm resolve on the part of the State to recognize what is now the law in Virginia, as in all other States of the Union, someone will see that a "social problem" is created, whenever a Negro pupil is assigned to a formerly white school. Witness what MESSRS. ALMOND, TUCK, GRAY and STANLEY have been doing since June 1st, 1954.

NEGRO PRESS

MR. BOOTHE is unrealistic when he says: "it [the Supreme Court decision] is to us a Virginia problem," and that it should be broken down to meet the desires and conveniences and the states of mind of approximately 125 local school districts.

ONE CAN BEST judge what will happen in the future by what has happened in the past. Since 1870 when a public school system was set up in Virginia, there has been a studied determination on the part of those in political authority to discriminate against Negroes to the point of "utmost extremity," to quote the late SENATOR CARTER GLASS, who was one of the authors of the plan.

What happened after that is a matter of history. We have set into this editorial a picture of a Negro public school house, in Franklin county, Virginia, located only 10 miles from the birthplace of the late Booker T. Washington, the use of which has only recently been abandoned. There are five more in this same county, of like structure and inadequacy, which we will present in a series of editorials, of which this one is the first.

We should not like to say unreservedly that under MR. BOOTHE'S plan, if adopted, history would be reversed and Negroes, who would have no part in administering the plan, would be treated fairly. It is best, perhaps, to let a former Director of Negro Education under the State department of public instruction, a distinguished white educator, speak:

> "In 1938-39 no fewer than 64 Virginia counties not only expended no local money for Negro instruction, but also profited from the State money received on account of Negro pupils in daily attendance."—From the volume, "Education for the Needs of the Negro in Virginia," by Dr. Fred M. Alexander (now deceased).

What Dr. Alexander was saying was that the State treasury sent certain amounts of money each year into each school district, based upon local daily attendance, white and Negro, and that 64 counties, during one school year, during which he made his check, not only did not spend any of this money to supplement local funds for Negro education, as it was intended, but diverted that part which was intended for Negroes to the education of the white children.

With this kind of documented fact in front of him, we do not see how a legislator so able as MR. BOOTHE has shown himself to be, could advocate a return to an old system, which, under segregation even, has been greatly improved, (but which was not improved until Negroes took the matter to the Federal Courts, beginning in 1939.)

A Deserved Rebuke To State Senator Gray

IT IS a good thing that some responsible white opinion in Virginia is beginning to be heard on the poorly conceived commission appointed by GOVERNOR STANLEY to "study" the procedure to be taken by the Commonwealth with reference to the Supreme Court desegregation ruling. The official publication of the Methodist Conference of the state recently questioned, and rightly, the competence of STATE SENATOR GARLAND GRAY to head the all-legislator body.

The Virginia Methodist Advocate editorially took note of SENATOR GRAY's intemperate remarks and added: ". . . It can hardly be said to represent an impartial, judicial mind, such as the people of Virginia have a right to expect of the chairman—and of the entire membership — of this special fact-finding commission . . . It raises serious questions of his competence to serve on the commission in any capacity whether as chairman or member."

A TEACHER TALKS

Supreme Court Decision and the White Teacher

WITH the handing down of the Supreme Court decision eliminating the dual system of elementary education, one more skeleton has been cleaned from our democratic house, which, in this respect has for so long needed to be set in order.

To bring about the smooth transition, all teachers are called upon to meet this new situation with greater faith in and understanding of, the American way.

The elimination of segregated schools will be more difficult for the white teacher than for the Negro teacher. Caste in America has never been a Negro problem, but a white problem.

Moreover, we have gained new psychological insights which suggest that prejudice can be, and often is, more detrimental to the group that enforces it than to the victim. Neither by interest nor experience are most white teachers prepared to meet the task with which they will be faced. Generally the Negro citizen has been regarded as remote and apart. The white teacher will be confronted with the result of years of violation of the American creed, with the resultant guilt and need for rationalization and self-justification. The burden must be borne, and the price paid, for a long history of arrogant, humiliating, and insulting treatment of their Negro fellow-citizens. They must function in an atmosphere where responsiveness has been curbed, affection and trust inhibited.

Cultural differences will now be seen in terms of individuals rather than groups—that people differ within groups to a greater extent than they do between groups. Perhaps, even what is most important—that no group has an option on all that is good. Segregation of schools, teachers, children has meant the segregation of gifts, talents and potentialities. The loss has been greater than the gain.

Law compelling democratic practices is itself a great teacher. Day-to-day behavior has a way of re-enforcing itself.

Teachers are now freed from the deteriorating effects of moral values that contradict the basic tenets of democracy. In the past, the democratic ideal was accepted with cross superficiality, gives only lip service. It was taught that all were equal, yet action negated all of these teachings. The dubious rationalizations and resultant double standards have created guilt and charges of hypocricy from all over the world. This state of affairs is now rapidly being ameliorated. MARGUERITE CARTWRIGHT.

Daily Press Fails U. S. Public In School Integration Issue Reports

AN EDITORIAL

IN TIMES OF STRESS, emergency, misunderstanding, or tension the press of the nation is called upon to take a clear-cut stand on issues which affect the welfare of the people. Such a time is now.

The issue is the integration of Negro children in the public schools of the nation. The press has failed to take a clear-cut stand on this issue. Instead, it has printed columns of pro and con, and has left the reader confused.

Only a few papers have had the courage to call for compliance with the law of the land. Only a few papers have had the courage to call for an end to the evil practice of segregation.

Whatever the ultimate resolution of the public school integration issue, a great disservice will be done to the long-time welfare of this nation when demagogues are wrapped in a false mantle of respectability rather than exposed and denounced as the tyrants and terrorists they really are. Only the judgment and intelligence of calm, intelligent, decent, and law-abiding citizens will achieve a just and lasting and peaceable solution

The Governor's Oath

(From The Montgomery Advertiser)

The next Governor of Alabama will be beset by thorny and baffling problems, and is therefore in no need of the addition of a bedeviling matter of personal conscience and determination.

All the same, the man who stands upon the fiery Jefferson Davis star next Jan. 17 and takes the oath of office will find that he has sworn obedience to two warring masters. With respect to school segregation, the next governor will not be able to faithfully support both the United States Constitution and the Alabama Constitution.

The question of obedience to the supreme law, which is the U. S. Constitution as interpreted by the U. S. Supreme Court, is already an issue. In the face of the Maryland rebellion over racial blending in the schools, The Baltimore Sun, reminded Gov. McKeldin that he was oath-bound to carry out the court's decree because, in the oath of office, he had sworn "that I will support the Constitution of the United States."

The aggressive Methodist bishop, G. Bromley Oxnam, asserted (Oct. 9) that "refusal to obey the law is subversive and does more to undermine democratic government than any traitor communist can do."

That is bristling language and somehow we suspect that the militant Bishop Oxnam might sometimes find himself unwilling to subordinate his God-given conscience to the Supreme Court, sovereign though it is. And by extension, Oxnam is saying that a governor, such as Byrnes or Talmadge, who recommends abandonment of a school system for the purpose of evading the Supreme Court, is more deadly than a communist traitor.

To equate a Byrnes or a Talmadge with a communist traitor is offensive, silly and grotesque. But disagreeable as Oxnam has stated the matter, it can not be denied that those who are under oath to support the U. S. Constitution and are bent upon evading the school decree will be in need of a theory of justification.

The incoming Governor of Alabama will, for a time, have a certain choice of constitutions. He will swear upon a Bible:

> . . . I do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Alabama . . .

The Alabama Constitution forbids mingling of the races in schools. The U. S. Constitution forbids school segregation.

Since the court decree has not yet been made specifically applicable to Alabama, the governor might go on for a time supporting the Alabama Constitution. But in time the federal decree will obliterate the state's constitution. Then the governor will be alone with his oath.

Sponsor Misses the Boat

The well-meaning sponsor who sent six Washington, D.C. white students to New York state last week to see how non-segregation is working in the New Rochelle high school, missed the boat if his purpose was to aid smooth operation of integregation in the Capital City schools.

He should have sent the kids' parents. If there is going to be trouble anywhere when democracy goes into the classrooms, it will be the older persons who will initiate it and egg it on.

Experience has proved that wherever non-segregation has been honestly tried, the only stumbling blocks to the program has come from adults, not from the kids unless prodded by their parents or by professional trouble makers.

It has been proved over and over again that democracy will work and that persons of different races and religious can and do get along until aroused by older persons who honestly resist change and by professional rabble-rousers.

It was interesting to note in the New Rochelle experiment that a New Rochelle student, a football player, had the right answer when asked by one of the visitors if he tackled a Negro player harder than he tackled a white one.

The player brushed off the query by saying: "I look at the color of the jersey, not the color of the player's skin."

It is generally this attitude that is shown by white youth in every instance where integrated program prevails.

This fact is not lost to those who oppose the non-segregated program in the public schools. They know the young people will make the adjustment if they are let alone. It is this they fear. They dread that they will get along too well.

Commenting on their visit to the mixed New Rochelle school, one of the visitors said: "I think I have a broader outlook after visiting the non-segregated school. I gained a lot by making the visit."

That is probably a typical reaction of the other five, and it is safe to believe it will be the reaction of white students in all schools where the democratic system is given an honest trial.

It is easy to believe, however, that a considerable number of adults will need time to say with the frankness of the student, "I have a broader outlook after seeing integration at work." But they will learn; they'll have to.

Disappointing Decision

The decision of the Delaware Supreme Court against the immediate readmission of ten colored children to the Milford High School is disappointing to those of us who never like to see defiance of law rewarded — even though the victory be but temporary.

For in refusing to sustain unequivocally the injunction handed down by Vice Chancellor William Marvel, the three-member court in effect delivered a slap in the face to law and order, while shockingly giving encouragement to mob rule.

In ruling as it did, the Delaware court held that "there were serious questions of law" that needed to be resolved before the ten children could return to the school nearest their homes.

As we see it, this at best is a subterfuge behind which the court seeks to delay taking action until after argument is made before the United States Supreme Court on how and when its final decree ending public school segregation shall be handed down.

That this is needless delay is best illustrated by the legal fact that the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled many times, dating back to 1936 that a State or school district must supply equal facilities to all children within that State or district without regard to race.

This ruling made under the old discredited "separate but equal" theory, pre-dates by many years the May 17 decision declaring public school segregation to be unconstitutional.

It also is contradictory of the Delaware Court's own ruling as recently as 1952 in the Claymont School case in which the clear right of colored students to attend the school nearest their home was upheld.

Yet the ten children who for several weeks had attended the Milford High School without incident, must now travel 36 miles each day to Georgetown to obtain their schooling.

And the fact that the Delaware court postponed further hearing until two days before Christmas, indicates that it does not intend to grant these unfortunate youngsters any relief from their long daily travel until next semester, if then.

The three members of the court know in their hearts that the readmission of these children to Milford High School is inevitable.

The fact that they would deny them immediate relief from the discriminatory and illegal arrangement under which they are presently forced to attend school certainly does add to the stature of Delaware's judiciary.

front line in the battle to protect this precious right.

He has stubbornly refused to give in to the bigoted wishes of his neighbors. His courage surely merits the admiration and gratitude of all Americans who believe in justice and fair play.

Most Teachers Know The Score

One of the encouraging things about the desegregation picture in the almost total failure of the pro-segregationists to get Negro teachers to take some stand against the integration of the public schools. The fact cannot be denied that in many places Negro teachers have been under considerable pressure to indicate in some tangible way that they prefer the segregated schools. They have been tempted by the promise of prospect of rising their jobs, and generally of a reduction in the status which Negro teachers, more than white teachers, have held in the civic and cultural life of the community. The temptations have been of the same general character as those which the devil held before the Master. "Fall down and pay homage and tribute to segregation," the Negro teachers were told, "and many good things will come to you which otherwise you would miss."

Not only have Negro teachers not come out with any endorsements of segregation, but they have in some places passed forceful resolutions calling upon school officials to integrate the schools. In this latter category was a resolution adopted recently by the executive committee of the North Carolina Teachers Association which is made up of Negro teachers. The resolution said in part: "On May 17, 1954, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an unanimous opinion, declared that racial segregation in the public schools violated the provisions of our Federal Constitution. This decision, with its vast implications for cultural and social change, will undoubtedly rank in history as a milestone on the road of progress toward our American ideals of justice and equality for all men."

The resolution specifically did "endorse the court's decision as being just, courageous and timely," and it urged its membership "to support and assist in the implementation of the court's decrees, whenever forth coming." It is good for the future that those who will be teaching the children of the masses of Negroes for some little time yet, should have this attitude toward a judicial decision which is bound to have great value for all Americans. It is a most helpful prospect that most teachers know the score.

Are Negroes Still Practicing Segregation?

Inadvertently the state teachers in session here last week failed to do two things that were very important. They failed to name a committee on integration that would have for its purpose uniting its forces with that of the whites, and it showed its very definite uncertainty of what is going to happen when the court takes additional action about this matter next month through the election of another president of the OANT.

During the business council one of the teachers got up and asked the point-blank question as to whether this meeting was the end of the Association, to which question was very unsatisfactorily answered. No one seemed willing in that group of instructors to make a positive statement on this subject.

But with the eminence of this situation right upon us, the state teachers confined their efforts to a discussion of what they assumed should be the proper place of the Negro teacher in the new interracial setup. They did this in a separate body, apart from the very people with whom they must work as the years roll by. To our notion, at the first of this year, thinking in terms of integration, (and it is not too late to do this now) there should have been a committee named by the Oklahoma Association of Negro Teachers to sit down with the white teachers and discuss the very questions given so much attention at the Friday afternoon session of the business council of the efforts of white teachers along this line have proved to be worthy of our democratic traditions. Phoenix, Arizona is a fine example of what Negro teachers may expect in the field of integration. In this instance two Negro teachers were placed in each one of the white schools in that city and the principal of the Negro schools was made the assistant principal of all of the schools. Could anyone ask for a better arrangement?

If we continue to practice segregation as we approach this radical adjustment in our American school system, the Negro teacher is forcing the white instructors to approach these basic decisions without the benefit of the thinking of the Negro teacher, and we will end up with the ancient declaration that the white man does not want or desire our approach to this subject. Just now, as we travel into this no man's land of integration, we believe the white man is anxious to examine the thinking of the Negro teacher. The Black Dispatch urges here and now that this idea and concept of thinking out a plan of integration be mapped out together with the white teacher, and not away from him. When the plan as outlined Friday is finally completed, what will be done with it? Will it be forwarded to the white teachers? Why not sit down in a give-and-take conference and work out this agenda?

One of the white speakers at the Friday night session referred to a plan that this paper has suggested all along. He said there should be an immediate inter-change of ideas through exchange teachers in our schools. Why would it, for instance, not be an excellent idea to permit the teachers in Truman school to exchange classes for a day or week? The Negro teachers monitor the white students and the whites assume the same responsibility with the blacks. This would be a very revealing experience for both faculties. This should in a large measure precede the final integration program.

But this sort of planning for integration cannot even be started with the Negro teachers off in a huddle somewhere talking solely about black problems and the whites talking about Nordic issues. Right here at the outset we need to realize as never before that they failed to do is name a committee on integration that would have both bigger for having met. As we sat and studied the unwitting victims of segregation. They themselves were the unwilling to swim solely in known waters, and they did not intend to get far away from the bank.

We believe the white teachers are showing greater interest in integration than the blacks, for it was Principal Douglass high school, who recently said he had applications from white teachers to instruct in his modern plant. How many black teachers are there who have actually entertained the idea of teaching in a white school?

And this should not be recalled the white politician said right here in Oklahoma, when black folk were fighting for suffrage he did not desire, and would not have the vote of a Negro. Thirty years after the Negro got the ballot you cannot find a white office holder or campaigner for office who would make that mistake, or show any inclination in that direction The meetings the past Tuesday night in the Negro district when the candidates promised everything not nailed down to the Negro citizen disproves any such silly philosophy.

When we were fighting segregation in Oklahoma City thousands of whites averred they would never live beside blacks, or in the same neighborhood. The fact that today white and black live all over Oklahoma City, and within rock-throwing distance of the state capitol, indicates clearly that the whites were just talking loud during that precarious period. The federal government recently announced that thousands of whites and blacks were living peacefully in federally-owned housing projects all over the nation. All of this experience teaches that our sole responsibility is to stand for the things we know to be right and leave it to time to carve out our pattern of living. Just as there is more good than bad in every individual so it is with nations. The innate virtue and brotherhood in our society will destroy the intolerants who like the bull frogs in a stream have more noise than numbers.

We are hoping the Oklahoma Association of Negro Teachers will expand the responsibilities of their integration committee to do what is suggested here. In a certain respect Joe Johnson has an unusually challenging position which we are trusting he will face, as he faced similar [illegible] he was a star on the ancient Langston football squad. In those days as now, he was taught that it is [illegible] action, that counts. In this instance and responsibility, Mr. Johnson must recall that he is playing today on the school team with white men, and they should be consulted whenever the team goes into the huddle. This is one time when white and black alike should hearken to the philosophy of a sage who admonished:

> "We cannot get harmony in American life unless when we play the piano we depend upon the black as well as the white keys."

The Supreme Court of the United States has swallowed this philosophy, hook, bait and sinker, and it is up to Joe Johnson and the Negro teachers to find harmony in Oklahoma the same way.

Latest Box Score

On School Integration!

(By Courier Press Service)

As outside of the tenor of happenings along the battle front of segregation in the United States, the first scholastic football game to be played in Fairmont, W. Va., between white and Negro schools has been set for Sept. 30.

Fairmont High School, operating in its last year as a segregated Negro school and as state Negro football champions, will play Fairmont West. The game was arranged when Coaches Bix Dawson of West and "Happy" Belmear of Fairmont found that both teams were idle on the 30th.

But the box score continued to reflect chaotic conditions during education policy in some sections as "die-hards" continue to fight the supreme court of the land.

SOME OF THE HAPPENINGS were as follows:

1. Although U. S. Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren is slated to be the principal speaker on John Marshall Day in Williamsburg on Saturday, top state officials in Virgina are making regrets that they cannot attend.

2. The NAACP reports that white high school students who demonstrated against Negro pupils in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., have withdrawn their objections to Negroes assigned to "their" school.

3. Walter Carrington, one of fourteen American delegates to the World Assembly of Youth in Singapore, said that his tour through India, Pakistan, Thailand, Malaya and Egypt revealed that each Dixie move against integration received wide publicity in Asia and Africa.

4. Delegates to the seventh annual congress of the U. S. National Student Association have called for immediate desegregation of the public schools.

5. John Gunther, reporting on his tour of Africa in Look magazine, says that although many Africans reject communism as a white movement, segregation and colonial rule are playing into the hands of Communists.

6. In Greensboro, N. C., two girls who attended a Negro school last year have applied for admission to a white school this year on the grounds that they are "Indians." The girls say they are of Scotch-Irish-English-"Indian" extraction.

7. Nashville's school board remained steadfast in its decision to deny white children of two Fisk University professors the right to attend the Pearl Elementary School nearest their home. Pearl is an all-Negro school.

8. Five Negro pupils have been enrolled in the Fayetteville (Ark.) High School for the fall term.

9. Five local NAACP branches have filed school desegregation petitions with five public school boards of education in Alabama towns.

10. Mississippi passed legislation, with Gov. Hugh White's approval, which will make it possible for the state to abolish public schools.

11. Southeastern and McNeese colleges in Louisiana have been sued in Federal Court by Negro students demanding the right to enroll.

12. Six Southern states have served notice that they want to participate in Supreme Court hearings next month. The states are Florida, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee and Maryland.

13. A Brookford, N. C., pastor who was once so prejudiced that he "refused to shake a Negro's hand," is lecturing to his non-segregated and racially mixed congregation on the evils of jim crow. He is the Rev. W. C. Laney of the Brookford Baptist Church.

14. Marion G. Ford Jr., whose application was accepted and then rejected by the University of Texas, has appealed to the school's board of regents.

15. The Englewood (N. J.) Board of Education has been accused of discriminating against Negroes by revising school district boundaries.

16. W. W. Trent, superintendent of schools for the State of West Virginia, is maintaining a "hands off" attitude on school integration. He said that local boards are free to make their own decisions.

17. In Tallahassee, Fla., a group of white and Negro leaders approved the continuance of public education in Florida.

18. Five Southern states have decided not to be represented during the U. S. Supreme Court's October implementation hearings. The states who are boycotting the sessions include South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia and Alabama.

19. In Hillsboro, Ohio, the Board of Education rezoned its schools so that 90 per cent of the Negro children will be sent back to the jim crow Lincoln School. No white children will be assigned to the Lincoln School.

20. Mississippi's Clarion-Ledger, the state's leading newspaper, quoted unnamed legislators as predicting force would be necessary to keep Negroes out of white schools. One reportedly said a "few killings" would be the best thing for the state.

21. Harris Teachers College in St. Louis has been integrated.

22. In Gastonia, Texas, seventy-five Negro pupils refused to board a school bus for Dallas, some miles away. Parents are suing the state for a modern eight-room building with cafeteria and gymnasium for the seventy-five students.

23. Southwestern Louisiana Institute is registering Negro students . . . but doing it under a Federal Court order.

24. Forty Negro parents have demanded that the Caddo Parish School Board set up a program of integration in Shreveport.

Anti-Integrationists Are Grasping At Straw

IT HAS BEEN revealed that the rabble-rousing pamphlets distributed in and around Milford Delaware, and successfully calculated to disrupt the peaceful and harmonious integration of students under the mandate of the Supreme Court, were put out under the auspices of a new organization calling itself the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

The pamphlets purported to assess the findings of a tour of and survey in segregated-school states. One claim put forth in the literature was obviously false on its face, by claiming that 99 percent of both races favored continued segregation in schools. Another claim, designed to stir up violent reactions to integration, was that dynamiting would be resorted to, if necessary, to avoid compliance with court and school authorities' directives to end enforced school segregation.

In those isolated areas, such as White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Hillsboro, Ohio, and Milford, where difficulties have occurred, one can be pretty sure that it is not the students nor even the parents who are to blame—but mischief-making individuals and groups such as the NAAWP, a lineal descendant of the KKK. Some southern papers including, we regret to observe, Norfolk's Ledger-Dispatch, are grasping at these instances of resistance to the new day in education to assert that it will be hopeless to continue with the integration effort.

Joining the chorus on the past weekend was a leading anti-integrationist, GOVERNOR BYRNES of South Carolina, who declared: "the racial disturbances . . . present a powerful argument in favor of the continuance of segregated schools." It would seem superfluous to add that in such expressions the wish is father to the thought.

It has been repeatedly suggested in some quarters that the vandalism, arson, and dynamitings in the Coronado section in Norfolk county are the work of such mischief makers as stirred up the folk in Milford. In view of the level-headedness voiced by many of Coronado's white residents, it would not be surprising that there is validity in the idea, although some Coronadians must share a great deal of the blame.

If more leaders and the constituted authorities take the firm positions that GOVERNOR J. CALEB BOGGS of Delaware and FRANK J. LAUCHE of Ohio have, these abortive but dangerous hot-heads can be held in check and saner citizens given the incentive to stand up for right and for law and order.

GOVERNOR BOGGS demanded the reopening of Milford schools "without incident" and called upon "every citizen, regardless of his personal views, to see that law and order and calmness prevail." GOVERNOR LAUCHE, taking note of the rancor in Hillsboro in his state, observed that wherever segregation still prevailed "a hurt is being imposed upon Negro youth," and he called for full educational equality.

Citizens worthy of their privilege must see to it that skulking, cowardly, and undemocratic persons and agencies do not succeed in efforts to thwart the willingness of the decent people, however unhappily, to abide by laws and court's interpretations of laws.

Whites as Well as Negroes Must Help Smooth Path to Intergation

Second in a Series

By Thelma Thurston Gorham, Managing Editor

Community response was gratifying (to say the least) to last week's front page editorial—the first of a series planned to discuss ways in which North Tulsans, as well as South, East and West Tulsans, can work together to smooth the path of desegregation.

All the comments, pro and con, have been greatly enjoyed and appreciated. Even the charge that the writer uses too many big words. (You ain't heard nothin' Yet—what this community is going to need is a good postage-stamp size vestpocket dictionary that can be read with a magnifying glass.)

However, there was one comment which causes concern to the writer and posses the question, "Who isn't ready for what?" It came from a prominent leader on "our side of the tracks." In effect he said, "that kind of talk is like giving aid and comfort to the enemy. It's just what some white folk want to hear—that we aren't ready."

"Who isn't ready for what?" was my simple-sounding reply, because it seems that the white folk have as much getting ready to do as the folk of color. Also, at the same time, it must be recognized that there are many persons on both sides of the tracks who are as ready as they'll ever be. There are many colored folk who know how to conduct themselves in public places a great deal more aplomb, tact and diplomacy courtesy and dignity than a great many of their brethren of no color. There are many white Tulsans who are more willing to bend in the right direction to make integration work than a great many folk of color.

There are a few and a half-dozen or the other proposition—who isn't on our side of the tracks.

It isn't the unreadiness that's important. It's the constructive things that can be done to move forward, and prepare the way for a smooth, harmonious approach to the inevitable.

For integration is so inevitable that more thought should be given to all the ways in which it can be approached or achieved sensibly and harmoniously.

One of the first things that both white folk and colored folk need to get READY is to divest themselves of some of their fears. Here in Tulsa, it seems that the folk on both sides of the track are afraid of each other. Fear causes men to do preverse and senseless things.

It has caused white men deny Negroes their civil rights and human rights and relegate them to second class citizenship in this land for over 300 years.

It causes communities to go to ridiculous and expensive lengths to establish separate schools and other separate institutions.

It causes Negroes to lock themselves in mental and structural prisons and say, "We don't want white people in our part of town because they'll make it hard for us."

It has caused so-called Caucasian whites to write into their residential agreements, "Only White Christians Accepted."

It has made it virtually impossible for persons of Catholic religion to get jobs as teachers in the public schools of some communities.

It has caused to be branded as "reds" or "Communists" persons whose only subversive act was to seek rights for the minority which the majority did not want to give.

It has caused industrialists to create vast community and civic problems in an effort to meet labor needs and still maintain a reservoir of low-paid Negro unskilled help, rather than train or upgrade Negroes for skilled work.

Guilt-feeling, the aftermath of unreasonable fears, also causes men to do queer things. Here in Tulsa, it seems to be a mixture of fear and guilt feeling that rises like a wall between the tracks that literally and figuratively separate North Tulsans from their white brethren.

Fear and the remembrance of it are like ashes in the mouths of Negroes who recall that "there was a riot once." Whites would rather not be reminded at all—they remember that it didn't have to happen.

Fear and guilt—unhappy cause and effect. Both are a part of the pervading pattern of unreadiness which both whites and Negroes must clear up before real integration can come to any community—not just Tulsa.

A lot of things are needed on both sides of the tracks. They are nebulous, intangible things. Practical-minded and materialistic men call them "idealistic." Things like sincerity, patience, understanding, sympathy, loyalty. Things like a way of living that a Great Teacher once presented, and which men have since dubbed The Golden Rule. Things that some men call the eternal verities. Things like love (not sex), truth, honor.

Basically, what we need here in Tulsa are more folk on both sides of the tracks who can forgive and forget—forgive those who wronged, and then forget the whole messy mess. (Riots are real messy, I've been told).

We need folk who can forgive themselves for being born white and others for being born black—or vice versa. And we need fewer forecasters and prophets of failure and doom and more citizens with moral stability and inner security (enough faith in the innate goodness and wisdom of God's plan for mankind) to say, "It can be done and then pitch in and help do the job. Until some of those needs are met, I keep wondering, "Who's ready for what?"

Mob Rule Only Part of U. S. Segregation Picture

Virginian Mon. 10-4-54

It was a day of shame in American history when the authorities of Milford, Delaware, bowed to mob rule rather than support the laws and Constitution of the United States. At the same time it is important to stress that the disgraceful scene there is an exception rather than the rule — so far — with respect to desegregation in U. S. schools since the U. S. Supreme Court decision. P. 10

Desegregation, according to a survey in the New York Times, is moving along three lines:

In the Deep South, efforts are concentrated not on openly defying the Supreme Court but on evading its decision, delaying compliance, and promoting schemes to abolish public schools. In most border States, desegregation is moving quietly, with no incidents. Finally, in Milford, in one district of West Virginia and in Baltimore — where the Milford contagion spread—there has been open defiance and resort to mob rule.

Philadelphia Pa

There is reason for gratification that in the District of Columbia integration of colored and white students is progressing "at a fast clip." In Missouri, with large sections having "strong Southern sentiments," the school integration in 69 counties has been "widespread and resulted in no incidents." In New Mexico, Arizona and Kansas integration has been successful, and almost complete.

There is every reason to believe there would have been no trouble in Milford, or in Baltimore, without the hate-spreading agitation of outsiders parading under the name of the "Association for the Advancement of White People."

There is every reason and desire to have desegregation generally proceed with "tact and judgment." Deep customs and difficult problems are involved. But when men openly defy the law; when the Democratic nominee for Governor of Georgia calls the Supreme Court decision an "act of tyranny," says "no true Southerner feels morally bound" by it, and urges that it be resisted—then it is time to remind such inciters of rebellion that the law is the law, that loyal Americans will respect it—and others must.

The lesson of Milford is that timidity, vacillation and fear of mob rule invited the breakdown of law. But in much of the Nation it is clear that desegregation problems can be met without violence, without mobocracy—and with the judgment, tolerance and good will which are the real base of American law and American life.

Leadership For Desegregation

[illegible] some more encouraging news of church leadership [illegible] desegregation. The Central Alabama Methodist Con[illegible] has taken an enlightened and well-reasoned stand in sup[illegible] of both the May 17 Supreme Court decision and sound and [illegible] methods of implementation.

It went so far as to "call upon all disciples of Jesus Christ ev[illegible] to join us in support of the implementation of this de[illegible] which surely promotes Christian principles of brotherhood [illegible] human dignity." What must be understood is that state-en[illegible] school segregation is not only wrongful discrimination, but [illegible], which is unconstitutional. Segregation is one of the ug[illegible] and most vicious forms of discrimination.

Whether or not one likes the decision is hardly as important [illegible] whether one likes to be a good citizen and a practical Christian. Good citizens and practicing Christians are those who obey the [illegible]. One in being a good citizen cannot pick out the laws he will [illegible] obey and those he will disrespect. Human beings can ad[illegible] to change and the May 17 decision will test just what kind of [illegible] human beings some of us are.

The Central Alabama Conference appealed to "the members [illegible] this conference to give their full support to the implemen[illegible] of this (May 17 United States Supreme Court) decision in [illegible] respective communities." Placing it on the member basis [illegible] at the community level will bring grass roots strength. As friends, neighbors and Christian beings this adjustment can be made without undue irritation and friction, we think. At least it should be tried in a spirit of goodwill and good sense.

Just about all of the large Negro-directed church organiza[illegible] in Alabama, like on the national scene, have thrown their support behind law, order and adjustment. The meaning to be drawn from such action is that church leadership will have a hand in helping to make the adjustment. Yet it will require courage and light.

At its recent meeting the World Council of Churches adopted the following statement:

"In the matter of the Church's task amid racial and ethnic [illegible], the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches [illegible] its conviction that any form of segregation based on race, [illegible] or ethnic origins is contrary to the Gospel, and is incompat[illegible] with the Christian doctrine of man and with the nature of the [illegible] of Christ. The assembly urges the churches within its [illegible] to renounce all forms of segregation or discrimina[illegible] and to work for their abolition within their own life and with[illegible].

"In doing so the assembly is painfully aware that, in the re[illegible] of the contemporary world, many churches find themselves [illegible] by historical, political, social and ecenomic circum[illegible] which may make the immediate achievement of this ob[illegible] extremely difficult. But under God the fellowship of the [illegible] movement is such as to offer to these churches the [illegible] and encouragement to help them to overcome these dif[illegible] with the courage given by faith, and with the desire to [illegible] more faithfully to our Master.

"From its very beginning, the ecumenial movement by its [illegible] has been committed to a form of fellowship in which [illegible] segregation or discrimination. The Assembly of the [illegible] Council of Churches rejoices in this fact and confirms this [illegible] as the established policy of the council."

Trouble at School

A few troublemakers have devised mischief which quickly involved two Washington high schools. The pattern is so similar to what happened at Milford, Del., and to what is now happening in Baltimore, as to suggest a common origin. It is an ugly pattern. Agitators come into a peaceful community, play upon the latent prejudices of a few youngsters and their parents and prod students into staging a "demonstration" against an integration program that was progressing without friction and in good spirit; a couple of students behave in unseemly fashion, and then the "demonstration" understandably frightens a number of decent citizens into keeping their children out of school because of a seeming possibility of violence.

It is easy to create such a pattern—as easy as it would be to start a panic by shouting fire in a theater. The tactic is a familiar one to the Communists. It is copied from their book. And it suits their book admirably, of course. It sows bitter discord where there should be harmony, and it presents a picture of America as a land where racial bigotry is still prevalent. From the Communist point of view, it makes great propaganda for distribution throughout the Far East.

There are two imperative needs in meeting this mischief. One is for the school authorities and the police authorities to deal with it just as firmly as possible. The vacillation and temporizing with which the pattern was handled in Milford have given encouragement to the agitators and are in no small part responsible for the trouble fomented here and in Baltimore. Fortunately, Washington officials recognized the gravity of the situation at the outset and moved to meet it head on. There need be no doubt as to the capacity of the police to maintain order or as to the determination of the school board and the superintendent to call this bluff and maintain their program of orderly integration.

The second imperative need is for cool heads and decent American thinking on the part of the parents of children in the schools affected. Throughout Washington, an overwhelming majority of students, to their great credit, have refused to be stampeded. It would be out of character for them to let themselves be terrorized by a handful of dissidents. The schools are open and operating. Now that the demonstrators have had their nasty little show, it is time for the responsible citizenry of the neighborhood to give a counterdemonstration of calm loyalty to American institutions. They can give such a demonstration by sending their children back to school without delay and relying on the police to enforce the laws against disorder and against truancy with strictness and efficiency. Washington has a renewed opportunity to give the country an example of steadfastness and good will which will put an end once and for all to these manufactured "demonstrations" against a clear command of the Supreme Court.

Tide of Integration

The announcement coming from Huber Wheeler, State Commissioner of Education this week, is a compliment to the state o Missouri.

According to the Commissioner, some form of integration of white and Negro school children has begun in all parts o the State.

The Commissioner got his information from a questionnaire he sent to all county superintendents, high school and six-director elementary school districts.

In 52 of 114 counties some form of integration has been undertaken. In 54 school districts with an enrollment of 15,992, a total of 449 Negro pupils have been integrated into white schools.

This is indeed, exemplary and places the State of Missouri completely in step with other States and Cities of the nation that have faith with our National Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court.

In the words of Commissioner Wheeler, "Integration is not yet compulsory in Missouri and the voluntary action which has been taken all over the state shows the willingness of the people to comply with the decision of the highest court."

Integration in the United States is inevitable and that it is not being hopelessly opposed in Missouri as in some States is a consolation to both white and colored citizens.

Helen Henly, staff writer of the Christian Science Monitor reported last week:

"It is moving forward because the United States Supreme Court decision of last May 17, declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional, set integration firmly into the march of history—a march which even protesting citizens probably understand can no more be turned back than the tides."

Our Opinions

Lights In The Darkness

We are glad that there are some adults in Delaware, Baltimore and Washington who have the sanity to realize how dangerous and how futile are the strikes and demonstrations against desegregation and who have the courage to speak out.

Vice President Nixon out in Council Bluffs, Iowa, last week said that he is sure that "men of good will" will join to end the storm of controversy over the end of racial segregation in the public schools.

To futher emphasize his position he announced publicly that his two daughters will continue to attend the de-segregated school in Washington where parents fomented a strike.

In a television report on the disturbances in Baltimore, a white mother whose identification we failed to get declared that she had always taught her children to respect others regardless of race and creed, that she was not in sympathy with the demonstrators and that she would continue to send her children to the desegregated school "like I think all good Americans should."

In Delaware, Atty. Gen. H. Albert Young refused to represent the Milford school board in a case brought by the parents of 10 Negro children denied admission to an all-white high school.

School Board President Edmund Steiner in accusing Young of "shirking his duty" declared:

"State law obliges the attorney general to represent all state agencies and school districts in court actions if requested to do so, and such a request was made by this board."

In reply, Young stated: "Denial of admission to schools soley on the ground of race, color and ancestry represents a violation of what I believe to be the law."

One of the most widely published pictures on the Baltimore situation showed three youths carrying a banner with the legend "Southern Don't Want Negroes." Watching from the window of the school being picketed are four girl students one of whom is a Negro.

The dailies pointed out that the sign indicated the student pickets need better training in grammar since the sign should have read "Southern Doesn't Want Negroes."

But of greater significance to us was the Negro girl in the window with her white classmates. All are smiling as though they regard the action as a high school prank and significantly the Negro girl is wedged between two white girls in one window.

The whole issue of desegregation is of no concern to them. It's an issue that has been raised by adults and inflamed by a few fanatics.

But the girls in the window have more in common as teen-agers and schoolmates than they have differences as members of different races.

The Time Is Now

The U.S. Supreme Court on May 17 found that the States have been violating the law wherever they have discriminated against colored people by school segregation.

If jim-crow schools are illegal today, we may say that they were illegal from the beginning 90 years ago.

The minute the high court declared segregation unlawful, it left the States without any legal right to enforce separate schools.

Many communities which had Jim Crow schools only because the law required it proceeded to get rid of them.

One of these communities was Baltimore. Another was Washington.

In West Virginia, Kansas, Missouri, Arizona, New Mexico integration is proceeding at a rapid pace.

School officials of all of these cities and States could have waited until December 6 when the Supreme Court will set the final date at which all jim-crow schools must come to an end.

But these communities have a conscience, a sense of decency and a sense of moral responsibility.

If they have inflicted a grievous wrong upon colored people for 90 years, and the highest court authority tells them so, they feel it their obligation to stop doing that at once.

They do not feel they should wait to be ordered to do what is right or threatened with jail and a fine.

With them the time to halt a shameful procedure is when proper authorities advise that you are doing wrong.

The overwhelming majority of Americans would do the same thing.

A stubborn minority will always resist this or any other law.

Into this latter group falls those who must be threatened, condemned and coerced because the ignorant, the mentally sick and the morally ill are neither self-starters nor self-propelled.

Judge James K. Cullens' decision that Baltimore's school board properly exercised its legal discretion in integrating schools without waiting makes sense for order, decency and Christian morals.

It was a timely suggestion to school pickets, Ku Kluxers and bigoted politicians to quit kidding themselves or trying to deceive the people.

Jim-crow schools are now unlawful.

Decent folk will get rid of them now.

Others will be compelled to get rid of them.

The community which does what is lawful of its own free will and accord is unquestionably the progressive community.

Any other community is backward, sadly in need of reforms and an unhappy place in which to live.

Ethical Attorneys

The school board of Baton Rouge, La., on recommendation of the Joint Legislative Committee to Maintain Segregation has asked the Louisiana Bar Association to disbar two NAACP lawyers.

The board charges that some colored parents, whom the lawyers, Alex Pitcher and Johnny Jones represented in a law case, have denied that they asked these lawyers to act for them.

We believe the facts are otherwise.

NAACP lawyers do not take cases unless they have authorization from plaintiffs in writing.

They have had enough experience to know that clients, particularly in the South, can be and are often intimidated.

NAACP lawyers are as ethical as any other members of the profession. They do not accept cases without a retainer or a written authorization.

We are confident when the test comes in Louisiana, the record will show that the parents did authorize Counsels Pitcher and Jones to take the steps they did.

Equally Dangerous

There is one angle about the school desegregation flare-ups which remains puzzling to us.

In the Delaware and Maryland incidents, there appeared one central figure, who made no effort to conceal the fact that he was inciting and leading a rebellion against the Government of the United States.

He made it clear that his aim (and he succeeded at Milford, Del.) was to overthrow by naked force and violence the law as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court.

In speech after inflammatory speech, he called upon his misguided followers to rebel against enforcement of the law "as long as gunpowder burns."

If the activity of William Bryant Bowles and his Naitonal Association for the Advancement of White People is not subversive, the word has lost the meaning we have been led to believe it has.

Yet, curiously, not a single one of the self-appointed all-American, flag-waving super patriots has raised his voice in alarm.

Chairman Harold Velde of the House Un-American Activities Committee, from whose subversive-hunting even the pulpit is no sanctuary, has stoutly managed to keep his mouth shut.

True, he has more pressing business at hand, but one would have thought Chairman Joe McCarthy of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee would have leaped at the opportunity to cross-examine a kindred spirit in headline grabbing like Bill Bowles.

But he didn't.

And the third member of the congressional investigative triumvirate, Chairman Bill Jenner of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, has remained calm and unperturbed. From him has come not a peep.

Come on fellows, let's get going. What's the matter? Has the old touch been lost? After all, a subversive is a subversive.

Whether heading a Communist-front outfit on the extreme left or leading a mob against desegregation on the far right at Milford, both are equally dangerous to the safety and security of the nation.

Both should be dealt with swiftly.

Editorial comment highly critical of Milford board and Bryant Bowles

Phila. American Sat. 10-16-54

BALTIMORE

An outbreak of protests against school integration which made headlines in Delaware, Maryland and Washington evoked critical editorial comment of newspapers along the Atlantic seaboard last week.

Denial of Motherhood

"The refusal of white mothers to allow colored babies to attend the Kindergarten of the Baltimore school against which they demonstrated had the effect of denouncing their own heritage in a peculiar way," said the Lancaster (Pa.) News.

"They have borrowed the term 'undesirable' from the most backward areas of Asia and reaffirmed it for their own civilization—not merely thousands of miles, but thousands of years across the world. And they have done this to babies.

p. 3

"The questions these mothers raise involve their own integrity and love as mothers of this world. These are not politicians; they are mothers who have made an ugly public parade of prejudice strange to motherhood.

"It will take courage to visualize the kind of world they expect to create for their own children."

Baltimore Md

Hate Thy Neighbor

"There seems to be no question about the responsibility for inciting this "Hate Thy Neighbor Campaign" commented the Philadelphia Inquirer.

"It appears to be the evil work, primarily of the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

"We do not know all the individuals who may be active in this revival of the spirit of the Ku Klux Klan.

"We do know that drastic action should be taken to bring the whole crew to book."

Only Part of Picture

"It was a day of shame in American history when the authorities of Milford bowed to mob rule rather than support the laws and the Constitution of the United States," said the Philadelphia Bulletin.

"There is every reason to believe there would have been no trouble in Milford, or in Baltimore, without the hate-spreading agitation of outsiders parading under the name of the "Association for the Advancement of White People.'

"... when men openly defy the law; when the Democratic nominee for Governor of Georgia calls the Supreme Court decision an "act of tyranny" and urges that it be resisted,—then it is time to remind such inciters of rebellion that the law is the law, that loyal Americans will respect it—and others must.

"The lesson of Milford is that timidity, vacillation and fear of mob rule invited the breakdown of law."

Clever, But Nasty

"A clever sloganeer has announced formation of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, a pointed parody on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is spearheading the battle to end segregation in public schools of the South," says the Newark (N.J.) Star-Ledger.

"We do not believe that white people can advance themselves by keepig the people of any other color down. A relationship of hostility between the races is degrading for all concerned, not advancing.

"The slogan is clever, but in a cheap and bitter way. We would like to be able to do something to advance the thinking and the sentiments of the misguided people who would follow such a slogan."

Peace—At What Cost!

"If it was a frightful blunder to admit colored students to the Milford school without preparing the community for this step... the new board's decision to buy peace by expelling the 11 students already enrolled is still less excusable," reasons the Wilmington Del.) Evening Journal.

"For it is an abject surrender to the forces which have been formenting lawlessness.

On With the Lessons

" the decision of the School Board on desegregation is not legally questionable; disturbances around schools during school hours are illegal, and students must go to school as usual," says the Baltimore Sun.

"Let us hope that we have seen the last of disorder and interference with the actual day-to-day operation of the schools.

"The real victims of the events of the last few days have been the children themselves. Let them go on with their lessons."

Desegregation

"The sporadic student "strikes" against the end of school segregation are reprehensible, but they should not be allowed to distort the entire picture," asserts the New York Times.

"With a few notable exceptions, the program has been going ahead smoothly since the opening of the academic year in most of the border areas where division of races had heretofore been enforcd in the schools.

"The young men and women of Washington and Baltimore and a few smaller towns who have been demonstrating are fighting for a lost as well as a worthless cause.

"These youngsters deserve blame for their disorderliness and pity for their ignorance; but the blame if not the pity belongs in far greater measure to those among their elders who have egged them on."

Clock Set Back

"Mildord's people have set the clock back with a vengeance, not to standard time, but to substandard," insists the Newark (N.J.) Evening News.

"They have given a poor example of Americanism in returning to the policy of segregation in their schools after a brave start in complying with the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling against it.

"The 11 students, who for a few days attended Milford High school while most of the white pupils were kept at home, are now forced to go 19 miles in one direction or another to pursue their studies.

"Their conduct through the whole episode was exemplary. Surely, time will bring them a more equitable solution.

"Meantime, imagine what Moscow's Pravda can do with this example of American social progress."

EDUCATION 1954

Scare the Negro Teacher

In desperation to do something to offset the October action by the Supreme Court with respect to segregation the South is making strenuous effort to convince the Negro teacher that the elimination of segregation will destroy the black man's opportunity to instruct in the classrooms of the nation. Just what effect it is assumed this will have upon the abstract opinion of the court that segregation is an evil which must be abated, is not disclosed. One thing is certain, the public schools were instituted for the children of the nation, and certainly not as a private preserve for teachers.

In their endeavor to be convincing on this point southern publications must of course frankly admit the fact of prejudice. They must first of all agree that white people are so prejudiced about schools to the extent they will not permit a black man or woman to teach their child. To be considered rational in this thinking he must argue that the white man is not fair in his dealings with the black, and that he will openly deny black men and women the right to positions in the schoolroom. Our opinion is that this is not true and is certainly not borne out by experiences we are having all around us, and if what we are told is true, it is one of the very reasons why we should get rid of segregation.

Right at the present moment it is admitted the white schools of the nation are minus something like a quarter of a million instructors, and this situation comes about in the very moment when some four or five million offsprings, the backwash of the last two wars, are just about ready for kindergarten. It seems to this writer integration is coming at a time when the white man is unable to care for his normal business in the school room and will have slight opportunity to attend to the practice of bias.

White schools are minus instructors by the thousands because white teachers during the war period have elected to take other positions in industry where the pay is better and there is less work to do. Take the situation in Phoenix, where the schools were integrated recently. The school system in that city, according to a statement made by the superintendent while in Oklahoma City for an address recently, has added more Negro teachers than they had under the old segregated system. One could just as well assume that this is fairly representative of what will happen as to go out in some God-forsaken spot in Alabama or Mississippi and point out what might happen there.

But let us not dodge the issue down in those two states and others similarly situated. While we have been establishing separate schools for the past eighty-some years we have also been establishing, sometimes by force and violence, Negro neighborhoods. All over the South we have been putting the Negro school in the middle or the heart of the Negro neighborhood. Do the proponents of the idea that the white teachers is going to take over the Negro's job teaching school mean to convey the idea thousands of their dainty white girls are going to trapse down into the Negro neighborhood in Dixie daily to teach Negro children, or do they intend to convey the idea that the Negro child will daily march out of the Negro neighborhood up into the white neighborhood for instruction?

The truth is the Negro community is going to remain just as compact and as black as it is, segregation or no segregation, and there is little the white man wants to do about it other than to exude senseless chatter. Ask him when he starts sputtering about what is going to happen to the Negro school teacher, what he is going to do about instructors for the Negro school down in the Negro section of the community. He will not have an answer worth listening to on that subject.

Do not be too deeply impressed with his argument about what the white parent is not going to allow, or permit to happen. Arizona and California are two states receiving the most of their new population from Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. Negroes are teaching the children of these transplanted citizens out that way and the same thing will happen in Oklahoma. Right at this moment a Negro girl is drawing pay from the state teaching nursing at the Oklahoma school of nursing right here in Oklahoma City. She did not seek the job, the job sought her, and the reason she got the job is because she was the only person immediately available to instruct in this field.

The only unwholesome fact stemming from the white man's position just now rests in the fact he admits he will be unfair and dishonest about teaching positions. If he argued there would not be enough jobs to go around we could understand that sort of reasoning, but he does not assume this position. He just says he will not give the black teacher an opportunity to do what the records show the average Negro is better prepared to do than the white instructor. This, of course, is an admission he has been reluctant to make, but since he comes up with the right answer on this subject, the Black Dispatch simply answers we are headed to another law suit which should be more easily won since the defendant comes into open court and admits in advance he is planning to violate the law of equity and social decency. This is what we might call confession before the fact. We are putting all of this down in the record now to be used latter on when his action justifies our yanking him into court.

Segregation Problems Slowly 'Untangling

(By DREW PEARSON)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13—The showdown on the hottest issue to face American education in our times—the integration of white and colored students—is now under way, only four short months after the supreme court issued its momentous "non-segregation" decision.

Actually, the entire world is watching how we meet the challenge. And though certain southern politicians don't realize it, Communist kibitzers are hoping we will give them ammunition for their "Hate America" campaign.

While it's too early for a conclusive report, a significant factual study already has been made by the American Friends Service Committee showing that we are handling the situation in our usual big-league, democratic manner. The Quaker report reveals general compliance with the supreme court ban on school segregation, except in some Deep South areas, where officials have made defiant statements and are openly seeking ways to circumvent the decision . . ."

EVEN THESE MAVERICKS probably will fall into line with the rest of the nation, the report indicates, after the supreme court issues decrees implementing its nonsegregation ruling. Here are some of the preliminary findings of Friends Service Committee:

Major cities in border states are taking the lead in nonsegregation this fall, notably Baltimore, Kansas City, St. Louis, Washington and Wilmington. The attorney general of Missouri has announced that "Provisions for separate (white and colored) schools are void."

Six West Virginia counties, including the city of Charleston, are integrating white and colored students this fall. So is Fayetteville, Ark. Little Rock is "taking the first steps."

Elsewhere in the South—school officials in Texas and Maryland have stated they will obey the law. Tennessee has a gradual plan of non-segregation, beginning with the first grade. Florida is seeking more time to cope with the problem. Virginia is "moderate." Kentucky, North Carolina and Alabama are described as remaining "non-committal."

Higher education — The University of Missouri has ended the exclusion of Negro students. So has the University of Oklahoma. The University of Texas has admitted about 300 Negro graduate students. Maryland University, which previously admitted Negroes on a limited scale, has now removed all restrictions.

NEGRO PRESS

The Friends' report doesn't attempt a detailed analysis of every state, but provides a pretty fair cross-section of how both public and parochial schools are integrating students regardless of race. Neither does the report touch on Quaker schools, which institute a policy of non-segregation similar to Catholic schools long before the supreme court ruling.

REGARDING CATHOLIC schools since the supreme court decision, the Friends Committee reports:

"The diocese of Little Rock has announced a policy of integration, affecting parochial schools in the entire state of Arkansas. In Virginia, schools in metropolitan areas are open to all. Catholic schools in Nashville have been ordered to admit students of both races, and one all-Negro school has been closed. The new integration policy in San Antonio affects all parochial schools in the central part of Texas, following earlier action in Dallas and Austin."

Misleading the Negro Teacher

We believe the Afro-American hit the nail on the head when it observed that white people who oppose the Negro teacher in the classroom are running wild in their reasoning. Says the Afro:

> "As for the colored teachers, there will be some resentment in the beginning, but it will quickly disappear.
> "Colored women do most of the intimate things for white children in the Far South. They nurse the white baby as soon as it is born. They guide its infant steps, change its diapers, bathe it, dress it from infancy to adolescence ,feed it, comfort it ,are closer to it and share more of its confidences, in many cases, than its own mother.
> "Why an unlettered colored nurse should be praised for suckling a white child and a colored teacher be condemned for teaching it its a, b, c's, or its multiplication table, no student of logic can understand."

Now there is the picture in a nut shell. If the Negro nurse can suckle the white child, why can she not teach it? There will certainly be no resentment on the part of the white child. The entire opposition will come from the white parent.

This viewpoint was aptly stressed recently by the city superintendent at El Reno when we talked with him. He seemed to think the Negro teacher was sunk and would find no opportunity to work whatsoever. He had no grounds for the allegation other than the fact the white child would resent instruction from the Negro teacher, and he dwelt upon this phase of the discussion to the extent we actually feel that it was studied and intended to convey a false impression.

There is apparent belief if enough opposition to integration is generated among Negro teachers, they in turn will bring about a situation among Negroes opposing integration. That is the only sense we can gather out of the almost unanimous denunciation we hear falling from the lips of outstanding whites who speak, and the articles daily appearing in white newspapers. "Convince the Negro school teacher this program is wrong and we have this thing whipped," someone seems to be arguing now.

The El Reno superintendent said he had just about convinced his Negro teachers in that city that they were going to be disposed of and that the Negro children would be swallowed up in the white system. He said the teacher-pupil ratio would force the authorities to dispose of the Negro school and send the Negro pupils to the white school.

In the meantime, while the reactionary whites are telling of the dire consequencies of integration for the Negro school teacher, out in Arizona, at Phoenix, integration has caused the employment of more black instructors than hitherto, and in California, where there is a frantic cry for many more qualified instructors, hundreds of Negro teachers from Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma are daily teaching white children their a-b-c's. To cap it all off, the records show more than 150 able Negro educators are now teaching in the outstanding universities of America.

In the language of the Bible, if conditions are going to be as bad in Oklahoma as intimated by some of our white seers, there is nothing left for the Negro teacher but to "take up his bed and walk" out to some of those other places where certainly the grass is greener; where the salaries are larger and tenure more certain. Do you remember that song, "California, Here I Come"? It would be a good slogan to be adopted by the Negro teacher in Oklahoma.

Back To School

(Reprinted from the Washington Post)

There was nothing hasty about the back-to-school orders from Superintendent Corning and Police Chief Murray. Both the school authorities and the police have been extremely lenient in dealing with the groups that have continued to demonstrate against the elimination of segregation in the schools. In some instances, as at the McKinley High School, the demonstrators were skillfully diverted to other interests. Indeed, where students have been induced to analyze their alleged grievances coolly an dispassionately those grievances have usually evaporated. The time has now come to insist upon such analyses and to end the demonstrations and absenteeism that can only keep prejudice alive.

Superintendent Corning has held out real inducements to students to give up their futile and unwarranted protests. Those who are back in school today will not be penalized for their absences. Moreover, teachers will give "all possible assistance" to those students in making up the work they have missed. Those who are still absent without excuse today, however, will find themselves ineligible to hold commissions in the Cadet Corps, to serve on athletic teams, in musical or dramatic performances or other activities. This is undoubtedly a severe penalty, but, considering the disruptive nature of the demonstrations and the absenteeism, it is not too severe.

Equally stern, now that the students have had ample opportunity to let off steam, is the order from Police Chief Murray. He will not permit students to operate in "disorderly gangs or groups." If necessary to break up such gangs and get the youngsters back in school, they will be arrested. We hope that the police will continue to use their authority with restraint and good judgement, but they must undoubtedly maintain order and help to enforce the law against truancy.

With full cooperation of school authorities, the police, parents and the public, the disturbances of the last week may soon be expected to subside. The tragic thing is that some adults are still contributing to the emotionalism that has stirred up teen-age groups. This is an offense against the community which cannot be too strongly condemned. When a member of Congress thus contributes to juvenile delinquency by encouraging students to continue their protests and remain out of school, as did representative James C. Davis of Georgia, his irresponsible conduct surpasses understanding. If any students are foolish enough to follow this advice, an unconscionable share of the blame for their troubles will fall upon Congressman Davis and a few other agitators who have taken it upon themselves to overrule the Supreme Court.

Why The NAAWP Won't Succeed

The National Association for the Advancement of White People could take a lesson from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. But it won't. The flash-in-the-pan organization started in Delaware to fight the de-segregation of schools is a hoodlum outfit.

If its leaders were really sincere, they would go after their objective in a legal, law-abiding manner. They will get nowhere trying to set their own desires above the Supreme Court and the law of the land.

There is only one way for the NAAWP to proceed to keep segregated schools and that is to organize a movement to change the United States constitution upon which this country was founded. In its opinion declaring segregation illegal, the Supreme Court was merely interpreting the constitution written by the founding fathers. The new organization started by Bryant W. Bowles has every right to attempt through orderly processes to change the constitution so that the Supreme Court decision would not stand up.

But instead of resorting to legal means, the NAAWP tries the outlaw approach, "The law be damned. We want our way," is the attitude of its founder and its followers.

The NAAWP won't last but a hot minute, in contrast to the 43-year-old history of the NAACP. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has consistently fought for its objectives through the orderly processes of law and has always waged its battles within the framework of the United States constitution. Its one aim has been to get America to live up to its stated principles. In his fight for liberty and freedom, the Negro has never asked for anything that was not already his legal right.

On the other hand, the NAAWP seeks to upset established law because it doesn't like it. The man who is leading the NAAWP in its program to defy the law is himself an individual law-breaker. He has been arrested for writing fraudulent checks and operating under false pretenses. What more can be expected of an organization headed by such a man?

The NAAWP reminds us of a story told by A. Conan Doyle. It seems that in one of his mysteries, the failure of a dog to attack a criminal had the characters in the story puzzled. As the story unfolded, it developed that the dog failed to sound an alarm because the intruder was well known to him, a friend. The dog's failure to act gave a clue to the crime. The important thing was not what the dog did but what it didn't do. And the significant thing is what the NAAWP doesn't do. Its failure to find some legal means to accomplish its objectives instead of resorting to hoodlumism indicates that it is not sincere but merely wants to "have its own way." In this country, the law is above the wishes of any individual or group of individuals.

Identifying the Mob

A/ Black Dispatch Editorial opinion

It appears to the Black Dispatch the experience Negroes are having up in White Sulphur Springs, Virginia, and Milford, Maryland, immediately invites attention to the general belief among a large number of Southerners who do not think we need lynch law legislation at this period in our history. Every year we publish statistics showing the number of Negroes lynched, and the number has been reduced to such a low point we have those who say lynching is on its way out. Oklahoma City, Okla.

But the experiences we are now having with a desegregation program in public schools shows that the only recourse white people have to prevent the Negro child from exercising a right definitely and completely spelled out by the highest court in the land, is the threat of physical violence. The mob now stands at the door of school houses in West Virginia and Maryland. It is the positive proof that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People needs to press hard for the enactment by the Congress of the United States of anti-lynching legislation.

In the days when the white man circulated the lie about the Negro being a rapist, there was ample opportunity for local officials to say they did not know the identity of the mob, because these lawless gangs rushed out in the still watches of the night and wantonly killed black men. There was always a chance to at least say identification was impossible. For the mob was usually gone, following their murderous acts, before anyone with authority could come upon the scene. In many instances law enforcement officials acted in concert with the mob, but they also had an opportunity to prepare an alibi before law and order could be re-established. Sat. 10-9-54

But in this present situation there is no such unholy opportunity for the mob to clear its skirts. Here are the innocent black children who go to school, and the mob not only threatens but actually lies in wait for these children. It seems to the Black Dispatch, unless law and order have gone to the dogs, there is an opportunity to catch the mob red-handed. It has already advertised in advance what it plans to do, and surely unless law enforcement officials violate their oaths of office they will be apprehended.

A judge up in Ohio took action last week in a manner we believe should set a standard. He called the mob into court and said, "I'm going to slam so many of you into jail your feet will be sticking out the doors and windows." Needless to say, there was no trouble in that particular community, and there will be no trouble in any community in the nation wherever we find judges with the bold courage to act, or threaten to act in such manner. p.4

The South is just about to write its most shameful page in the history of race relations, and the Christian church, which should constantly teach lessons in brotherhood, is failing in its responsibility and duty. In the judgment of the Black Dispatch there should be no difficulty whatever in fully identifying the fellow who tells you in front what he plans to do, and sits in wait in front of a school building to carry out his threat.

Trouble At School

(From The Washington Post)

A few troublemakers have devised mischief which quickly involved three Washington high schools. The pattern is so familiar to what happened at Milford, Del., and to what is now happening in Baltimore, as to suggest a common origin. It is an ugly pattern. Agitators come into a peaceful community, play upon the latent prejudices of a few youngsters and their parents and prod students into staging a "demonstration" against an integration program that was progressing without friction and in good spirit; a couple of students behave in unseemly fashion; and then the "demonstration" understandably frightens a number of decent citizens into keeping their children out of school because of a seeming possibility of violence.

It is easy to create such a pattern...as it would be to start a panic by shouting fire in a theater. The tactic is a familiar one to the Communists. It is copied from their book. And it suits their book admirably, of course. It sows bitter discord where there should be haromny, and it presents a picture of America as a land where racial bigotry is still prevalent. From the Communist point of view, it makes great propaganda for distribution throughout the Far East.

There are two imperative needs in meeting this mischief. One is for the school authorities and the police authorities to deal with it just as firmly as possible. The vacillation and temporizing with which the pattern was handled in Milford have given encouragement to the agitators and are in no small part responsible for the trouble fomented here and in Baltimore. Fortunately, Washington officials recognized the gravity of the situation at the outset and moved to meet it head on. There need be no doubt as to the capacity of the police to maintain order or as to the determination of the school board and the superintendent to call this bluff and maintain their program of orderly integration.

The second imperative need is for cool heads and decent American thinking on the part of the parents of children in the schools affected. Throughout Washington, an overwhelming majority of students, to their great credit, have refused to be stampeded. It would be out of character for them to let themselves be terrorized by a handful of hoodlums. The schools are open and operating. Now that the demonstrators have had their nasty little show, it is time for the responsible citizenry of the neighborhood to give a counterdemonstration of calm loyalty to American institutions. They can give such a demonstration by sending their children back to school without delay and relying on the police to enforce the laws against disorder and against truancy with strictness and efficiency. Washington has a renewed opportunity to give the country an example of steadfastness and good will which will put an end once and for all to these manufactured "demonstrations" against a clear command of the Supreme Court.

For Milford, Hemlock, The Bitter Hate Potion

By FRANCIS H. MITCHELL

THERE is nothing more revoting—more low and degraded—nothing more contemptibe than a lily-livered,yellow-bellied coward who cringes in fear at the slightest scare and tucks his tail between his legs and sneaks off from the things that God intended man to stand upright for. This, today, is my estimation of Milfrod, Delaware.

MR. MITCHELL

I cannot for the life of me understand why wrong is so much stronger than right. I can't see what there is in the makeup of a creature of God that permits him to make life a cesspool—a foul, stinking miasma, to turn the stomach of the average man.

"In the interest of the welfare of the children and the community as a whole," said the president of the Milford School board in ordering 11 Negro children back to a 40 mile a day round trip to school in Dover, Delaware. What a cruel joke. What an understatement of a treacherous deed.

THE SUPREME Court of the United States of America has said what is "in the interest of the welfare of the children," in Milford and wherever else in the United States there are children who because they are black, are looked upon as some sort of lepers. And, by God. there ought to be somebody, somewhere, with guts enough to stand up and say that wrong is not more powerful than right.

They have jails for lawbreakers, prisons for incorrigibles, and even deportation from the country for undesirable aliens. But what have they for people who with a stroke of the pen at 3.10 p. m. on September 30 make it their business to say that the law of Milford is stronger then the U. S. Constitution?

FOR THE GOOD of the community, they say. The poison of race hatred will surely kill us all if, as in years gone by, there is always someone with the power to say "if it's the poison you want, then drink it. Here is the hemlock of prejudice and aryan supremacy. Here are the threats of the burning cross and the Klan masters. Drink them all and grow fat upon them."

And where were all the churchmen when Milford went over to the enemy? Where were the good members of congregations whose national groups had in solemn assembly proclaimed the justice of the Supreme Court decision? Where were they when the caravans rolled in Milford and the bigots gathered at the airport last week to hear an itinerant troublemaker call the tune?

Where were they when the cross burned across from the school house?

WHERE ARE the law enforcement officials who could fine or punish those who keep their children from school in violation of the law?

If the parents of the Negro children refuse to send them to Dover you can believe that the lawmakers will haul out their dusty volumes and find some way to make what the Negro parents were doing illegal, and punishable.

"A great victory," says William B. Bowles, president of the National Association for the Advancement of White People. And there is there no one to say that the skirmish has been lost, but not the battle? Are there no men of God or justice or decency in Milford or in Delaware?

Courier Editorials

Reluctant Dragons

UNQUESTIONABLY, the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court last spring was a bitter pill for much of the South to swallow.

So far only three states (not directly involved in the May 17 decision) have responded to the invitation of Chief Justice Earl Warren to appear next month to participate in the discussions relative to the manner and time in which desegregation in public schools will occur.

The three states expressing a desire to present their views in October are Florida, North Carolina and Oklahoma.

Arkansas, Tennessee, Maryland and Texas have expressed the wish to file "friend of the court" briefs later, but did not make clear whether their attorneys general wish to take part in the oral discussion.

The Governors of Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana have served notice that they will have nothing to do with the hearings.

This reluctance to accept in good grace the Supreme Court decision or to make any effort to comply with it is becoming widespread although scarcely surprising considering Dixie traditions.

Will these reluctant Southern officials continue to defy the Supreme Court mandate after the justices have prescribed the time and manner in which it is supposed to be implemented?

This is the question that a whole lot of Americans are asking as the deadline approaches.

We imagine that those states talking about doing away with public schools rather than desegregate them have bitten off a whole lot more than they will be able to chew.

True, it is possible to abolish public schools by turning them over to private ownership, and then subsidize them from state taxes, but we scarcely think it is feasible.

If a state cannot use its tax money to operate segregated schools, it is very difficult to see how it can legally use taxes collected from all the people to subsidize private schools adopting segregationist policies or excluding Negroes altogether.

When a private school accepts public monies for its support, it becomes quasi-public and would thus seem to come under the terms of the U. S. Supreme Court directive.

We imagine that mainly the reluctant dragons of desegregation will rely on such devices as school districting (which the Supreme Court cannot touch) to keep Negro and white pupils separate, and even that could be defeated by Negroes if they qualified to vote, and voted.

We are not sufficiently foolhardy to predict what will happen when the U. S. Supreme Court orders the jim-crow states to "get with it" on integration, but we surmise that after a period of smoke-screening, loud outcries and threats, the unreconstructed Southerners will come to heel, albeit reluctantly.

Some Good Reasons For School Racial Incidents

THE GREENBRIER County, West Virginia, integrated school incident, while in itself a bad case, should not be taken as absolute proof that under decrees yet to be announced by the Supreme Court, integration is impossible of attainment throughout the United States.

To accept the West Virginia case as substantial proof that "the will of the people must prevail," which is the position taken by GOVERNOR STANLEY, and to some extent agreed to by our neighbor, the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, is to abandon law enforcement and surrender to the rule of anarchy.

It should be remembered that the Southern Conference of Governors maintains a well-financed department of propaganda. This bureau has left no stone unturned since long before the Supreme Court's decision, to arouse opposition to banishment of the southern system of discriminatory schools. Since the decision this bureau and its agents have done everything possible to stir up strife and trouble at any point where officials were willing to make a test case as to how integration would work.

There is no wonder that the people living in the vicinity of White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, favorite rendezvous of southern politicians, and resort for the idle rich, would lend themselves to disorderly conduct, when southern governors are running up and down the country virtually urging tne people to revolt.

A few days ago GOVERNOR HERMAN TALMADGE, of Georgia, the most brazen bigot and political demagogue the 20th century has produced, went to the Capital of the United States, and speaking to an audience made up of members of a youth organization, openly defied the Supreme Court to try to enforce its decrees in his State.

"Even if Federal troops were sent into Georgia, the results would be worse than anything since the Civil War," this spokesman for Georgia bellowed in his most raucous tones.

What is expected of the people, who have been taught all of their lives that "custom" is law in the South, when their elected and appointed officials are daily urging them to defy the highest court in the land?

Mississippi has just spread this poison over the South by deciding in its legislature to abolish the public schools, if that is necessary to preserve the State's present system of discrimination.

At the same time Mississippi's State Chamber of Commerce, and another agency sponsored by the State government are advertising in magazines of national circulation, pointing out the advantages of the State as location for industrial enterprizes. Who wants to risk the cost of a manufacturing plant in a State that does not believe in the education of its people?

An industrial concern recently pulled up and left South Carolina for the reason that the "workers from whom it had to draw our employees were too low in intelligence" to handle the factory's operations.

* * *

Integration presents a great human problem, but the people of both races in the South could work out the solutions, if given time, and if let alone by the political firebrands who are urging them to openly defy the law, and to create incidents of violence, in an effort to intimidate local school authorities and the Supreme Court of the United States.

Inciting to Riot

The Southland would be so much a better place in which Negroes could live if local authorities in every community would give cheap agitators the type and character of treatment administered to the Rev. William Carter at Hobbs, New Mexico.

Integration of the public school system in Hobbs was effected last week with not a riffle of the waves. Officers patroled the streets to see that everything went along all right, and the Rev. Hobbs, who had been blowing off his head in newspaper stories about what was going to happen, was told that if anything did happen, he (Rev. Hobbs) would be jailed charged with inciting to riot.

It now appears the only brick in the community was one eminating from the heart and mind of the Rev. Carter. Everyone was all right but him. If he had been left alone with his inflammatory utterances there doubtless might have been trouble. As it turned out, when he discovered his remarks might be attributed to the incitation of riot, he immediately took to his heels and joined the other citizens in the community in supporting a program of integration.

Too often, and especially this has happened regarding mobs, slight attention has been given to the promoters who assist in the breaking down of law and order. With the development of a more liberal approach to race relations, there is going to be increasing interest in prevention of this type of outlawery. The same thing happened in Clinton, Oklahoma, when the town fathers decided they would end segregation in their municipal swimming pool. The town fathers decided they would obey the edict of the Supreme Court, and that was that. The kids in Clinton did what their parents told them to do. There was no untoward incident that happened and the swimming pool is the property of the total community.

No community can "explode" if those in control take the right steps in preventing explosion. There are a few Rev. Carters in every community, but all of them will cool off overnight if given the "Hobbs" treatment. Have them to understand and know that if anything happens they will be charged with inciting to riot.

The School Amendment

(From The Savannah Tribune)

There is considerable lack of agreement in the camp as to whether the plan to abolish our public schools is tenable. The State School Superintendent, the Executive Secretary of the G. E. A., the Secretary of the G. E. C., the governor-nominate, Roy Harris, and the Governor are not in agreement as to what the amendment will or can accomplish, when and if the voters endorse it in the coming election. The author of the amendment resents having it called the private school bill. He says it is a bill to provide insurance for segregated schools of against Supreme Court interference. Mr. Roy Harris has said, "the private school system is not the answer to our dilemma ..... The private school plans which have been developed by Gov. Talmadge of Georgia and Gov. White of Mississippi will not work." It has been our feeling all along that the plan would not hold up before the Court, but we believe it is unnecessary as an insurance measure because in states that were not parties to the recent suit and not directly affected by the decision, it has already been suggested that suits will be tried in every county which will require twenty-five years to get decisions. This will give time enough for rabid reactionaries to cool off and become ready to accept integration. It will give the state time to find out if it can maintain a dual system of education, equal in all respects at all levels; there will be time during which the masses of Negroes will be able to improve in all the areas that are concerned with making people socially acceptable, during which real statesmanship in promoting desirable human relations will be developed. The reaction in some communities dictates nothing more clearly than that statesmanship in our democratic society has failed so far to meet a crisis. The states most forward in the action to abolish public school systems have been the most resistant and the most laggard in equalizing educational facilities. The authorization of private school plans will free them of any obligation, legal and moral, to continue to do what they now make a pretense at doing. This will be especially true in communities where school administrators have easy consciences. Aside from being of doubtful legality and a threat to the education of Georgia boys and girls, the private school plan is unnecessary. The amendment to authorize the abandonment of our public schools should be defeated.

AMONG GAY DECEIVERS

Currently we are being reminded by the newspapers of a memory gem that school children of a former generation committed to memory and constantly quoted in the schools of long ago.

School teachers of that era held that it was a good form of education—a good form of character-building—to get youngsters to commit to memory choice quotations from the Bible and the best works of secular literature. Progressive education, so-called, of the present era, rejects the Bible and what was once held to be good, character-building literature. Probably it is now held that "it takes too much of the pupil's time" to require him to commit to memory items of good literature. At any rate, it will not be denied that present-day students in our schools are, except in rare instances, total strangers to Bible verses and other good literature, much to the exasperation of parents who never had it so BAD as now, when it comes to being forced to fork over tax money in abundance to promote "progressive education."

But back to the memory gem of old that is appearing so frequently in the papers. The gem is:

"O what a tangled web we weave
when first we practice to deceive!"

The implications of this memory gem contains as much gospel truth as the Scripture which says, "be not deceived, God is not mocked and whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Practicing to deceive is what the Supreme Court of 1896 did, when it by-passed the plain provision of the 14th Amendment, and proposed that it was good law to provide for "separate but equal" provisions of accommodation for "the two races." The Supreme Court knew, or should have known, that their separate but equal device was certain to be taken advantage of to provide EXCLUSIVELY for SEPARATE accommodations. Now who could believe the justices on the Supreme Court did not know that when they sounded off in the 1896 decision about "superior and inferior races, they then and there were giving the alleged "superiors" the green light for torturing the 14th Amendment?

Every person of ordinary intelligence is now laughing at Judge Schoolfield and Congressman Sutton. They pretend they knew how to get around the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954. Mr. Sutton says just elect him U. S. Senator and he will go to Washington and pass a law declaring the decision null and void. This windy politician would probably threaten you with mayhem if you reminded him that his proposed law would be passed upon by the very Supreme Court. His law would seek to embarrass. In other words, the Sutton law would be declared UNCONSTITUTIONAL, to the utter amazement of the wool-hat boys from Tobacco Road, who along with Tennessee citizens, can be deceived by Sir Walter Scott wrote along time ago:

"O what a tangled web we weave
When first we practice to deceive!"

Yes, it is just like Sir Walter Scott wrote along time ago:

"O what a tangled web we weave
When first we practice to deceive!"

Wrong About Ohio

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am a daily and Sunday reader of your newspaper. I have enjoyed it very much until I saw the editorial "Up In De Nawth." You mentioned a few states where I do not understand the situation but when it came to Ohio, you caused me to "blow my top."

First you say Ohio, is of course an out and out Yankee state." In the same sentence you said Ohio had a fair share of pro-Southern "copperheads" in Civil War days.

Then you talked about our Yankee hypocrity who preach one way and practice another, that the state of Ohio does not have school segregation officially—they just turn away Negro students who try to register.

What I would like to know is, who is the mule head who studied the Ohio situation?

I was born in Cleveland, Ohio in 1904. I still live in approximately the same neighborhood there. As a kid I remember a family who had a nice (colored) white-haired father of six children, who used to tell us stories of the Old South on his front porch.

Mind you, this is 1954 and a lot of progress has been made since then.

In 1918 I went to Cathedral Latin High School as a freshman. About two blocks away was Fairmount Junior High School. Among their students was the one and only Jesse Owens, or do you consider him as a Negro from up in De Nawth? Cathedral Latin and Fairmount used the same Wade Park to practice football, baseball and track, and Jesse was not the only Negro who shared with us.

Did Ohio State segregate Jesse Owens? Another star athlete at East Tech after graduating went to college in Ames, Iowa,—Harrison Dillard, I suppose you never heard of him. There are only a few instances. I go home every year or so on furlough. At the grade school I attended, I see Whites and Negroes going to school together.

In my life in the Air Force I have been in plenty of your dear Southern hospitality states. In Richmond, Va., for instance, when I attended Adjutant General's school at Ft. Lee. We arrived from Washington, D.C. and had to wait for a bus. An old Negro woman wanted a ticket, but she was refused and told to go to another part of the station, which was "Reserved for Colored."

On reaching Petersburg, Va., another such incident occured, only it was a much smaller station. The colored person could not buy a ticket, but if he would go to the other side of the counter, he would be waited on. The irony of it all is that ticket office was about 24 feet by 24 feet. And the same clerk waited on him on the other side, but had to come over to where we were to get the tickets.

The first time we rode a bus in Richmond, Va., we paid our fare and sat in two empty seats. The motorman called us to come up front, as they were reserved. In Cleveland, everyone sits where he wants, as long as he pays his fare.

I could write many more pages but what's the use, you wouldn't print it anyway.

Bigot And Burning Cross Bring Delaware Retreat

Journal & Guide

NOBODY EXPECTED integration of races in public schools to be easy, or accomplished one hundred per cent without some untoward incidents. Even so, the Milford, Del., White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Hillsboro, Ohio, and more recently the Baltimore, Md., difficulties have, in varying degrees, some highly unfortunate aspects. It is far too soon, incidentally, for hand-wringing and moans of "I told you so," or predictions that desegregation will fail. America's "conscience and Constitution," an ALAN PATON phrase, will ultimately prevail.

It is to be remembered that integration proceeded last month totally without incident in the District of Columbia, that it has proceeded in orderly fashion in Arizona and New Mexico, in Kentucky and Kansas, and in West Virginia with the isolated exception in a town on Virginia's border. There are, easily, three "no-incidents" to every "incident" growing out of school desegregation. In the Solid South there is considerable integration accomplished without boycotts, fights, closing of schools, or other troubles — on most military posts, in parochial schools (Richmond, Roanoke, Raleigh, and Charlotte, for instance), and in over sixty formerly all-white tax-supported or private colleges attended now by over 2,000 non-whites.

Such opposition as prevails to integration — where it is being tried voluntarily (pending the mandatory decrees putting into force the May 17th desegregation decision of the Supreme Court), insofar as that opposition develops into actual violence, as in Baltimore, or in acts and words patently inciting to riot, as in Milford, or in protest-absences from schools in defiance of compulsory attendance laws—would be a great deal less effective had it developed subsequent to the high court's decrees.

It then would not only be in violation of state or local laws and ordinances against truancy, disorderliness, assault and battery, and fomenting of trouble, but in open defiance of the court and in illegal contempt of court, against which our judicial system has ample measures and which public opinion generally will not endure.

The miscreants in Baltimore were promptly and adequately dealt with. One white adult, guilty of punching a colored school boy, was fined $100 the same day. Two other disturbers of the peace, one colored, received lesser fines. But in Milford, unfortunately, the authorities showed no such firmness and retreated before the forces of bigotry and gangsterism. After an applaudable initial stand by the governor and state school board officials to carry out integration throughout the state, including Milford, they let a cross-burning and other acts of defiance cow them into a decision to send Milford Negro children back to all-colored schools.

People entrusted with the administration of good government and the execution of equal justice are delinquent in their sworn duty when this occurs. The governor of Delaware has the police authority to enforce his orders, and he can back it up with the militia if it is flaunted or the physical welfare of parents or pupils is endangered.

Weekend dispatches quote a Florida-born ex-Marine now living in Washington, and the self-styled founder and head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, one BRYANT BOWLES, as saying:

"My three-year old daughter will never attend a school with Negroes as long as there is breath in my body and gunpowder will burn," and that "Negroes may have to start looking out for themselves. I don't know whether they are capable of taking care of themselves."

MR. BOWLES left his place of residence to travel through Delaware drumming up resistance to what was an orderly changeover from segregated to integrated schools.

This newspaper devoutly believes in freedom of speech, and would not deny that right to MR. BOWLES. But it seems to us that his speeches, typified by the quotation above, abuse that right and cross the line beyond which speech freedom is abused to the peril of good order and of the lives of others, including children.

MR. BOWLES is quite clearly inciting to riot, or worse. Can one loudmouth like him continue to cow the governor of Delaware and deride the authority of the courts and of state?

Talladega Defended In Attitude Toward Negroes

To the Editor:

Reading a letter in your column of Nov. 18 by a man who signed as Jiri Kolaja, I find his inference are unfair to the people of Talladega and the South. I would like to reply. In the last paragraph he refers to not finding French culture in Talladega. The culture of Talladega is that of the old South, which is so far superior to that of France that we need none of the French heritage. The attitude of the people here towards colored people is best shown by the fact that before the political decision of the Supreme Court there was a fine high school and grammar school for colored children and everybody in Talladega pays 1 cent sales tax to pay for the fine football stadium for colored..

Being now 75 years of age it was a long time ago while I was a young man I attended an educational conference at the First Methodist Church in Birmingham, and heard the colored head of Tuskegee, Dr. Moton, say that colored people just naturally preferred to associate with their own race, and that if he was going to New Orleans on the train he would select a colored man for his seat mate, not that he felt inferior, but enjoyed himself more with his own people. I sincerely believe that if the colored people of the South are let alone they will voluntarily go to their own schools and churches. What we need is for the colored people themselves to work the matter out, without the help of NAACP.

We believe in equal opportunities, but not social equality. B. E. SAMUELS,

Segregation Issue Affects School Support Problem

To the Editor:

There is much concern by public officials as to the advisability of a countywide election to try and pass some kind of amendment to raise money for the operation of the schools another year.

I think the greatest concern should be school integration. Until this matter is settled with no change in the status quo, the voters of the state or county or city are not going to vote to tax themselves to support non-segregated schools. And, too, there is a possibility we all might have to send our children to private schools.

I believe this is the thinking of the majority of the people at this time, and it would be a foolish gesture to offer such an amendment at this time for ratification.

They might ask the Supreme Court or the NAACP how they can make the people use and support non-segregated schools in the state. That is the $65 question.

Everyone wants his children to secure the best education possible. But we may have to disband public schools.

It would behoove everyone to petition our representatives to warn the Supreme Court and the President. The 100 years of the co-existence of our peoples in the Southland is about to be destroyed by the agitators of aggression. All the good that has been accomplished in race relations, and in educational facilities, our respect one for another, our cooperation one with another, is all this to be torn down?

Our public officials should be more concerned that this does not happen. When this is accomplished then the people will vote the necessary money for all school need.

Desegregation By 2030 A.D. Confidently Predicted

Book Reviewer Arrives At That 75-Year Estimate With Illinois Yardstick—At The Same Time Making Clear That The Mixup Will Not, Any Way, Be Controlled By Prig, Prelate Or Philanthropist—And That The Mixmasters Are Like The It-Is-Done Prohibitionists Of Yore

By J. Fred Thornton

Associate Editor, The Advertiser

A DETAILED REPORT on the progress in mixing white and Negro children in public schools outside the South is contained in a just-published book (Schools In Transition, Edited by Robin M. Williams Jr. and Margaret W. Ryan, The University of North Carolina Press. $3.)

It gives results of surveys of 24 communities outside the South that have changed from bi-racial to integrated schools in the last few years, mostly under the compulsion of state laws and before the famous Supreme Court decision of last May 17.

Field studies were financed by the Ford Foundation. Dr. Williams, who edited the findings, is director of Cornell University's Social Science Research Center, and Mrs. Ryan, who assisted him, was with Cornell at the time the book was written.

Williams is a native of North Carolina, and Mrs. Ryan, a Texan. There is an introduction by Harry S. Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, and author of The Negro And The Schools, which preceded the book under consideration.

In it's larger aspect, this program of the Ford Foundation smacks strongly of an attempt to sugarcoat the bitter bill of school desegregation for the South by using Southerners to explain and smooth over.

The Ford Foundation thus applies to the South a policy which worked exceedingly well for many years in other "colonial" areas. The British in Uganda, the French in the Ubangi-Shari district of Equatorial Africa, have employed a similar technique.

Recent evidences of unrest indicate, it is true, that even such areas as Uganda and Ubangi-Shari may get fed up with being patronized, no matter how tactfully it is done through "native" intermediaries.

SOFT APPROACH

Schools In Transition has its good points for which I wish to give due credit.

It is written in a spirit of good will. There is none of the "ram it down the damned Rebels' throats" approach unhappily evident in other quarters.

It reports opposition to, as well as support for, desegregation in communities under study, even though the general tenor of making out a case for integration is clearly visible.

It exposes in some detail the miserable hyprocisies resorted to by Yankees to dodge integration.

BRAND-NEW REVERENCE FOR COURT

There are several features to which I take exception, notably the following:

¶ The assertion that integration is inevitable, and only a question of time.

¶ The definition of "integration" — which goes far beyond anything embodied in the court decision.

¶ The idea that the Supreme Court decision of May 17 is a thing sacred and immutable which has become a familiar line of champions of desegregation.

It was very different during the long years the court upheld segregation, going back to the case of Plessy V. Ferguson in 1896. Then, in the leftist-liberal view, the court's decisions were the work of fallible, erring men, to be contested and reversed if possible.

Since the court ruled against Southern usage last May, its decision becomes a thing to be accepted with an awe and reverence equal to if not indeed surpassing that accorded those commandments which God Almighty handed down in person amid thunder and lightning on Mount Sinai.

tionists of 30 years and more ago.

When the drys succeeded in getting prohibition in the constitution, their pose was that the issue had been settled once and for all, that any further agitation was treason, or little short of it. Yet national prohibition was first nullified by public disapproval and then formally repealed, all in less than 15 years.

SEGREGATION MAY NEVER DIE

Whether racial integration is to be applied in the South will be finally determined, neither by court decisions nor by the vaporings of prig, prelate or philanthropist. The ultimate decision rests with those who make up a majority of the population of the South and pay most of its taxes.

A realistic view is that Deep South schools will not be desegregated at any time in the predictable future. It is at least possible that it may never be done. If so, it would not be the first time that an unpopular edict has been nullified by popular disapproval.

WHAT THE BOOK SEES

Schools In Transition says that school "integration" is inevitable. And its definition of integration, as compared with simple "desegregation" is significant.

The following is from the book:

"By desegergation is meant any process of bringing Negro (or other 'non-white') and white children into the same schools: This sharing of schools involves bi-racial classes, and in some cases bi-racial faculties and administration. It also refers to bi-racial P-TA's and other school organizations."

It is safe to say that this is as far as the white Alabamian ever thought he would be asked to go—assuming he is willing to "go" at all. It reaches out as far, or farther, than the Supreme Court decision, which I believe says nothing about P-TA activities.

But it is not as far as those who are preparing the way have in mind. This is clearly indicated by the following:

"Integration, on the other hand, has to do with the participation of Negroes and whites in the same activities, with a maximum of cooperation. When integregation has been fully accomplished, this common participation is taken for granted as normal and customary. Integration includes bi-racial extra-curricular and school-related activities, as well as classroom activities.

"The present question is not whether integregation will come, but how it will come and when." (Italics supplied).

The distinction between "desegregation" and "integration" is again stressed in a summary of the situation at Cairo, Ill., where mixed classes were violently opposed:

"The community reluctantly settled into a new pattern. As this study ended, the 'integration' of the Negro students in this situation was still largely that of physical occupancy of space within the schools. Modern education deals with the total personality, and true integregation would entail much more than that."

The above is clear notice to the South that it cannot hope for rest or respite if it should accede to mixed classrooms and faculties. The goal — the thing we are told is inevitable—is "bi-racial extra-curricular and school-related activities" as yet not clearly defined.

WHOSE 'GUILT-COMPLEX'?

I was frankly irked by a reference to "suppressed feelings of guilt on the one hand and inferiority on the other" stemming from segregation.

The Southern white man of good will may well have a feeling akin to guilt over failure to provide Negroes with equal but separate school facilities. The past poverty of state governments has been argued in extenuation, but there is no doubt that the South fell down here. A similar feeling may well have existed over failure of the Negro to set equal justice before the law—though this has been corrected in great measure, and in some areas altogether.

But any sweeping generalization about a Southern feeling of guilt over segregation per se is all wet. The Alabamian will argue that a feeling of guilt belongs more appropriately to our ex-Ku-Kluxer, Justice Hugo Black, and his eight comrades, for coming through with their dynamite-laden decision at a time when great strides were being made toward equal but separate facilities.

WHAT'S HAPPENED SO FAR

No attempt will be made here to give details of studies in the 24 communities covered in the book.

A general summary states:

"Transition from segregation to non-segregation—and to some measure of true integration—took place in most of the 24 communities with a smoothness and lack of open friction which typically surprised officials and teachers. In this the public schools shared the same reactions found in Southern universities. In nearly all instances, the amount of difficulty and tension actually experienced was less than had been anticipated and predicted. Only in one town—Cairo, Ill. was there any violence, and even in this instance no blood was shed."

The book was written before the anti-integration "demonstrations" in Delaware, Baltimore, West Virginia and Washington, D.C.

The 24 communities surveyed ranged from New Jersey to Arizona. It is stressed that the areas involved, though outside the South, have a "Southern exposure." This point may well have been over-emphasized. Certainly a different reaction to desegregation may be expected from a typical Alabama or Georgia community, compared with that found in a New Jersey or Ohio town.

Moreover, desegregation is far from complete in the states, all outside the South, covered by Schools In Transition, for the book frankly states:

"From the evidence at hand it seems that the majority of Negro children in the states included in this study still live and go to school in segregated environments, but the last decade has seen this begin to change rather rapidly."

NEGRO TEACHERS OPPOSED MINGLING

Opposition to desegregation was not confined to white people. This was true even at Tucson, Arizona, cited as an example of successful integration (Tucson's Negro population is about 6% of the total). At Tucson, we read: "A factor which might have discouraged a less determined man [than the local school superintendent, who promoted integration] was the indifferent attitude of some of the Negro teachers. In interviews with them it was brought out that they were satisfied with the status quo before integration."

At Cairo, Ill., "The Negro school personnel were most bitter in their attacks on those wanting desegration." Negro opposition at Cairo was by no means restricted to school teachers—every Negro minister in the town except one spoke out against integration.

HOW YANKEES EVADE IT

As for the Yankee devices to thwart integration, we read:

"Some non-Southern communities have used deliberately such devices as gerrymandered school districts, no districts or a 'school of choice' policy, separate classrooms, or segregated grades to assure separation of the races. These pratcices are found most frequently in communities in which the sentiments of dominant groups favors segregation, even sometimes where the law requires an integrated school."

Another technique reported in use was to register all the white children first and then say there was no room for the Negroes.

Such dodges as these are what the South is, by inference, being invited to resort to, in place of segregation laws which at least have the saving grace of being honest and forthright.

Illinois has had an anti-segregation law since 1874. But its provisions were ignored by many counties until after 1949, when the legislature passed a law to withhold state funds from counties with segregated schools.

It thus took Illinois three-quarters of a century to make a start at general application of a desegregation law. Allowing Alabama the same latitude, we would get around to desegregation about 2030 A.D.

vocacy of "economic thuggery" the movement of citizens in Dallas and other Black Belt counties to use the weapons they have in defense of their social order.

We find in one of the concluding paragraphs of a long and bitter editorial of criticism this intellectual belly-wash:

"What is not unlikely in a resourceful and usually realistic country like Dallas is that it will continue to equalize the Negro and white schools until that grievance is dissolved and thereafter treat the court's segregation ruling like the late prohibition law or a Sunday closing ordinance—with the acquiesence of Negro citizens."

* * *

THAT is the sort of stupid flight from reality which has put us where we are today.

Is the Supreme Court verdict a figment of the imagination that the editor of The Advertiser can brush away at will?

Is the belligerent radicalism of the NAACP a shadow to be dissolved by the light of such fantasy?

Is the Negro truly not concerned with the possibility of integration, with the opening of the bedroom door—which is the eventual goal of all this?

Then we challenge the editor of The Advertiser or any other thinking Alabamian to go to a newsstand and to purchase there the Negro magazines in general circulation.

And if any such person finds even one without story or pictures featuring miscegenation, legal or illegal, let him show it for it will be a virtually unmatched rarity.

* * *

IS THAT a state of mind to be ignored under the bland assumption that everything will be all right . . . that a fuse attached to a stick of dynamite will not burn to the moment of explosion unless it is extinguished?

The men of Dallas County who have banded together to protect racial segregation have done for this whole state a service.

They have done what would have spared us years of woe had Alabamians generally done it years ago.

And that is to say:

"Thus far have you gone. No further shall you go."

* * *

THAT is what Alabama means.

That is what Alabama has meant all the time.

The tragedy has been our silence, even as that silence has been construed as a growing willingness to accept a thing more monstrous to most of us than almost any fate that could befall us.

For the decent, responsible men of a community to band themselves together as these Black Belters have done is to put a brake on a deadly thing that has been running wild.

It is to offer hope for peace and continued understanding where friction had been growing in the weeds of misunderstanding.

It is to clear the air of the deadliest thing to shadow this state and the people of this state since Reconstruction.

It is to render a favor to the thinking and responsible Negro as well as to protect the white.

It is to say that the reins of government and of society are going to remain in the hands of the Alabama white—no matter who says what to the contrary.

The men who have participated in that Dallas County enterprise—or in any other county—deserve better than to be assailed as they have been assailed by The Montgomery Advertiser.

UTTERLY WRONG

The Birmingham News

Citizens Councils are being organized in a number of Black Belt counties as a means of taking collective action in regard to the Supreme Court decision calling for desegregation of public schools. The right of peaceable assembly, and of acting through organizations, is, of course, beyond question.

Montgomery Ala.

At an organization meeting of one such council in Selma, speakers insisted that all steps taken by the groups of white citizens would be within the law. That insistence, of course, is perfectly correct. It should be the only attitude considered. Sun. Dec. 5, 1954

However, one Dallas County leader in the movement earlier was quoted to the effect that the council intends "to make it difficult, if not impossible, for any Negro who advocates desegregation to find and hold a job, get credit or renew a mortgage."

That statement, although it has an unofficial status, is cause for concern.

Action of the sort indicated would be completely wrong and would work more harm than good.

Employment of economic pressures to obtain one's way is no novelty, of course. Parents do it when they threaten to cut Junior's allowance if his grades at school do not improve. And while some modern psychologists may insist that such pressures against a child are undesirable, the practice is wide and certainly not illegal.

But it is a far cry from that sort of thing to what seems contemplated by the economic pressure utterance reported from Selma. The threat against Junior is aimed at getting him to do what he knows he ought to do. The implied threat against Negroes is to keep them from doing what they may well think they should do.

It is like saying to them that if they agree with the Supreme Court and try peaceably to carry out its decision, they will be unable, say, to borrow money to plant their crops, or even to be able to work and live in the neighborhoods they have always called home.

Any play of this sort upon the fears of law-abiding citizens is utterly wrong.

It should have no place among today's enlightened people.

But surely this unofficial statement will not be permitted to become the fixed policy of the white Citizens Councils. It is significant that at the public meeting in Selma in which the local council was organized, no speaker voiced a threat like that. But it is also to be noted that the council did not definitely and positively repudiate such a course. It should do so, if for no other reason than to restrain overzealous members.

The whole question of public school segregation is one in which there are honest differences of opinion. Such differences cannot be settled aright in an atmosphere of fear, of threat and reprisal. In conflicts of opinion, force never settles anything that could not have been settled better through conference, through the exercise of good will and intelligence.

We hope the people of good will, fair play and sound judgment will be dominant in these Citizens Councils.

In Reply To Dr. Whitsett

Advertiser

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—Most of us prefer not to "wash our linen (church or personal) in public," but the fact that 50 Methodist bishops meeting recently in Chicago gave a statement to the press supporting the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in the public schools has created widespread embarrassment to Methodists in every section of our country and in the very nature of things will provoke discussion. And so my letter questioning the authority and wisdom of the pronouncement of the 50 bishops (wich the editor labeled "Segregation Is Political, Not Religious") and the reply to my letter from Rev. Dan C. Whitsett, pastor of the Sylacauga, Ala., Methodist Church.

Montgomery Ala.

Dec. 5, 1954

Nor do we accept the statement of "the position of the Methodist Church on segregation." Reference is made to the Episcopal address (the statement of the bishops to a general conference) and to the social creed adopted by the general conference in 1952. The Episcopal address is no more the law of the Methodist Church than is the message of the President to the Congress of the United States on the state of the Union the law of the land. The social creed is a lengthy statement on nearly everything that concerns all classes and conditions of men. Few who attend a general conference hear it when it is read or know what it contains. This is unfortunate because it is an opportunity for pressure group propagandists to insert their pet theories.

The "official" position of the Methodist Church is not to be found in councils or conferences, but in Methodist people in the thousands of Methodist churches scattered throughout America. Most of these have very definite convictions and they will not accept as binding any "position"—official or otherwise that does violence to their convictions. I am sure that some of the Southern bishops sincerely deplore the action of their colleagues at Chicago. I believe that they will take a very definite stand on the side of those who will fight to the very limit to preserve our racial customs. They were members of Southern annual conferences. They were elected by Southern votes. They will not fail when the time of testing comes.

My friend, Dr. Whitsett, quoted the words of Jesus to the religionists of His day who were "laying aside the commandment of God and holding to the tradition of men." Jesus also had a word for those "who heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not." The National Council of Churches meeting in Boston, according to an Associated Press report, dated Dec. 1, "called for deeds—and not just words—to end racial segregation in American churches."

Let those who insist that their position against racial segregation in schools and churches is in shameful conflict with the teachings of Jesus, begin to apply this in their own churches, "deeds, and not just words." If they are confident of the interpretation of the words of Jesus, and they are sure of the "official position" of the Methodist Church, let them announce to their officials and congregations that their convictions must be put into practice. So far as their church is concerned they do not have to wait for a "directive" from the Supreme Court. If their duty as Christians is clear, what are they waiting for?

Private School Plan Hit as a Burlesque; Political Bosses Trying to Ram It Through

Marietta—We have bootleg whiskey, now we may get a taste of bootleg education. Also they may want to put numbers on our children and do away with their names. If the ones in power now get their scheme through, every child going to school must be taught to ignore the laws of our country and thereby become a potential criminal.

Now let us watch the night before election as the bosses send out the orders then. Also let us vote a big no to any changes to our school system and for all time stop this political burlesque show.

F. H. COOPER.

Can Politicians Scare School Plan Through?

Marietta—Do the politicians in the state capitol, and their stooges, think they are going to scare the people of Georgia into buying the "grab-bag" private school amendment?

They failed to scare the people into changing the election laws, and they are going to fail this time. They would have you believe that every person that is opposed to the amendment is opposed to segregation.

The governor has told nation-wide TV audiences that the people of Georgia, both white and colored, are almost one hundred per cent in favor of segregation in the schools, which is true. That being true, why not trust the people of Georgia to make up their own minds on this amendment, instead of spending great sums of public money and cluttering up the newspapers and the air waves with a lot of misleading propaganda? Could it be that they are more interested in "feathering their own nests" politically, than they are in the welfare and education of our children?

Who are the people going to listen to?—the politicians of one faction, or the ministers, church people, school leaders, teachers, civic organizations, and many other people of high standing in Georgia?

If the amendment were to pass it will not stand. Even if the U.S. Court upheld it, which it would not, it will ultimately fail because it is motivated by pride, prejudice and hatred. The Scriptures severely condemn these sins. They talk a lot about "tradition." Our Lord strongly condemned traditions of men. It will not stand, because it is not right.

Free Education Necessary In Democratic Society

To the Editor:

My father told me of boarding schools when he was a boy. Every family paid so much a pupil for children attending school. The teacher boarded with a pupil's family according to the number of pupils from each family. The scholars were well grounded in the three R's with no fancy trimming.

Then came the free public school, paid for by a tax on assessed property value. My grandfather said: "I have paid for the education of all my children now I must continue paying for the education of other people's children."

The U. S. Supreme Court decision against school segregation makes white Alabama citizens consider whether in one form or another school segregation can be maintained. If private schools for each race are started, public money for their support cannot be levied. When white and colored families must pay for their children's education according to the number of children sent to school, many white and colored children will mature with little or no education in the three R's.

The cornerstone of true democracy is free, compulsory education. Mature adults lacking education in the three R's are ready accepters of Communist doctrine promising them a better life through free public education. He who removes the cornerstone of democracy lacks good sense.

The News editorial of Oct. 13 entitled "A School Plan of Good Will and Cooperation" should be read and considered by thoughtful white Alabama citizens. Respect for both law and order is essential in meeting the Supreme Court decision. Cooperation by leading members of both races on this question is necessary. Many colored children will wish to continue their education in a colored school. The few who may wish to attend a white elementary or white high school should be given permission.

Let us hope that our Legislature will not destroy our public school system which provides not only a free but also compulsory education for all Alabama's children of every race, creed and color. A native-born, healthy adult citizen who cannot read and write is a disgrace to Alabama.

Pawns Of NAACP

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—According to the statements made by a few of the parents of the colored children who went to the white school to register, they were not informed of the true purpose of their visit.

It is my understanding that the NAACP wishes the Negro race to be given equal rights and privileges in all phases of life. Why, then, did they not practice what they preach and explain fully to these colored people the reasons they were asked to go to the white school to register? If they strongly believe their doctrine, they should begin with truth not falsehoods.

Perhaps the falsehood was not theirs—if not, they would have done better to have picked out those more fanatically devoted to their cause and carefully briefed them on their statements to the press.

If these colored people were really used as pawns (as their statements seem to indicate) this ought to show them that the NAACP is not nearly as interested in their welfare as individuals as it is in personal publicity for its perpetrators.

Other School Issues Face Voters Nov. 2

While the private-school amendment (No. 4) is of paramount importance, it must not be overlooked that a number of other school amendments are to be voted on Nov. 2. Some of them are purely local in their applications, but together they are of vital importance to the future of Georgia education. Several of them will be voted on by the entire state.

Amendment No. 7, for instance, would make it possible for counties and municipalities to increase local support for their school systems. It provides for a procedure by which a county may remove or increase the present 15 mills limitation on local taxes for school purposes.

The present limitation is unrealistic in view of the current situation in Georgia education. With the state's support at about the limit current revenue will permit, local communities find they must do more if adequate school systems are to be maintained. Certainly any community that wants to do more should be permitted to do so.

Three amendments affecting Fulton and DeKalb Counties will be voted on by the entire state. They are designed to meet unprecedented situations of growth that neither county can evade. They deserve passage.

Amendment 32 would remove the homestead exemption for school tax purposes only in Fulton County. Amendment 27 would accomplish the same purpose for DeKalb County.

Amendment 33 proposes to permit the issuance of school bonds equal to 10 per cent of the Fulton County School District bond digest instead of the present limitation of 7 per cent. With an increase of 1,000 school children every year requiring 30 additional classrooms, Fulton is facing a crisis. All bond funds available under the present limitation are now exhausted.

DeKalb's school problem is even more aggravated. Its school enrollment has been increasing by 3,000 annually and despite economical operation present revenues are inadequate to the needs.

These amendments affecting Fulton and DeKalb would make it possible for their citizens to share in solution of difficult problems that must be met.

There are a number of other school amendments affecting local communities only that are progressive in nature.

Thus, while the private-school amendment is important, it is by no means the only school issue. But especially important are the measures affecting Fulton and DeKalb, with their bulging populations. Passage of the local amendments affecting them would provide a means of at least meeting their most urgent needs.

Former Teacher Asks If State Wants Return to 'Gloomy Past'

The Editors: Can the people be so unwise to listen to a few politicians as to segregation in our public schools?

There is no danger, nor has there ever been any danger, of mixed schools in the South, regardless of what the court may decide.

The colored people, when given their choice, will never send to a school of white children — if given one of equal advantages of their own.

Do you want to go back to the old one-room school houses, when children walked in water and mud?

When one school teacher would teach 50 or more children, using older pupils to hear a part of the lessons and not too well prepared himself?

When every teacher looked to his farm for a part of his living, or he would not have enough to fill his dinner pail?

All of them, male or female, were poorly paid and mostly beat out of the agreed supplement from the patrons. Hardly a male teacher who did not make teaching a stepping stone to something else.

The writer was, for a short time only, one of those "professors"—looking ahead to law. The old teachers were worn out and unappreciated, with no money.

Do the people want to go back to those dark days when only a few people could be educated? Seldom then that a college graduate could be found.

Take away our fine schools, partly built by federal funds. Take away the help in education coming from the federal government, and take away the hot meals at the noonday hour for the hungry children (such as I did not have), and it will land us back into a dark and gloomy past.

Opposition of GEA To Plan Discussed

The Editors: As a member of the Georgia Education Association for several years, I personally feel that the people of Georgia should understand the apparent opposition of GEA to Amendment 4, and how this opposition originated.

During the last annual session of the GEA Convention in Atlanta, a resolution was introduced and adopted opposing this amendment. As a matter of fact, every resolution presented to this body was adopted as a formality.

The leadership of the GEA took this as a definite mandate that every member, every local unit, and every district was strongly opposed to the amendment.

Such was not the case then, and such is not the case today.

This important matter was handled quite contrary to the usual procedure of the GEA. As a rule, all important matters coming before the GEA are first presented to the local units for their discussion and action, and then moved up to the state for final action.

Ask the teachers in your town and county if this most important matter has ever been discussed or acted upon by their local unit.

The GEA is apparently opposed to Amendment 4, because its leadership happens to oppose it. This leadership has tried desperately to scare the teachers and other people of this state by setting up an array of straw men and proceeding to shoot them full of posionous darts of every imaginable evil that is sure to befall this state if this amendment is adopted.

They have presented one side and one side only on this controversial issue.

The GEA leadership has not said where it stands on the matter of segregation itself. It was strangely and omniously silent at the NEA convention in New York City last summer.

On Teacher Discrimination—

Where Will South's Negro Instructors Go Under Integration? Will Northern States, Which Employ Few, Accept Them?

Are the parents of white children in the north prepared to accept an influx of Negro teachers to take over many of the classrooms hitherto occupied by white teachers?

This is the new problem which the American people face now that the full meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has undergone further study. For it is likely that many of the Negro teachers who have been employed in segregated schools in the South will be displaced when integrated schools, with both whites and Negroes, are fully established.

There are, according to the latest United States Census figures, 76,390 Negro teachers employed in the 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, as compared with 310,319 white teachers. This is one Negro out of each five teachers.

In the 31 so-called non-segregated States there are only 10,240 Negro teachers, as compared with 722,483 white teachers. This is a ratio of one Negro teacher to each 73 of each 73 teachers.

Careful reading of the Supreme Court decision would seem to indicate that any such ratio of employment in the North as between white and Negro teachers could be held to be discrimination. Inasmuch as the Supreme Court decision says, in effect, that the Federal Government can intervene in the field of education and pass judgment on what kind of education pupils are receiving, it may be inferred that examination of the quality of teaching has also come within the Federal power. The Supreme Court said:

"There are findings below that the Negro and white schools involved have been equalized, or are being equalized, with respect to buildings, curricula, qualifications and salaries of teachers, and other 'tangible' factors. Our decision, therefore, cannot turn on mere-ly a comparison of these tangible factors in the Negro and white schools involved in each of the cases. We must look instead to the effect of segregation itself on public education . . .

"We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does."

With such a direct intervention into the subject of what constitutes a good education, the Supreme Court undoubtedly has decreed that any palpable inequality in the selection of the number of Negro teachers as compared to whites would be considered as discrimination if it can be proved that Negro teachers who are well qualified to teach are not being given jobs they deserve.

It will be asked, for instance, why, as the latest census figures show, only three Negro teachers were qualified in Maine whereas 7,483 white teachers were employed. Similarly, Montana has only two Negro teachers and 5,601 white teachers.

Even Massachusetts, which has prided itself on its historic attitude toward the Negro, employs only 110 Negroes out of a total of 36,553 teachers. Indiana, with a large Negro population, has only 680 Negro teachers out of 27,290. California has only 923 Negro teachers and 73,525 white teachers. Illinois, another State with a large Negro population, has only 1,961 Negro teachers, while it employs 55,712 white teachers.

The same small ratio of Negro teachers prevails in other Northern States. New York State has only 1,693 Negro teachers, as compared with 101,387 white teachers. Ohio has 1,051 Negro teachers and 50,895 white teachers. New Jersey has only 759 Negro teachers and 34,118 white teachers.

Has there been discrimination in the North? Plainly congressional committees—now that Federal power over education is involved—would have authority to summon witnesses and take testimony and find out what has been happening in the process of selecting or banning Negro teachers.

The South and the border States, which have 76,390 Negro teachers, are employing seven Negroes to every one on the teaching rolls of all the 31 so-called non-segregated Northern States put together.

If the South goes in for integration and many Negro teachers lose their jobs, as seems inevitable, will the Northern States accept them and put more and more Negro teachers in classrooms where white children predominate? That's the new question, and it will furnish the acid test of sincerity in the North, which has always assumed that the South was the only section where discrimination was taking place in the field of education.

'Had To Give Up'

"We had a branch president, a merchant, who had to give up. A group of white men drove up to his store and told him to get in the car. He did and they took him to his bank and there were the banker, his wholesaler and other people who gave him credit. They told him they would give him no more . . . he had to give up, go bankrupt or get out."

The dentist also told of a Negro doctor whose patients were advised not to go to him anymore. The doctor was active in the NAACP.

Stringer, a graduate of Meharry Medical college at Hasnville, Tenn., said he had reports from one area that the public utility services of any Negro leader who became even one day in arrears on his bills were cut off abruptly.

"As for me," Stringer said, "I can't get credit anywhere in Mississippi, and I'm just getting started too."

'Clarifying Statement'

After existence of the semisecret councils first was reported by The Associated Press in late summer, the Mississippi assembly representative from Sunflower county, Mrs. Wilma B. Sledge, issued what she called a "clarifying statement" about the organization.

She announced that the councils "are a widespread group composed of reliable white male citizens who believe that segregation is not discrimination and are organized for the sole purpose of maintaining segregation."

She added: "They do not and will not advocate violence in any form."

Legal Means

While the councils propose to fight the court's decision by legal means, there are undercurrents which suggest violence would be tolerated if necessary to "keep the Negro in his place."

The movement is backed by some of the state's leading citizens — bankers, politicians, druggists, lawyers, planters, merchants and newspapermen.

At a meeting Oct. 12 at Winona a state organization of the councils was set up with Robert B. Patterson, a Holly Ridge planter and former college football star, as executive secretary.

Patterson is the only official whose name has been made public. He plans to establish a permanent office in Winona this month.

Ostensibly membership in the councils is not secret and apparently is well known in various local communities.

A stranger, however, who makes inquiries as to membership, even though a Southerner himself, is met with open hostility, suspicion or a plea of ignorance.

First in Sunflower

The first Citizens Council was organized in Sunflower county's seat, the town of Indianola.

A reliable source there said it began with a meeting of five or six men in a private home. Among those present were Patterson and Herman Moore, head of the Indianola bank.

The plan for the councils reportedly was drawn from the book, "Black Monday" by Circuit Judge Tom P. Brady of Brookhaven, in which the theory of economic pressures is advanced. Black Monday is the designation give by some to May 17, the day the Supreme Court decision was announced.

Moore subsequently became chairman of the Indianola council. The minutes of the first meeting were duplicated and distributed throughout the state to a carefully selected mailing list.

According to the minutes, Arthur J. Clark Jr., an attorney, explained:

'Economic Pressures'

"It is the thought of our group that the solution to this problem may become easier if various agitators and the like could be removed from the communities in which they now operate. We propose to accomplish this through the careful application of economic pressures."

The remarks also were tape recorded and distributed to an even more carefully selected group.

With the original account of the Indianola meeting went a statement urging members to read certain publications. The bulk of them, while anti-Negro, are also anti-semitic.

The statement noted that "some of these groups are anti-semitic; however, all religious groups including the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish have been pushing the anti-segregation issue and it is time for all of us to speak out for segregation of the races regardless of race or creed."

In another mailing from Indianola Oct. 15, the point was made:

"Unless we organize, the Negro leaders will continue to exert pressure until violence breaks out and then, regardless of how you feel, you will be drawn into the conflict for the issue will be black against white."

Moore refused an interview at Indianola.

Reluctant at First

Patterson was interviewed at the St. Rest Plantation of the Holly Ridge Planting Co. A big man with red hair and pale blue eyes, he was all-Southeast end in 1942 at Mississippi State.

At first hostile and reluctant to say anything, he finally replied to some questions.

"As long as there is no integration," he said, "there will be no trouble. We sincerely mean every word. We have the interest of the Negro at heart as much as our own. A lot of people will never understand that. We don't expect them to understand.

"I am living here on a plantation with 35 Negro families. We never have any trouble and we are getting along fine."

Patterson said that when the Negroes were sick they came to him for free medical attention, or when they got in trouble or just needed help generally."

Firmly Committed

The 35 Negro families are mostly cotton pickers living in shacks without plumbing or running water. They begin work in the fields before they are 7 and seldom get beyond second or third grade in school.

"Communists," said Patterson, "are trying to make us integrate, weaken us and destroy us."

Mississippi state officials are firmly committed to fight integration of the state's schools. The Legislature has approved a proposed constitutional amendment permitting abolition of the public school system. This would pave the way for the state to turn over schools to "private" operators who could continue segregation. The proposition will be voted on in a special election Dec. 21.

Attorney General J. P. Coleman has asked every white member of the State Bar Association to accept appointment as a special assistant to defend school officials in segregation suits. In an interview, he said he had received over 1200 favorable replies from "all but two or three of the practicing active members."

When asked whether operation of the citizens councils might violate the conspiracy sections of the civil rights section of federal law, Coleman replied:

"Frankly, I don't know. They'd have to be indicted by a Mississippi grand jury and tried before a Mississippi petit jury, and it would not take long to see that justice was done."

600 Names on List

The other large and apparently well organized private group fighting segragation, the American States Right Assn., was incorporated in Alabama last February.

There were 600 names on the list of incorporators, including a substantial number of prominent and wealthy people. The ASRA twice has taken quarter page ads in all the state's daily and 40 of the weekly newspapers. It puts on broadcasts twice a day, five days a week over radio station WILD in Birmingham.

The two leading figures in the formation of ASRA have been Olin H. Horton, personnel manager for the Employers Insurance Co., of Birmingham, and his boss, William H. Hoover, board chairman and president. Asked how the ASRA planned to combat school integration, Hoover answered, "what we are going to have to do is abolish the public schools and set them up as private and take a hundred years to pay for them."

Get Together

Hoover also observed, "it may be that a hundred million white people will have to get together and send 15 million Negroes back to Africa."

Horton, SSRA president, said: "We want to protect our schools against subversive teachings. The Girl Scouts published a handbook with a lot of stuff on the United Nations that we didn't approve of. We got information to the local Girl Scouts, and they adopted a resolution condemning the national council."

He said his association had worked successfully to have one schoolteacher fired for "subversive teachings" (chiefly U.N.) and expected to have another dismissed shortly.

"We found a book in a school library," he said "that we thought was subversive and had to have that removed."

Membership in the ASRA is $25 for a regular, voting membership and $1 for an associate, non-voting membership.

Most publicized of the anti-integration organizations is the National Assn. for the Advancement of White People headed by Bryant W. Bowles of Arlington, Va.

Bowles founded the NAAWP in Washington last summer after incorporating in Delaware.

A marine reservist, Bowles says the group he heads is opposed to integration and will fight it out by any legal means.

Bowles appeared on the fringes of the school strikes in Milford, Baltimore and Washington, though he never was connected directly with instigation of the disorder. Mostly he sought paying recruits for his movement and lent verbal support to the pro-segregation forces.

Bowles was arrested in Washington Oct. 27 on charges of assault brought by a Negro postman. He also has been charged with issuing a worthless check against the NAAWP account and two charges of conspiracy to violate the school laws of Delaware.

Scattered through the South, mostly in Georgia and Florida, are other organizations. Among them are the "white brotherhood" in Florida, headed by Bill Hendrix of Tallahassee, former self-styled Grand Dragon of the Southern Knights of the Klu Klux Klan; the "National Association for the Advancement and Protection of the Majority of the White People" at Griffin, Ga., among whose leaders is Dr. Marvin Head, former Kleagle of the Klan unit at Griffin; the "National Association for the Preservation of the White Race" at Augusta, Ga., whose president was a former Klan member; "Florida States Rights, Inc.," chartered in Dade county (Miami); "The Southerners," at Mobile, Ala., and perhaps half a dozen others.

No Indication of Strength

There is no indication of the strength of these organizations save that none which has announced mass meetings has been able to attract over a few hundred people.

No one can predict with certainty whether they will grow stronger or find their momentum slipping away in the months ahead. But if there is violence in the South over attempts at integration, it is likely these groups will find themselves involved.

Stringer, the Mississippi NAACP head, does not believe there will be violence in his state. Dr. A. H. McCoy, a Jackson Negro dentist also active in the NAACP, has a different opinion. Asked what would happen if integration came about, he said:

"In Jackson where there is more intelligence and education, I don't think there will be much trouble but in the rurals where all they've heard is Bilbo-type talk and where they can barely read and write—many whites, too, I mean—there may be trouble.

"When they integrate they might as well have federal agents around — the local law enforcement officers won't protect the Negro. There is danger these citizens councils may whip up sentiment among the less desirable elements.

"If there is violence," he continued, "the white people are going to shed blood, too. You know a man sometimes will let you push him around, but you start monkeying with his children and he forgets about the hereafter."

Segregation Is Political, Not Religious

Editor, The Advertiser:

The announcement of the Methodist bishops meeting in Chicago of their support of the Supreme Court's decision abolishing segregation in the public schools is a surprising declaration. Their statement that "the Methodist Church will lead the fight to put the ruling into effect" is a shocking assumption.

Bishops in the Methodist Church are elected to serve the church. They have no authority to commit the church in matters of policy or of doctrine. Methodists recognize no ecclesiastical hierarchy. The legislative power of the church is vested in the General Conference. Bishops and other ministers and the lay members of the church are subject to its directives.

In the law book of the Methodist Church (The Discipline) there is a restrictive rule that applies (paragraph 512): "No person, no paper, no organization has the authority to speak officially for the Methodist Church ,except only the General Conference under the constitution."

The effort to have "the Methodist Church lead the fight to put the ruling into effect" will meet with determined opposition by Methodist people everywhere. They recognize the issue as basically political, and they know that for the church to become involved officially is to invite discord within the church and injury to the whole church program.

There are approximately 80 bishops in the Methodist Church. Less than half this number — 36 to be exact — are assigned to effective service in the United States. Others are stationed in distant lands beyond the seas—some of these natives of India, China, the Philippines, South America, and European countries. Some of the bishops are on the retired roll. Obviously there are those among the bishops of the Methodist Church who have not the slightest understanding of our racial problems here in America.

The press report from Chicago (dated Nov. 21) does not disclose the identity of the 50 bishops who supported the anti-segregation resolution. We assume that some of the Southern bishops dissented. We are acquainted with the ultra-liberal views of Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam and some of his colleagues. But their pronouncement on matters of race and social reforms have been challenged by many prominent Methodists throughout America.

The statement of the 50 Methodist bishops is being read with regret by millions of Methodists and other churchmen who deplore the intrusion of a tense political issue into the service and worship of a great body of Christians.

Desegregation: Many-Sided Issue

The first session of this year's Herald Tribune Forum, held Monday evening, opened up the problem of desegregation in the nation's schools in all its challenge and diversity. Last May 17 the Supreme Court announced that henceforth in the nation's law the doctrine of "separate and equal" has no place. How did the country respond? What is being done to translate basic law into the living practice of the community? These questions were answered by a variety of speakers, stressing the human side of the task, as well as the economic, legal and sociological aspects.

When much else will have become blurred, there will undoubtedly remain in the minds of those who attended the image of the two young girls, their names and home towns not revealed, who had wanted to play the flutes together in their high school orchestra but had found themselves under the ban of their color-conscious elders. The image will remain of the Negro school teacher whose common sense and inspired example helped make possible integration in one Delaware high school even before the Supreme Court had spoken. These were dramatic and human touches in the evening's program; but no one will underestimate the solid contribution of facts and comprehension made by other speakers.

The changing economy of the South, which forms the context within which all other problems must be solved; the institutions, such as labor unions and the church, which provide channels of understanding among people; the educational press which gives objective information and the survey which reveals a community to itself—these were described and documented. The texts to be printed in tomorrow's issue of this newspaper, will provide a lasting addition to the literature on this subject.

The record to date, needless to say, is mixed. There are places and examples that stand as bright threads in the pattern of American development. There are some others of a different and more somber hue. There is a Claymont and also (less happily) a Milford. Yet the advance already made is notable, and the next steps, as Mr. Thurgood Marshall indicated in his closing address, cannot but be forward—not alone in the field of education but wherever the practice of segregation remains. The advance of desegregation can already be seen as proof that democracy fosters those qualities of mind and heart which make the fulfillment of democracy a predestined fact.

Education and Dr. Pusey

One of the issues raised by Dr. Nathan M. Pusey, president of Harvard University, in his address before the Public Education Association on Wednesday, is central to the future of teaching in the United States. It is, briefly, whether the training of a teacher should emphasize a fruitful knowledge of the subject he intends to teach or mastery of the method he will use in teaching it.

At the present time, throughout the United States, there are crippling restrictions governing the certification of teachers in elementary and secondary public schools. Graduates of liberal arts colleges, men and women of imagination and learning, are often barred from public teaching by lack of credits in the field of education. Their preparation has developed their intellectual interests, increased their store of knowledge, broadened their horizons. Dr. Pusey thinks, with good reason, that an effort might now be made to remove restrictions which deprive public schools of the services of such desirable candidates.

Skill in teaching, as every one knows, can spring from a variety of experiences quite beyond the circumscribed world of technical courses. To be a human being is, as Dr. Pusey observes, constantly to be suffering and inflicting education. Most successful teachers have sat at the feet of other teachers and developed, perhaps unconsciously, teaching methods suited to their own needs and abilities. The high standards of teaching attained in schools and colleges where no technical credits are required show what learning and imagination can accomplish and technique can not.

Teachers should be encouraged, Dr. Pusey believes, "in all their experience to grow as persons rather than to become educational technicians." With that attractive and sen-

How to End Segregation

When the Supreme Court on May 17 stated the principle that racial segregation has no place in a democracy's public schools it also recognized the practical difficulties of applying the principle. As Chief Justice Warren said, "The formulation of decrees in these cases presents problems of considerable complexity." And for this reason the court chose to postpone its decision on when and how to effect integration.

Now, in general, two alternatives are posed—to insist on instant and complete application or to allow adjustment to come a little more gradually according to local conditions. It seems clear enough that the court does not wish to be peremptory. The delay on implementation, with the states being asked to submit their ideas, makes that plain. The court appreciates, as President Eisenhower was saying the other day, that there are deep emotional strains and practical problems. Yet it must be firm as well and compel acceptance in letter and spirit of the law of the land.

With a little time all questions tend to resolve themselves. The Eisenhower administration, in the brief filed by the Department of Justice, has urged a course of action that is both temperate and effective. It states what is obvious—that segregation is unconstitutional and must be ended "as quickly as feasible." Every thinking citizen knows this; even the occasional belligerents must appreciate that racial discrimination cannot endure.

What the Department of Justice proposes is that the localities be allowed to work out the details, but they must give very definite evidence of progress. The district courts would call on school officials to submit "a satisfactory plan" within ninety days, with the judges deciding whether the local program was really "satisfactory" and exercising continual review on earnestness about wiping out segregation. The Supreme Court would retain jurisdiction and make sure that compliance was being given.

The virtue of this plan is that it fits many local conditions. It offers understanding and good will; it leaves enforcement to the people themselves but insists that there must be enforcement. The objective is to get compliance from the ground up. What the Eisenhower administration proposes is in no sense a compromise with law or principle. It is a practical application of common sense which allows each community to develop an acceptable solution. This is hand-in-hand co-operation that inspires.

The Segregation Violence Shows That Hard Edict Will Play Into Hands Of Rabble Rousers

BY DOROTHY THOMPSON

THE OPENING of the school year has raised very serious problems for local school boards, teachers, parents and students in those parts of the nation affected by the Supreme Court's decision reversing previous rulings that equal educational facilities must be provided for white and colored students in public schools, and declaring segregation to be unconstitutional.

In Milford and Hampden, Del., and in Baltimore, Md., fights have reached violent proportions. In Baltimore, a mob demonstrated against Negro students before a high school. The principal told the Negroes that if their parents wished them to go home they would be excused, and 10 of the 14 who attended—out of 36 who were eligible—took advantage of the offer. The rest had to be escorted from school by police, among the insults of demonstrators, and the four who remained were beset as they left, one Negro boy being punched in the face.

Milford, it is reported, has returned to "normal" after similar troubles, which had reduced school attendance to 30 per cent. "Normal" means 83.9 per cent of attendance instead of the usual 95 per cent, restored only when the Negro students who had been the cause of the boycott stayed home.

The Florida attorney general has petitioned the Supreme Court to permit a gradual readjustment from segregated to unsegregated schools and to recognize that the 50-year-old system of "separate but equal schools" involves the state's entire administrative system, the simple repeal of which would create a vacuum. He reported that a survey of public opinion by an interracial commission has shown three-fourths of Florida's whites for segregation, a large majority of colored for the new ruling, but a majority of both against immediate and complete desegregation, both white and colored leaders apprehending violence beyond the capacity of peace officers to handle.

'No Court Can Legislate Brotherly Love,' She Says

THIS COLUMNIST THOUGHT the Supreme Court decision but another example of the folly of idealistic zeal overreaching its aim. The aim of every measure affecting the relationship between the races in America must, with the welfare of each in mind, be to alleviate the tensions between them and to promote equal justice in peace. But long-ingrained traditions and prejudices cannot be wiped out by judicial decrees. No court can legislate brotherly love. And any attempt to enforce interracial associations more intimate than a majority of any community desires will not alleviate but exacerbate racial tensions, the sufferers will be the Negroes, and years of steady progress in Negro advancement can be undone.

What 2,000 years of Christian teachings have been unable to overcome and what the saintly examples of Gandhi was unable to accomplish in India cannot be brought about by judicial ruling. Great problems can never be so solved, in any case.

Those With Some Sense Should Be Heeded

THE "RABBLE ROUSER," screaming white supremacy, and the lynchers taking the law into their own hands have been yielding influence steadily in the South, even over those whom "enlightened" Northerners (of course, with "prejudices") often call contemptuously "poor white trash."

The Bilbos are yielding to nobler and more responsible leadership. It is precisely these who are in despair lest by making haste in this matter the rabble rouser is given a new platform. Nothing is more likely to furnish him a rostrum for arousing emotionalism than enforced associations. Already a dubious character, Bryant W. Bowles, has formed "the National Association for the Advancement of White People," which spearheaded the demonstrations in Delaware.

We hope that the Supreme Court, and every American citizen with sense in his head and charity and compassion in his heart, especially for the Negroes, will counsel moderation and gradualism, overriding the hasty and all too often self-righteous, who want "to bring the law" against all who disagree with them, no matter what the consequences.

Gov. Persons Balks On Special Session

By Bob Ingram
Capitol Reporter, Advertiser

THE MEN who are generally well informed on such matters are giving attractive odds that Gov. Gordon Persons will not summon the current Legislature into special session to study the segregation question.

INGRAM

The betting odds on this matter have remained fairly constant, even in the light of mounting pressure which has become evident during the past few days.

The governor, acting like an ostrich, has buried his head in the sand and kept it there as long as the subject was segregation. And there are many who are convinced that Persons is acting like a sensible ostrich.

The sudden increase in demands for an extraordinary session became noticeable early this past week. It was reliably reported Monday that Rep. Wallace Malone, the Dothan banker, had a petition containing the names of more than half the Legislature asking that a special session be called.

The Mysterious Petition

TUESDAY the governor's executive secretary, Vernon Merritt Jr., was quoted as saying he, too, understood a petition had been circulated but said it had not been received by the governor. Merritt also added that Persons had no comment to make on the matter.

Later in the same day Rep. Malone and Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County conferred at length with the governor. Following the conference Englehardt said the three officials had discussed "every aspect of the segregation question."

However, at the same time, Malone became very evasive and denied that he had circulated a petition, although he did admit he was conducting a poll of the legislators to determine their feelings on the matter.

On the following day Rep. Engelhardt, the merchant-farmer-ginner who is a nominee to the state Senate, elaborated on his associate's story by saying that when the poll was completed it would show an "overwhelming majority" of the members favored a special session.

A Present For Folsom

ONE MEMBER of the Legislature, who asked he not be quoted, said he was told by one of the poll-takers that of the first 75 members contacted, all but two favored the special call. If that trend continued through the remaining 66 members, the poll would be a mandate even Persons might find difficult to ignore.

Persons has been extremely reticent to make even the slightest comment on segregation. His theory is that the less noise Alabama makes, the less attention it will attract from the U. S. Supreme Court.

He has also pointed out that the Supreme Court has yet to hand down a final decree on the historic May 17 decision; furthermore, the name of the state of Alabama is not mentioned in that decision.

Persons might also have a selfish motive for his policy of

Bigoted Groups Rise from Ashes Of Segregation

(First of a series)

By BERT COLLIER
Herald Staff Writer

Sun. 10-10-54

Out of the struggle arising from the end of school segregation, a rash of new groups have been born, pledged to circumvent the Supreme court decision.

A check of their origins reveals that most—though not all—have roots deep in the old Ku Klux Klan, the discredited outfit listed as subversive by the attorney general, which was dedicated to maintain White supremacy.

Miami

Two of these new organizations have particular interest to Florida.

One is native to Miami—Florida States Rights, Inc., which was chartered by the Dade Circuit court on July 9 to, among other things, "fight to maintain the institution of segregation in Florida."

Another—the National Association for the Advancement of White People—though based in Washington is headed by a Tampan, and used Florida speakers so effectively it is credited with creating the recent disorders in Delaware.

Terms Tampa Group as 'A Klan Outfit'

W. RAIDEY HAMILTON, president of Florida States Rights, Inc., says his group has complete independence. He terms a Tampa group which is active throughout Florida, with the comment:

"That's a Klan outfit."

"We believe this (segregation question) can be settled peacefully," Hamilton told The Herald.

"Violence is all wrong. Such things as are happening in Delaware will not get anywhere."

"We believe passive resistance would have been better. Your objective is to try to circumvent desegregation through state legislation."

Hamilton's public statement is in contrast with tub-thumping speeches at the group's weekly meetings, attacking "Negroes" and blaming Communists for the movement to integrate segregated schools.

Klansman Serves as Vice President

At one recent meeting, Oscar Norman, one of the group's organizers, a federal government employe, declared:

"Crosses have recently been burned in Tallahassee, Tampa and other places. It is a warning to Negroes to stay within their limits."

Florida States Rights, Inc., has as its vice president Roy Talmadge Luttrell, 531 E. 57th st., Hialeah, former secretary of the John B. Gordon KKK klavern in Hialeah. Luttrell was one of the witnesses questioned by the federal grand jury investigating the bombings at Carver Village, a Negro housing project.

Of Luttrell's leadership in an outfit which disavows Klan connections, Hamilton explained that when groups fighting segregation decided to incorporate, a committee of 20 met to discuss procedures. Among them was Luttrell.

"He had been a very good, effective worker on the committee," Hamilton said. "He told us he had been a member of the Klan and that he had received publicity in connection with his federal grand jury appearance.

"But he said he had never been indicted, and had told the grand jury everything they wanted to know.

"He said he was making these disclosures so that the facts would not coome out later and embarrass the organization.

"Luttrell laid all his cards on the table. The committee members held a confab and decided they admired his spunk and elected him to office."

Rights, Inc., is Milton Piedra, 545 SW First st. At meetings of the group he is identified as regional vice president of the National Association for the Advancement and Protection of the Majority of the White People.

Piedra has since resigned from Florida States Rights, Hamilton said.

Herald 10-10-54

NAAPMWP—not to be confused with NAAWP—was born in Griffin, Ga., on June 11. On that day, the Griffin News, outspoken daily newspaper, announced the new group:

"Whose sole objective is to assist, work for the welfare, advancement and protection of the majority of the White people, and to oppose all legal action brought to destroy the traditions of the Southern White people . . . and to destroy segregation laws between the White race and the Colored race."

Miami

Organizers were R. L. Addleton, Griffin attorney and former assistant attorney general of Georgia, William D. Derickson, Griffin photographer; Dr. Marvin Head, Zebulon physician, and Rebecca N. Boyd.

Investigation showed that Dr. Head, former boss of the Pike County, Ga., Klan, had helped Addleton organize the Klan in Griffin.

Derickson was a newcomer from Miami who, the investigators reported, spent most of his time selling memberships in the NAAPMWP at $7.50.

Rebecca Boyd is a nurse in Dr. Head's clinic.

'Spawning Ground for Mongoloid Idiot'

ON THE BASIS of these facts, The Griffin News' fighting editor, Quimby Melton, Jr., said the following day:

"We noted with interest but without pleasure that Griffin has been selected as the spawning ground for a mongoloid idiot (organization) with a jawbreaking name.

"We don't know whether they will wear bed sheets or night shirts. But if the suckers do happen to find their way into its ranks, we suggest they choose dunce caps as their natural uniforms."

Though Piedra provides a link between the Miami group and the Griffin group, Hamilton maintains there is absolutely no tie.

The Florida State's Rights organization currently is branching out, establishing chapters in the Melbourne area, talking to people in Cocoa, West Palm Beach and elsewhere.

"This is a strict legislative deal, working toward constitutional revision," said Hamilton. "We have no connection with any group."

In addition to Hamilton, a furniture store manager, of 299 NW 36th st.; Luttrell and Piedra, organizers of Florida States Rights, Inc., as shown by the application for charter, include:

Mrs. Roberta Mayo, 2295 NW 93rd ter., treasurer; Ruth V. Armstrong, 660 SW 63rd ct., secretary; R. Duane Stafford, 1767 NW 93rd st.; William F. Hull, 9100 NW 23rd st.; F. W. McColm, 9203 NW 22nd ave.; J. F. Seddons, Sr., 6048 SW 19th ave.; Claud J. Armstrong, 600 SW 63rd ct.; H. A. Keller, Jr., 2481 NW 139th st.; Rollo Karkeet, 3530 NW 17th ave., O. N. Norman, 3945 NW Fourth ter., and Irene G. Hamilton, 299 NW 36th st.

TOMORROW: Origins and operations of NAAWP.

This Morning

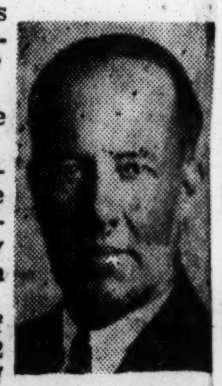
BY JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

"'Good morning, madam!'
To Eve said Adam. . . ."

Something about Georgia is special always to Alabama, and so be it today.

Perhaps its throwback to days when Alabama was created out of a rib of the original Georgia, just like Eve from Adam.

That would explain both our yen for Georgia's company and our determination this afternoon to keep Georgia on the run.



It's the old Devil Eve in us.

"Stay out of those circles — avoid the large levers!" You are absolutely not bound by any so-called "pledge" on your primary ballot.

The Supreme Court of Alabama so ruled in 1952 in Ray vs. Garner, 257 Alabama Reports, page 168. The politicians who are trying to frighten you know it. The court ruled that such a pledge is unenforceable; "merely a moral obligation, binding no longer than it could be conscientiously performed."

If you vote for Mr. Folsom, therefore, just because he is the Democratic nominee, while your conscience tells you he is bad for Alabama, you can't say you had to do it. The highest authority says you don't.

Abernethy now or Folsom forever?

* * *

The first time Mr. Folsom evaded the desegregation issue by vowing he wouldn't "force the Negroes to go to school with the white people"—it was pretty cute. But as he falls back on that dodge again and again now, it isn't funny any more but tragic. It's tragic that a man expecting to be governor of Alabama be playing shallow and flippant politics with Alabama's misery.

His hems and haws begin to pay off, however.

In Birmingham the Abraham Lincoln Republican Club of more than 2000 Negroes has withdrawn support from Tom Abernethy and presumably will vote for Mr. Folsom, persuaded that the latter's evasiveness amounts to a wink in their direction, as, undoubtedly, it does.

* * *

But if the Abraham Lincoln Club only knew, Tom Abernethy is more liberal on the Negro than Lincoln was.

In debate with Douglas at Charleston, Ill., September 18, 1858, Lincoln said he was "not and never have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of white and black races . . . nor of qualifying them to hold office nor to intermarry with white people."

He freed the slaves all right, but that was a war measure.

Tom Abernethy disagrees with Old Abe. He's for equality under the law, even if he is with him against integration.

Tom knows and likes Negroes a lot better than Abraham Lincoln did.

Listening to Fulton Lewis Thursday night here and knowing how far his words go, I could believe he might single-handedly cap the now turned national tide with victory for Ike Tuesday if he would forget his picayunish absorption in sins of Tom Dewey, Sherman Adams, Clifford Case and non-worshippers of McCarthy and speak out for Eisenhower in terms of the great thing that overshadows all others — that under Iike we have stopped without falling.

War is stopped (not abolished, but halted); socialism is stopped (not abolished but held); inflation is stopped—and America, nevertheless, hasn't fallen on its face as Stalin predicted and Truman predicted.

Yet Fulton fiddles around nightly with local situations, old grudges, the dying McCarthy issue, and complaint that Ike isn't far right enough when the single issue is whether we are about to be turned far left again in failure to support Ike.

* * *

"David put his hand in his bag and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in the forehead; and he fell down upon his face to the earth."

That's what the Bible says.

The Biblical Goliath was six cubits and a span tall. The Alabama one is a mere four cubits and a span.

Options on Desegregation

Thoughful appreciation of individual attitudes in Virginia will show that there is no one pat formula for desegregation of the public schools. In Arlington, Alexandria and Fairfax County, where Negroes constitute 10 percent or less of the total population, the process should be relatively easy—certainly no more difficult than in the District of Columbia. In southern Virginia, where the percentage of Negroes is much higher and the tradition of segregation far more ingrained, the adjustment to the Supreme Court decision will take somewhat longer. What is imperative is that the Virginia Commission on Public Education, which will hold a public hearing on November 15, chart a forward-looking course and not become a mere device for stalling and evasion.

There have been indications of tendencies in the latter direction. Governor Stanley invited criticism by appointing an all-white commission of selected legislators. In the wake of the historic May 17 decision the Governor called for calmness and promised to work toward "a plan which will be acceptable to our citizens and in keeping with the edict of the court." But on June 25 Governor Stanley called for reexamination of the constitutional provision requiring free public schools, and added that "I shall use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools in Virginia."

Meanwhile, local governing bodies have forwarded recommendations to the Governor's commission, many of them urging continued segregation. Many church groups, on the other hand, have urged compliance with the Supreme Court decision, and the Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers has called on its members "to build understanding through study and discussion of the problems relevant to the Supreme Court decision on integration." Study groups also have been set up by some counties and by local P-TAs. But a considerable amount of confusion remains. For example, the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors recently approved a resolution calling for continuation of the public school system and urging local option to meet the Supreme Court order. But a few days later the Fairfax representatives in the League of Virginia Counties felt compelled to join in a unanimous recommendation against integration in an effort to stave off a resolution for abolition of the public school system.

It is of course absurd to talk of abolishing the public schools. Such action would be a clear violation of the spirit of the Supreme Court decision; and it would be a repudiation of the Virginia libertarian tradition. It is unthinkable that a majority of Virginians, if they understood the full implications of such progress-in-reverse for their already laggard educational facilities, would condone such a benighted move.

What the public has a right to expect, rather, is that the Governor's commission will look practically at the problem before it. Integration of the schools is coming, and Virginia either can prepare for it sanely or resist it futilely like King Canute. The simplest way, of course, would be for the commission to give heed to the differing conditions and advocate local option now denied by the Virginia constitution. Let areas which can make the adjustment quickly go ahead; let others which require a longer period work out a timetable to meet the expected court orders. Meanwhile, let there be the greatest encouragement to interracial groups, churches, P-TAs and other groups to help ready communities for the change. Leadership, not self-pity, is the need in Richmond.

Integration and School Enrollment

Elsewhere in today's Star a news story, supported by tables, discusses the drop in white enrollment in the public schools coincident with the abandonment of segregation. The Star does not attempt any interpretation of its own, beyond pointing to the obvious fact that the sharp drop of 8.1 per cent in the white enrollment, largest decline in the known history of the school system, has been recorded simultaneously with integration, and that a study of individual schools indicates a pattern wherein the largest drops in white enrollment are in the schools which show the greatest percentage of colored pupils. Whether or not this is a temporary condition, reflecting the immediate impact of integration, or whether the decrease in white enrollment will continue, is not known. But the effect is an important part of any study of integration in the public school system, and that effect should be presented candidly and periodically by surveys conducted by the public school statisticians. Any disposition on the part of school administrators to avoid the compilation and publication of such statistics should receive the most careful examination of the school board. A segregated school system in Washington is a thing of the past. But the people of this community have a legitimate right to know all the facts, as they become available, relating to the results of integration.

A SOUTHERN RECONNAISSANCE

In the Southern States, where the Negro population of the nation is still concentrated, there have been various approaches to the problems raised by the Supreme Court's decision holding segregation in the public schools unconstitutional. Reargument on several points raised by the court in connection with the formulation of its decrees will be heard on Dec. 6. In view of "the great variety of local conditions" and "problems of considerable complexity" (in its own language) the court looked toward the states for assistance in choosing a method for the legal and sociological implementation of its opinion. Noncooperation has been the answer in some states and open hostility in others.

North Carolina has been one of the Southern pacemakers in studying the implications of the Supreme Court's opinion. An able, nonpolitical commission composed of state leaders in education, in business and the social sciences, and in the professions, was named by Governor Umstead to study the public school system of the state in the light of the court's opinion. The Institute of Government of the University of North Carolina has made a report to the Governor dealing with the interracial life of the state which, historically and statistically and for its educational value, is almost without parallel in this field of research.

Reconnaissance in the South is being furthered by Southern School News, which is published by the Southern Education Reporting Service. This venture in Southern journalism, aided by the Ford Foundation, and published under the auspices of a group of Southern editors headed by Virginius Dabney of Richmond, is objectively factual and expresses no opinions of its own. Where the consequences of the Supreme Court's opinion are most complex, facts are a first requirement for the processes that in time will lead to simplification. The South is searching, and some of the region's most skilled hands now are taking the helm.

Georgia Segregation Plan Still in Doubt

Herald Miami Fla. pg 1 col. 11-3-54

ATLANTA —(UP)— A swing by big city voters put doubt Tuesday night on Georgia's decision on Gov. Herman Talmadge's plan to sidestep the Supreme Court segregation ruling with private instead of public schools. There was little prospect the outcome would be known before Wednesday.

Late returns showed the vote at 99,359 to 96,736 in favor of amending the Georgia constitution to permit the legislature to finance private instead of public schools with tuition grants to students. Reporting were 670 of Georgia's 1,903 precincts.

The big city vote, which defeated Talmadge's two earlier attempts to extend the county unit system to general elections, was swinging against the amendment as late returns were counted. Only Columbus was going for the amendment.

Alabama Flattens GOP Bid

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. —(INS) —Alabama Democrats apparently have knocked flat the strongest Republican bid for major offices since Reconstruction days.

Democratic nominee James E. Folsom took an early lead of 31,403 for governor over Republican candidate Tom Abernethy, who polled 13,487 votes in 344 of 2,558 boxes.

On the basis of the same count, Democratic Sen. John J. Sparkman was virtually assured of re-election by polling 27,695 votes to 5,372 for his Republican opponent, J. Foy Guin.

Rome Reader Disputes High Court Right To Nullify the Acts of Congress or States

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. P4

Rome—Miss Marguerite Biggs quotes Dr. Newton Edwards as saying "the Supreme Court of the United States exercises the right to review the economic and social legislation of the states and to determine whether the objects to be accomplished and the manner of their accomplishment are reasonably necessary to promote the public welfare."

Cul. 11-3-54

This is a true statement. The Supreme Court does exercise that right and it does so in violation of our federal Constitution. Our Constitution specifically states that "all legislative powers granted herein shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." Yet the Supreme Court constantly assumes the powers of a super-legislature.

Our Constitution does not grant the Supreme Court the power to nullify acts of Congress or the states. The court exercises that power without authority. Do the people really want government by judicial oligarchy, or by elected representatives as set up in our organic law?

Mrs. Blitch Advised To Find Boundary

Atlanta—In a local telecast Mrs. Iris Blitch, in discussing the problem of segregation, made the statement that "she was perfectly amazed to hear the state of Delaware referred to as a Southern state."

South Should Start New Legal Proceedings

To the Editor:

Instead of changing our segregation school laws in different states, why not start legal proceedings in the courts declaring there is nothing in the Constitution to force the white people of America to associate with the Negro and nothing against segregation? Carry it right back to the Supreme Court and fight it out again. All people make mistakes. The Supreme Court made a mistake and should correct it.

What happened when the barbarians of the north overran the ancient culture of Europe, the dark ages!

Some people want to bring religion into this issue. Divine power created the different races and created the natural laws by which they were brought about. Then there is far more logic in saying divine power doesn't want the races blended.

Folsom Is Right About The School Take-Out

THE ADVERTISER holds with Governor-nominate Folsom that a plan to abolish the public school system to outflank the U.S. Supreme Court segregation ruling is unfair.

The Supreme Court not only reads the election returns, as the folk saying goes, but it reads the morning newspapers between elections. This is to say that the court is well aware of the highly advertised South Carolina device and its limitations to evade the ruling by closing the public school system the alias of private school system.

The court this year will be sitting to hear arguments on how to enforce its decision. Certainly the court will take specific notice of this proposed evasion and its purpose.

Nevertheless, it should be pointed out that while the abolition blueprint is by nature radical, State Sen. Albert Boutwell and his committee colleagues have well approached the grievous problem and soberly spoke with cool reasonableness.

The principal aim of the plan is ... to provide discretionary power in the legislature to enable it to deal effectively with the changing needs and conditions . . .

It is not a proposal for immediate or revolutionary changes in our educational system.

It is not a plan to abolish public schools . . . It would permit public assistance to pupils without necessarily involving public operation of schools where that course is compelled by unacceptable pressures . . .

The Advertiser believes that it is no more possible to get this past the Supreme Court than it is to slip the sable robes of the justices from their backs without their knowledge.

In this view, both Gov. Persons and Gov. Folsom concur.

Gov. Persons Was Right

LEGISLATOR Wallace Malone, the Dothan banker, was impetuous in his excited demand that Gov. Persons summon, immediately if not sooner, a special session of the legislature to provide for the abolition of the Alabama school system. Gov. Persons was right in his cool refusal to do so.

Malone and his like-minded associates in the legislature have failed to demonstrate the need of immediate action. Moreover, neither the legislature nor the people of Alabama have had time to consider the radical remedy of liquidating the school system.

Alabama was not directly embroiled in the Supreme Court suits. For the time being, Alabama enjoys status as an innocent bystander to the ruling affecting Virginia, South Carolina and the others.

The court studiedly provided a delay in application of its ruling. It will be some months before the court hands down specific details of how the segregation ruling shall be applied.

There is, then, every reason to suppose that Alabama's present segregation system will not be altered in any degree in this school year.

OTHER states, such as Mississippi, are far advanced in accomplishing legislation that will call the public school system a private school system to evade the court ruling.

The eight sociologists of the Supreme Court read the morning paper and know all about these school abolition plans. The Advertiser does not expect that the court is going to allow its ruling to be evaded with so crude a device. It will undoubtedly take specific notice of such schemes in its decree. That will tell Alabama whether such a scheme will be tolerated by the court.

WHILE agreeing with Gov. Persons' refusal to summon a twilight session, The Advertiser was not greatly impressed with his stated reasons.

The Governor aptly observes that any such session would be a lame duck session since the terms of legislators expire in November, rather than in January along with other elected officials. In three weeks the present legislative terms will have expired, and three weeks is scarcely sufficient to act on a piece of revolutionary legislation.

But for that matter, the Governor could wait until Nov. 2 and summon the new Folsom Legislature. There is no legal bar to that course.

AND there you probably have a lead on the Governor's deeper calculations. By waiting a short time, he can bequeath the duty and honor of solution to this most prickly issue to his old buddy, Big J.

There being no emergency need for a session, The Advertiser sees no reason why Persons shouldn't do this.

School Integration

States File Briefs Urging Gradual Change, But Negro Group Demands Quicker Action

Last Monday—November 15—was the deadline for filing of briefs in the Supreme Court school integration cases which will be argued December 6. Seven States and the District of Columbia got in under the wire, as did the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

As might have been expected, the position of the States was that gradualism of one sort or another must be written into any workable decree. And equally predictable was the NAACP contention that segregated school systems have had more than enough time already in which to make the changeover.

As for the District, which desegregated its system at the opening of the current school year, Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West said the issue had become moot and that no decree is necessary. Full integration will be in effect by September 1, 1955, he said. NAACP spokesmen disagreed.

State Views

A tip off to arguments that will be advanced December 6 could be found in the State briefs. Significant excerpts:

Virginia: "Education now follows one pattern in the State; a plan for local variation must be devised. Time is needed for the preparation of such a plan; without such a plan, Virginia's schools may be closed."

North Carolina: "From all information available, an attempt to compel the intermixture of races in the public schools of North Carolina would result in such violent opposition as to endanger the continued existence of its schools."

South Carolina: "The courts cannot compel the enactment of legislation or adoption of administrative regulations; they cannot compel the levying of taxes or the making of appropriations. They may annul but they cannot create; they may prohibit but they cannot devise affirmative solutions and command their adoption."

Texas: "A [gradualized, localized] decree will meet with no more than passive resistance by the public."

Arkansas: ["Immediate segregation] would disrupt the financing, management and control of the school system for many years."

Maryland: "If left alone to devise in good faith a timetable for the desegregation of every school in Maryland, the local authorities will be best able to solve the problem with the fewest possible ill effects."

Delaware: "A significant percentage of the people in parts of Delaware are not ready to accept integration."

Submission of these briefs brings to 11 the number of States entered as principals or friends of the court.

Florida Mixup

In Florida meanwhile, a hint of the legal tangles that may arise from integration came in a State Supreme Court ruling that sharply criticized the May 17 decision. A taxpayer's suit had been filed questioning validity of a school bond issue in Manatee County (the Bradenton area of the Gulf Coast). A majority of the State Supreme Court held the bonds to be valid. Their opinion labeled the Federal decision "a great mistake," and predicted a slow changeover in these words:

"Any reasonable pattern for desegregation that may be imposed will require a long time, and the record discloses a pressing necessity for improved school facilities."

But Justice John E. Mathews pointed out the damned-if-you-do, damned-if-you-don't position school boards in the South may find themselves in. His minority opinion labeled the bonds invalid on the ground that (1) the Florida constitution forbids integration and (2) the United States Constitution, as interpreted last May, forbids segregation. Any way you look at it, he held, some basic law is being violated:

"Therefore, the purpose for which the money is to be expended is illegal. The purpose being illegal, it follows that the bonds are illegal."

The editors, Prof. Robin M. Williams, Jr. and Mrs. Margaret W. Ryan, both of Cornell University, noted that though the studies took in border states, they did not cover any part of the deep South. Indeed, they hardly could, because integration has not taken place in the deep South.

Two conclusions stand out. The editors foresee that as integration develops in the South "there will be some instances of personal conflict and name-calling, even instances of disturbances." But they find that "where desegregation has been tried, the typical outcome has been its eventual acceptance." They think that a generation hence this nation may look back with pride "on this period as a time of successful transition accomplished in a characteristically American way." These words do not seem unduly optimistic. They certainly express what most Americans must surely desire: namely, a sensible adjustment to a new educational situation.

We are an adaptable people. We have had to be. We have grown intellectually and emotionally as well as materially. Why doubt that we can take this new step in democracy?

WISE WORDS ON INTEGRATION

Field researchers for the Ford Foundation recently completed a study of "Schools in Transition," which was published on Friday in book form. The field work extended clear across the country from New Jersey to Arizona. It took in twenty-four communities including Camden, N. J., Cairo, Ill., Roswell, N. M., and Tucson, Ariz.

School Issue Flows Into a Main Stream

Courier Journal

THE great stir raised by the Supreme Court's decision against separating the races in public schools seems to come partly from an incomplete view of the issue. It does not stand by itself, a thing to be settled one way or another and thus to be removed from debate. In spite of emotions aroused in states where school segregation is the custom, that question ought to be seen as incidental to a broader movement.

Louisville Ky.

This thought comes with news that an examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission recommends an official order ending separate train accommodations for white and dark passengers. Can this sort of separation go on in some sections (though not in others) along with separation in schools, with any hope of stopping the broader movement? That movement is directed against discrimination as discrimination—not discrimination in special brackets like schools or trains.

Little more than ten years ago the movement took shape around pressures to keep Negroes from taking part in the complete voting process. The colored citizen's right to do so was hampered by the "white primary" system in approximately the same states which now blaze with equal resolution to keep their separate schools.

p. 6

The suffrage crisis came in 1944, as several states tried to give the primary election an unofficial or private status, as they now are trying to do for the public school. At that time the vote appeared to be the great and only point, just as the school appears now to be.

Thurs. 11-18-54

However, the latest news about the prospect of ending separate coaches or compartments on interstate passenger trains shows that neither the school nor the vote stands by itself. The movement, which is in the stream of history, cannot be broken up into parts, with a policy or a practice to fit one—say, the armed services, the church, the ballot box, the school—that doesn't fit others.

Alabama Can Afford To Make Haste Slowly

THE progress of events attending the court's school segregation is beclouded by the statements of President Eisenhower, Atty. Gen. Brownell and the contending lawyers.

Montgomery

But we are content with our original prophecy last May that there isn't going to be any "blood in the streets", nor is there going to be any widespread race mingling in Alabama's common schools soon.

p. 2 B

And second, The Advertiser rests easy in its counsel that the hotspurs who want the legislature to immediately convene and abolish the public school system to evade the court ruling should be ignored. It is now plainer than before that Alabama has time to make haste slowly.

Montgomery Ala.

LAST week President Eisenhower volunteered the surprising statement that he did not believe that the Supreme Court would be "arbitrary" in decreeing the steps by which segregation shall be abolished. Understanding the "emotional and practical problems" involved, the President predicted that the court would display a similar understanding and consequently act with restraint.

Mont. Adv. 11-28-54

At first this left the impression that the President had made a highly improper statement, that out of his social intimacy with some of the court justices he had learned the drift of the court's mind and had indiscreetly popped off. That would have been as improper as Chief Justice Taney's tipping Andrew Jackson how the court was going to rule on Dred Scott.

But the day after the President's statement, Atty. Gen. Brownell formally urged a court decree directing U.S. district courts to ride herd on the dismantling of segregation barriers in their respective localities. Presumably that is what prompted the President's prediction of restraint.

THERE is some disagreement among lawyers for Southern states and their adversaries on whether this procedure favors a slow or a swift process of desegregation.

Whatever the case, it appears that having gotten on the record with its principle, the court is content to see its ruling applied slowly.

It won't even rule this school year how its May decree is to be applied. For the time at least, moderation is the prospect.

WITHOUT federal troops, the court cannot compel this quarter of the nation to accept race mingling generally in the common schools at this point. And it cannot compel such mingling at all without grievous results.

Segregation as we see it today will not endure permanently. Obviously it is doomed. But neither will it fade away soon.

Shabby AP Reporting

A SHABBILY "slanted" Associated Press dispatch seeking by contrived implication to identify Southern opposition to "integration" in the public schools with the Ku Klux Klan, went forth from Jackson, Miss., Saturday, under the byline of Bem Price. It was carried in Sunday's Advertiser.

Adv. Montgomery Ala. 11-23-54

It referred to attempts in Mississippi to resist application of the Supreme Court decision, and added:

p. 4-A

And in the wake of last spring's Supreme Court decision declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional, new organizations have appeared elsewhere in Dixie to sound the call for 'preservation of our Southern heritage', the old rallying cry of the Ku Klux Klan.

An "editor's note" supplied by the AP further stated:

Montgomery Ala.

The South is now witnessing the birth of a new crop of anti-Negro groups unlike anything seen since the post-world War II revival of the Ku Klux Klan.

We hold no brief for the organizations referred to. One of them at least has been offensively blatant and demagogic—as much so as counterparts among radical champions of integration.

Nor do we approve the reported move in Mississippi to apply "economic pressure" to Negro advocates of integration—though if reports are correct, the boycott technique is not the white man's monopoly.

But, to attempt to drag the carcass of the Ku Klux Klan and identify it generally with opposition to integration is grotesque demagoguery and partisanship. There are literally millions of white Southerners who utterly abhor the Klan but are staunchly opposed to integration—certainly to any early, premature move in that direction. To label this opposition to integration as "anti-Negro" is at least as absurd as it would be to say that the NAACP or the U.S. Supreme Court is "anti-white."

This was poor reporting, debauching the "Byline of Dependability."

Which is to say, against the tide and for the tide.

Greetings to America's top Alabama Democrat, here from Mobile for the game! If Gessner McCorvey's state seems all Fair Deal these days, he may console himself with knowledge that it is an island completely surrounded by Southern Democrats.

* * *

Flash! Is the Supreme Court filibustering?

Is it looking for loopholes?

Hearings on desegregation, scheduled for next week, are postponed "until January, at least" (the AP puts it), pending Senate confirmation of Mr. Harlan. You can almost hear the judicial sigh of relief. Contemplating its handiwork, the Court may well wonder in dead-of-nights now about both the psychology and the law, perhaps even the biology, sociology and politics.

Others, certainly, have stopped to think.

Ike and his attorney general show concern.

Their proposal that lower courts supervise integration of schools, with no general deadline and each local situation in mind, reflects alarm at the resistance and realization of the enormity of what the Court has ordered.

* * *

What is proposed might force the issue, of course, not soothe it. States required through school officials to submit "a satisfactory plan" and make periodic progress reports under threat of immediate total desegregation wouldn't be able to let things slide and looked for loopholes as presently. They would have to have report cards. If they flunked something would have to be done.

* * *

Inured to danger, practiced in hairbreadth escape, the South has been drifting vaguely believing that somehow the thing would be avoided through obfuscation and delay.

Now the South may have to tell a lower court demanding a "satisfactory plan" that it has no satisfactory plan.

* * *

Even money offered by a daughter that "if Auburn receives on the kick-off the Tigers will go for a touchdown" sounded illiterate to me until I realized how big the odds are against Auburn running the other way.

Naturally Gov.-Elect Folsom wants the business group in his camp with the others, but his ambition is limited by—

(1) His understanding,
(2) His habits, and
(3) His other commitments.

His little understanding is plain in persistent advocacy of that ancient Texas insurance law for investment in the state of 75 per cent of reserves on policies here.

The figure is already 250 per cent and his law might well induce other states with less than 75 per cent to pass similar laws, necessitating withdrawal of funds from our popular credit market to fill the 75 per cent quota in less popular ones like New England.

His habits are illustrated in his naive proposal that hayriding political cronies with "top expense accounts" be sent over the country "persuading" industry to come here.

And his other commitments include the CIO, to which he has pledged repeal of the Right to Work Law.

The Bible says all men are brothers but it doesn't say they are identical twins.

The South's hope on the race question is enough political independence to make its vote as valuable as the NAACP's. By creating great gobs of Southern independence, Ike is striking blows for us whether he means them or not.

A Socialist is a Communist who doesn't know the facts of life. He thinks you can be pretty and sweet, democratic, peaceful and fair about it—but you can't. Not long.

Blessed are those who communicate, for they shall not go crazy!

Gently but beyond a doubt, Dr. R. W. G., of Columbia, S. C., finds I misquoted Lord Byron. What the flaming philanderer really said was—

"Fare thee well! and if forever,
Still forever, fare thee well!"

One thing about Byron's philandering was the flame. Nothing pale, scared, sneaking, graceless and serpentine.

When The States Do Too Little, Washington Will Do Still More

Mar 2

It was not a new but it was a timely warning that Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas sounded in his speech here to the Alabama State Chamber of Commerce. If the states don't satisfy the legitimate political needs of their people, he said in effect, the people will look to Washington for help. Consequently, the best way to stop the trend toward federalism is for state governments to be adequately alert, energetic and effective.

Birmingham Ala

That, as we said, is not a new thought. But it is one that deserves repeated emphasis. It needs to be driven deep into the consciousness of all people until they naturally question every service of government in the light of whether it can and should be done locally or should be sought from Washington.

The 11-19-54

There are some things, of course, that the federal government should do. There is merit, too, in the point that, in view of the indivisibility of the nation and the need for strengthening all parts of it for the sake of national security, the wealth of the more fortunate states should to some degree contribute to upbuilding the states less fortunate.

P. 14

But recognition of these points should never be permitted to blind us to the certainty that when a state accepts help from Washington it may either surrender some of its authority or run great risk of doing so. The defenders of more federal help insist that Washington can contribute to state functions without exercising control. That hope must be entertained in the light of the fact that nearly always when federal grants have been made to states, they have been followed, sooner or later, by setting up standards or specifications that states had to meet before the grants would be made.

That is true of federal highway funds, welfare funds, and some other grants from Washington. Washington now dictates some of the specifications for constructing federal aid highways. It sets up certain rules for distributing state as well as federal welfare funds. The fact that those specifications and rules are defensible does not change the fact that they come from above.

Obviously in many cases the price for federal help may not be regarded as too high. But at least we should always strive to see clearly what we are doing.

However, because it is generally true that the government which is nearest the people is the best government, the federal government should never be called upon to do what the states themselves can do just as well, or better. In like manner, state governments should not have to do what local governments can do as well. And we might go on to the ultimate step and say that no government should be compelled to do what individuals can do for themselves equally as well.

South's White Protestants Find Integration Problem Of Christian Brotherhood

Readers In Religious Groups Accept High Court Decision But Autonomous Churches Refuse To Accept Their Views As Guidance

The question of whether a practicing Christian can believe in white supremacy was pointed up by the recent Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling. What do white churchgoers in the South think? What do their ministers say? Will Negroes be welcomed into white churches? Here's a story with some answers an Associated Press reporter traveled weeks to find.

ATLANTA, Sept. 18.—There is agony in the South today: The angony of white Christians wrestling with their souls.

The white Christian has been challenged to practice what he preaches—universal brotherhood.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, Negro president of predominately Negro Morehouse College here, told the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Ill., in August that segregation was the great scandal of the church.

"It will be a sad commentary on our life and times," he said, "if future historians can write that the last bulwark of segregation based color . . . was God's church."

The South against which these challenges have been presented is one tremendous paradox.

There is a deep personal affection between many individual white men and individual Negroes. Many Southern proponents of segregation were reared by Negro nurses and played with Negro children until they reached school age.

In the South the white lives much closer to the Negro than anywhere in the North.

In the rural areas Negro and white families often live as farm neighbors. In the cities Negroes live in the alleys back of white homes.

Chicago Discriminates Sharply

There are large exclusively Negro residential areas in southern cities, but on the fringes of these areas the white-Negro line of demarcation is not nearly so sharp as, for example, in Chicago.

While the white man's relations with individual Negroes often is one of affection, a majority wants the Negro race "to keep its place" in southern tradition that place is one of subservience.

Among the Negroes there is a saying: "Up North they don't care how high you get, just so you don't get too close. Down South they don't care how close you get as long as you don't get too high."

There is a wide fear among southern whites that if the bars of segregation are dropped, there will be a tremendous influx of Negroes into white institutions.

Many observers believe that because the Negroes have their own churches, in their own neighborhoods, with their own social activities, few would be interested in joining white churches. But no one knows the answer for sure.

Southern Protestant ministers also have the matter of judging the temper of congregations.

Integration Ministers Fired

At least two Baptist pastors apparently moved too rapidly.

The Rev. Robert Trotman of Lumpkin, Ga., praised the Court decision as a "just and Christian opinion." His rural congregation asked his resignation.

The Rev. Henry A. Buchanan also spoke out in favor of the decision and was asked to resign from his two rural pastorates in Southwest Georgia, near Shellman.

In Hobbs, N. M., a fringe area, a third Baptist minister, the Rev. William Carter, met a different response. Carter preached against desegregation and predicted that when segregation ended among the city's 6,000 school children, 400 of them Negroes, there would be bloodshed.

The children returned to school on an integrated basis. There was no bloodshed.

Atlanta is widely considered the capital of the "Bible Belt." But it isn't easy, despite that, to get Protestant ministers to talk on the subject of segregation. Most of those to whom I talked, in the windup of a 27-day tour of the south, referred me to someone else. In most cases that someone was the Rev. Mr. Griffin, who serves as secretary of the 17-denomination Christian Council of Atlanta.

"It isn't hypocrisy that makes them evade the issue," he said, "though it may appear so to you. I would say there is more personal courage among ministers here than anywhere else in the South.

Explains Evasions

"When the time comes to be counted, there are many who will stand. But out of loyalty to their congregations they can't speak out on the subject and appear in print before they tell their congregations they are going to do so.

"I have a strong feeling that 80 per cent of the congregations, with their silent social attitudes, will say nothing and go along. They are hoping, though, something will happen which will make it unnecessary for them to become special kinds of heroes."

He said five large Protestant churches in Atlanta had agreed quietly to accept Negro applicants.

"Even the diehards down here," he continued, "recognize that it is only a matter of time; That segregation is not God's idea, but man's, and they are trying to find ways of accomplishing God's will without splitting the churches."

Splitting the churches is a possibility causing some concern. I was told privately, for example, that the Methodists of Clarendon County, S. C., planned to pull out if their church conference approved the Supreme Court decision. There probably are others.

One of the suits attacking school segregation originated in Clarendon County. It probably was the most famous of those on which the Supreme Court ruled.

Colleges Open To Negroes

Seven Atlanta ministers stood up to be counted after the Supreme Court decision, saying segregation could not be defended on the basis of Christian doctrine. Five of them said their churches had acted to end segregation.

Through the South, 46 denominational colleges and theological seminaries are open to Negroes, 31 of them Protestant. Many Protestant churches have actively supported the Southern Regional Council, an interracial organization devoted to equal opportunity for all.

A full year before the Supreme Court decision, the Most Rev. Joseph Francis Rummel, Archbishop of the New Orleans Catholic Diocese, directed an end to segregated congregations.

For four years before that, the Holy Name Society of Catholic men in the New Orleans Archdiocese (which includes a little more than 21 parishes, or counties) had been interracial.

Immediately after the court opinion, the Louisiana Legislature met with the avowed purpose of maintaining racial segregation in the schools through legal evasions. It hit upon a plan of invoking the state's police powers to maintain "the good morals and welfare" of its citizens—that is, by continuing segregated schools.

Three measures were proposed, and originally private as well as public schools were covered. The church mustered its power and the parochial school restriction was dropped. Archbishop Rummel led the fight. However, the Catholic Church won't carry out integration in its elementary and high schools this year.

The Rt. Rev. Henry C. Bezou, superintendent of Catholic schools, said it would be impossible because of the lack of facilities.

Negro-White Dioceses Merged

Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh, N. C., said in June of last year that no racial segregation would be tolerated in the churches and merged the white and Negro dioceses.

Bishop Peter L. Ireton of Richmond, Va., said in the wake of the court decision that where no separate school facilities existed for Negro parishioners, they could enter white schools. Bishop Albert L. Fletcher of Little Rock followed suit.

In the heart of the pro-segregation country, at Grosse Tete, La., not far from Baton Rouge, a Negro, the Rev. Aubrey Osborne, serves as an assistant parish priest.

Parochial schools in the archdiocese of Washington began integration in 1949.

Nashville plans parochial school integration this fall. The Protestant churches, probably the strongest stand after the Supreme Court decision was taken by the 94th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. (Southern), a governing body of church laymen.

The assembly held that "enforced segregation . . . is discrimination which is out of harmony with Chrisitan theology and ethics." It recommended local Presbyterian churches admit persons to membership without reference to race.

Baptists Speak, Unauthoritatively

And the Southern Baptists, largest single denomination in the region with 7,883,708 members, approved the Supreme Court decision as being in harmony with "Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men."

Neither stand however, is binding on the churches. Each Presbyterian and Baptist church is autonomous.

The Methodist Church, second largest denomination in the South, has long argued its basic church doctrine forbids racial discrimination. Paradoxically, however, it maintains a "Central Jurisdiction" which is exclusively Negro.

At Lake Junaluska, the Methodist retreat near Asheville, N. C., I talked with the Rev. J. W. Fowler, pastor of the retreat. He said he had been preparing his congregations to an acceptance of the "Brotherhood of Man" for about five years.

"I know many other ministers who have been doing the same," he said. "Segregation is a matter of Christian principle on which the church ought to act positively.

"I have a great sympathy for the prejudiced. It is a matter of time. It will work out."

A Heavy Blow at Campaigns of Hate

With the arrest of Bryant W. Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, on charges of criminal conspiracy, a major step has been taken toward dealing with outbreaks of mob hysteria attending the State of Delaware's efforts to end segregation in its schools.

It may be that Bowles and his bigoted followers were not alone responsible for the feeling which resulted in the abandonment, at least temporarily, of moves to integrate 10 Negro pupils in the schools of Milford, Del.

But the history of that shameful episode shows clearly that no overt actions to oppose integration with student strikes, boycotts and intimidation of the Negro students took place until Bowles arrived to fan the passions of hate and prejudice.

Because of those passions, Gov. J. Caleb Boggs and Attorney General H. Albert Young have displayed forthright courage in ordering the arrest of the man whose organization made several hundred residents of Delaware forget their better instincts and join in the shabby campaign to deny admission of Negro children to previously segregated schools.

The State officials also may be preventing further trouble, for Bowles and his followers had made known their intention of continuing their campaign in the State. Attorney General Young already had moved to revoke the charter of the NAAWP on the grounds that it had exceeded its corporate powers by inciting to riot.

The difficulties attending moves to end segregation in compliance with the Supreme Court decision do not originate with Bowles and his organization in Delaware or any other State where separate schools had been the accepted pattern.

Adjustment to the new conditions would in any case be trying. The Supreme Court recognized that it was dealing with deep-seated customs when it withheld an order telling how its integration decree was to be carried out. In effect the court conceded that its decision would not automatically mean that prejudice was at an end.

Even resentment, against the integration order in Delaware existed before Bowles made an appearance. But the people of Milford and other places went along. The schools opened, the Negro pupils attended, and there was no outcry until something happened to stir up latent feelings—the prejudices of parents, not the school children.

That something, in the view of the State officials, was the advent of Bowles. He held mass meetings at which a doctrine of hate was preached. He encouraged boycotting the newly integrated schools. An attempt to put into practice the Constitutional doctrine of equal educational opportunity for all races became a strike against the schools and a challenge to the authority of the State.

The firm stand of Governor Boggs and Attorney General Young may prevent further disturbances in Delaware, as unyielding actions by authorities in Baltimore and Washington put a crimp in efforts to thwart integration in those cities.

More importantly, the arrest of Bowles may be an effective reminder to the people of Milford and other towns who allowed themselves to be misled by demagogic appeals to their baser feelings.

For the admitted problems of ending segregation in our schools—a blight on our democratic country for decades—will not be conquered by heeding the inflammatory advice of those who preach intolerance and hate.

They will be solved in all places where segregation still exists by people who turn their backs on the demagogues and follow instead the instinct for decency and fairness which is a part of our American tradition.

The Duty Of The Churches Toward Social Problems

One of the indirect effects of the Supreme Court's decision on public school segregation has been the placing of organized Christian groups under a heightened sense of obligation to examine their own positions on that and other social problems. Inevitably there arise the questions: What is the Christian duty in this instance? What stand should the church take, if any? Can churches remain silent?

Questions like these are not new. They are constantly arising. Any great social problem brings them forth. Most of them revolve around the controversy indicated by the phrase, the social gospel. And on that point there have been always and still are many opinions.

There are those who hold that Christian churches should content themselves with declaring the great principles of the faith and leave the application of those principles to individuals. Let the churches, this viewpoint holds, preach truth and righteousness; the individual will decide what those words mean in specific instances. Churches, so it is argued, weaken their influence when they enter into delicate or controversial matters.

Other persons deny this, and say it is the duty of the church, and of its ministerial leadership, to let itself be heard on all issues where moral or spiritual or social welfare is at stake. That is a strongly supported viewpoint today, as indicated by a recent vote of the General Board of the National Council of Churches that decided 87 to 4 to take sides on controversial public issues.

Influencing the board, no doubt, were revelations that have been sharpened as a result of the segregation issue. There has been brought more clearly into the open the experience of Christian missionaries from this country, who find their work hampered, especially in Africa, by certain conditions of Negro life in this country.

But segregation is only one of many public issues which the governing body of the National Council of Churches thinks call for taking sides on the part of churches and church people. There are many others, most of them bound up in some way or other with the politics and economics of the day. The segregation issue is emphasizing that the church is not something aloof and apart from life, from day-to-day living, but is deeply involved in important social problems.

Heritage Of Freedom Belongs To Negroes Too

To the Editor:

After reading paragraph after paragraph on segregation it makes by heart bleed to know the Negroes are living in a country where they're so unwanted. I guess the Constitution made a mistake when it said, "All men are created equal."

How can our children live restricted and divided in this country and fight together in another? It would be very hard for the white man of this country to impress a Communist that their way of life is wrong.

Negroes have come a long way since slavery and if we'd had more missions and good teachings right here instead of abroad the living standards would've been far better. The Negro has always and still is being reprimanded for almost everything he does. It's always what he "can't do"—never what he can do.

Take two children out of one of the finest homes, segregate them, give one love, affection, understanding and freedom, give the other just the opposite, then notice the vast difference in the two.

Yes, I Thank God for the Supreme Court because it believes in the equality of all men and defends human rights and respects a man for his worth regardless of his race, creed of color.

Negroes are a loyal people. We are not invaders. We are native-born citizens and this great heritage is ours too. Not one black hand has been raised against our flag.

Working Together Would Make Things Easier

To the Editor:

I recently read a letter to you written by Mr. J. O. Pannell. It shows that all white people aren't against the Negro.

He told that the first men who brought Negroes to America to sell them knew they were doing wrong. He also stated that they permitted millions of Negroes to grow up among them without education and any training in citizenship.

If we had more straight thinking people like Mr. Pannell and many others who are willing to come together and work out things, a brighter light would be thrown upon this situation which confronts us today.

In working together all of us progress easier, and faster. If we are to fight against each other it makes matters even worse.

People like Mr. Talmadge of Georgia show a poor example of pulling together when they make statements like this one: "Before Negro and white go to school together I'll turn all the public schools in Georgia to privates ones." Having separate sets of everything is expensive, inconvenient, wasteful and selfish. Expensive because, while constructing a separate building on different lots, why not build a bigger and better one on the same lot?

Inconvenient because when the part the Negro is going to use most likely something is going to be left off. Wasteful because the money and time that is going into these separate stations could be used for other things that are needed. Selfish because we can plainly see that nearly every public accommodation used by the Negro compared to that of others is poorly equipped.

A SCHOOL PLAN OF GOOD WILL AND COOPERATION

Respect For Both Law And Mutual Convictions Is Essential In Meeting Supreme Court Decision

The grave problems raised by the Supreme Court's decision outlawing compulsory racial segregation are pressing hard upon the minds and consciences of the people of the South. But specific application of the decision will not be entirely clear until decrees are issued, and consequently in most areas a period of reflection and preparation fortunately now is available. Able students of the law pertinently point out that legal doctrine to be effective must be translated into actual legal practice. We are now seeking methods of legal practice in conformity with the newly announced legal doctrine. It is an inescapably complex and momentous task.

The interval of preparation does not mean that procrastination can be afforded. Consideration even now is urgent, though in most communities the climax is not yet reached.

These grave problems will not be solved by further conflict among our people. They cannot be swept by evasion.

This newspaper, having expressed its respect that this decision has come at this time, nevertheless believes that constructive and creative efforts must be made to meet it. After long and earnest consideration, The News has come to the conclusion—which perhaps should have been obvious at once—that a constructive approach requires recognition of two fundamental principles:

1. Respect for the law and its interpretation by the Supreme Court.

2. Respect for sincere, widespread community convictions.

Failure of these principles is ignored or grossly subordinated, there can be no effective dealing with the situation. Instead there would be bitterness and conflict and no clear limits could not be defined.

* * *

The Supreme Court is our final interpreter of the law. Our system of government—of justice and freedom—is based on law and respect for law. Our way of life could not survive on any other basis. But it is also true that law gains its force and effectiveness from the willing support of the people. Law which deeply violates the convictions of the people of a nation—or a region—or a community—cannot be adequately effective in that nation, region or community. Any program of action under the Supreme Court decrees, to be constructive and successful, must take account of the deep convictions of the people involved.

What Kind Of Program?

What kind of a program would be in accord with those two basic principles and avoid the great danger of disruption and conflict which would be involved in other courses of action?

First of all, it is to be recognized, we believe, that compulsory public school segregation is invalidated in principle by the decision. This newspaper recognizes force and reality in the contention that such segregation does involve a kind of discrimination in itself. But it also believes that contentions and conditions underlying the superseded "separate but equal" decision of more than a half century ago and bearing on state rights and the public interest and peace also are still to be recognized as involving considerations of great pertinence and weight. Who can fail to recognize that sentiment among white people in communities of the South generally, and even in some communities in other regions, is strongly against compulsory integration of white and Negro students in the public schools.

What kind of a plan of action could constructively meet these realities?

It is the belief of this newspaper that a fundamental requisite of any such plan would require that our people of good will of BOTH RACES UNITE COMMUNITY BY COMMUNITY IN STRIVING TO ACHIEVE AS MUCH COMMON GROUND OF AGREEMENT as possible. They should STRONGLY RESIST being drawn into almost EXCLUSIVE CONCENTRATION ON DIFFERENCES. Different conditions and sentiments will make for varying problems in different communities. No one program will be equally effective everywhere.

There IS much common ground upon which we believe a great majority of ALL our Southern people CAN stand. That is true here in Birmingham and the rest of Alabama.

This great majority in both races do not want to defy law.

They do not want to foment new and terrible bitterness and conflict here at home in a world facing the menace of overwhelming destruction through strife.

The great majority of our white people want to respect law and to avoid compulsory action in defiance of law.

The great majority of our Negro citizens, we believe, do not want to try to force integration of students where it is against a prevailing white sentiment and would involve grave possibilities of trouble.

Much Solid Common Ground

These and other feelings, including long-standing realities of genuine friendship and good will between the two races, provide much solid, common ground upon which to work. Action on that basis, looking to POSITIVE, HOPEFUL results, rather than NEGATIVE OBSTRUCTION AND ANTAGONISM, could, we believe, evoke a powerful COOPERATIVE support among white and colored people.

It could develop the incomparable power of true good will.

It could conceivably lead to marked creative progress instead of mounting stress and hate and peril.

What kind of a definite program of action, then, could be evolved from such a cooperative spirit and attitude?

In seeking specific answer to that crucial question, let the court's decision be carefully considered. One thing seems to us especially important. The decision clearly invalidates COMPULSORY SEGREGATION. But to this paper it seems evident that it does NOT COMPEL INTEGRATION, especially if there is individual desire or community conviction to the contrary. This distinction points, we believe, to an opportunity for action in conformity with both the court's ruling against compulsory segregation and community sentiment against compulsory integration. In our anxiety over DIFFERENCES and DANGERS, have we OVERLOOKED a really HOPEFUL OPPORTUNITY?

Helpful Voluntary Action

Specifically, The Birmingham News proposes the most careful examination and consideration of a plan under which it would be possible, we believe, both to give respect, and to conform, to the court's ruling against compulsory segregation, and to avoid by VOLUNTARY ACTION an integration of students profoundly against intense community sentiment among white people.

In seeking such a program, school districts might be evolved in each of which—where both white and colored children resided—there would be a school that now is white and one that now is colored. The problem of such districting should not be insurmountable.

Residential patterns in Birmingham as in many other cities are such as to be helpful in meeting school districting problems under the court's decision. It will be natural and logical for great numbers of colored school children to want to continue attending the schools they have been attending. But under the idea here suggested for study, there would be a genuine opportunity for colored children to choose and attend schools regardless of race. Anything less than such an opportunity would not, in a public school system, meet the court's decision.

This paper is unable to believe that a satisfactory solution can be found in abolishing the public school system, although a change in state law in due time giving the Legislature authority in that respect might be a wise precaution affording a means of dealing with an extreme situation of danger or conflict, should such a situation ever develop.

However, under a system which respected the court's ruling against compulsory segregation, which provided an opportunity for a free choice of schools, and which had the strong, active support of most citizens of good will of both races, we would have an excellent chance, we believe, to minimize problems and perils and to keep our schools in operation by VOLUNTARY MEANS along the lines of student body composition which now prevail.

A Basis For Cooperation

We repeat: We believe that, with compulsory legal segregation done away with by the court, with general recognition of that reality and with continued efforts to make progress in providing genuinely equal educational opportunities for both white and colored students, Negro students and parents in Birmingham and the rest of Alabama would not seek to FORCE UNWELCOME INTEGRATION except in there be under any approach. But this than continued efforts to exert compulisolated instances. Any instances of dif- program would have the stalwart fou ficulty and controversy surely could better tion of a genuine effort to respect both be met through the development of a the law and the deep convictions of s broad measure of good will and coopera- munity sentiment.

tion than under conditions emphasizing differences and divisions.

It should have the strength and vitality son, to deserve thorough and prayerful of a sincere endeavor carried forward in exploration and consideration.

There would be hard problems, challenges and difficulties under such a positive, hopeful and bold program. So would this paper believes, hold more promise or should, e promise good will.

At the least such an endeavor

SCHOOL INTEGRATION GRIEF

The Centreville Press

The segregation issue is causing much trouble in different parts of the country. Ordinarily you would think that states in the deep South would be the first to start trouble, but the states of Maryland, Delaware and Washington, D. C., are having trouble about mixing the whites and colored in the schools. This is a tremendous problem, but we believe ways and means can be found to have segregation and remain within the ruling of the Supreme Court. There is no doubt in our mind but what both races will be much better off to keep segregation in the schools. There is a great need for improvements to be made in both white and colored schools, but we are unable to see where the educational system will be improved by mixing the races. The colored people now have good teachers, and their schools are improving each year. It would indeed be a bad mistake to interfere now with a program of mixing the races.

Consider Child's Interest In Segregation Problem

To the Editor:

There are those who keep on asserting that the state is guilty of discrimination in giving colored children to colored schools. I would like to ask such persons a question which would test the real merits. If a juvenile court judge has to find foster parents for a colored boy, should he give the custody to a good colored couple, or to a good white couple who might want him? The law all over the country is that the state, and the courts, in awarding the custody of children, must consider the interest of the child.

Juvenile courts all over the country probably give custody of colored children to colored foster parents, because they can be more like natural parents than a white couple, and because of the advantages they would have in being brought up in the association with other children of their own racial kinship. There is not a state in this union that would tolerate a juvenile court preferably giving colored children to white foster parents.

Now the state in awarding custody of colored children to colored teachers, in colored schools during school hours (where good colored schools are available), is simply carrying out the same great principle of considering the interest of the child. It is law all over the country that "the teacher stands in the place of a parent," so that a colored teacher would be more like a natural parent to colored children than a white teacher. Also, there is the additional advantage of being brought up in the association of racial kinship.

Acting Like Children

The school children can gain nothing from "strikes" and other moblike demonstrations against the ending of segregation, unless their gains are to be written in terms of eventual disgrace to themselves and deep tragedy in this community.

If the children are incapable of understanding why that is true, responsible parents will help them to think it through. Some of the children are confused about the situation in Milford, Delaware, for example, and at Anacostia and McKinley high schools yesterday were heard to say that "If they can get away with it in Milford, we can get away with it here." This is not Milford. This is the Capital of the United States. Neither the Federal Government, nor its agency, the District government, is going to permit any departure from the decision of the Supreme Court that found a segregated school system to be invalid under the Constitution.

Nor should the children or their parents be misled by the fact that in a number of the States, including most of Maryland and Virginia, desegregation has been delayed by the responsible authorities until the Supreme Court issues its decrees next year. This is a perfectly legal course. The Federation of Citizens' Associations believes we should have followed the same course in the District of Columbia. Proceeding in a proper and orderly manner, the Federation, through counsel, has appealed to the courts. Thus far, however, the courts have found no substance to the Federation's contention. The Federation, being composed of good citizens, will abide by the decision of the courts, and has never counseled taking the law into its own hands.

The demonstrations by the children, of course, are purely emotional. We have had school strikes before, led by the parents, and they have been condoned by the authorities. We have a whole generation of children indoctrinated with the idea, accepted in high and low places, that it is wholly proper to strike and to demonstrate against what we do not approve of. But this is an entirely different situation, and even a child should know it. The demonstration by the children contains the seeds of anarchy, not of lawful protest. Only a handful of the youngsters at Anacostia and McKinley yesterday even thought they knew what they were doing or why they were doing anything, and their answers to questions quickly showed how much they had been influenced by unsubstantiated rumor and gossip. The rest of the children exhibited the same sheeplike qualities so common among their elders, and were attracted by the excitement and the normal desire to take a day off from school.

They will come to their senses, The Star is sure, and with the help of their parents will realize the true nature of the dynamite they are playing with. They will remember that in explosions, those who set the fuse usually escape unscathed. It is the innocent bystander who gets hurt.

To Abolish Race Prejudice

Visitor Sees Solution for Problem Through Goodwill and Vision

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

As a visitor to the United States from Edinburgh I have been privileged since my arrival six weeks ago to view many of the facets of the American scene at various angles. Many of the conclusions I have arrived at are necessarily of a tentative character, but there is one aspect which I have no reason to think will be influenced by any circumstances that may arise before the termination of my visit. I refer to the vexed question of the segregation or desegregation of the Negro section of American citizens.

At Boston I resided near a school where the pupils, both white and colored, are taught in the same classes, and where I had visual evidence that they mixed freely with each other and without manifesting any racial prejudices or animosities. I have also observed, however, if I may judge from reports in the press, that antagonisms still exist in the relationships of these classes in other parts and that desegregation is not common—in fact, that it is still in the experimental stage.

The problem, of course, presents many difficulties, but these might be resolved satisfactorily if a few simple facts were taken into consideration and due allowance made for them. The first one is that slave labor of members of the Negro race was introduced by the early American colonists into certain parts of America. The justification or otherwise for the introduction of such labor remained a disputed issue for some generations before the Civil War decided it in favor of emancipation.

Resentment Engendered

It was only natural, however, to expect that in spite of the freedom enjoyed by—or perhaps I should say won by—the Negroes in a political sense, the attitude to be adopted by the slave-owning class would be one of resentment to the new order of things—at least by a considerable proportion of that class. The event has justified such expectation, for ever since the Civil War certain discriminations have been made against the Negro citizens, the chief of these being their segregation as a racial class.

Traditional habits of thought about the colored race are deep rooted, but they must give place to a new and enlightened attitude. Love and not hate should be the watchword.

I am convinced that the black race has started the march toward the goal of equality with other races, and that, however much it may be impeded, it will one day reach its objective. There is much need of vision and goodwill. Let all other races beware of their own steps, lest any false moves lead not to equality but to subservience. There are great potentialities in the United States, in either direction, in the long days to come.

Law in Delaware

Vice-Chancellor Marvel's order in the case of the ten Negro students ousted from high school in Milford, Del., is gratifyingly plain. He finds that they "have a clear legal right" to attend the Milford school. That seemed obvious from the beginning, and it is to be hoped that a disagreeable situation will now be righted by compliance with the law.

The trouble in Delaware came from lack of firmness at the outset. When the local school authorities first decided to go ahead with integration, without waiting for the Supreme Court's decrees on practical methods of ending segregation, they should have stuck to their decision. What happened was that the trouble-makers, abetted by outside agitators, were allowed at least temporarily to get the upper hand. The Negro students who had been admitted at the opening of the school year were suddenly removed. This was a shameful surrender to prejudice. It was also, as the court makes plain, a violation of constitutional rights. Having once granted non-segregated education, it was wrong to backtrack and try to withhold the privilege.

The man who was largely responsible for stirring up the disturbance in the first place —Bryant Bowles, with his racist organization called the National Association for the Advancement of White People—is predicting a new boycott in Milford. That remains to be seen. The issue here is whether law is to be obeyed. There can be no choice. Leadership has again been asserted in Delaware.

Delaware Fights Racists

The State of Delaware took two legal steps to deal with the racial segregation issue which has become acute in the town of Milford. Ten Negro students first were admitted to Milford's formerly all-white high school, and then were barred from it by a newly elected Board of Education.

Delaware's Attorney General went to court and obtained a temporary injunction designed to get the Negro students back into Milford High School. He supported a legal action brought on behalf of their parents by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. A final decision will be up to the Court of Chancery.

The state's other step was to arrest Bryant W. Bowles. He is the founder of an organization imitatively named the National Association for the Advancement of White People, which has stirred up agitation against the mingling of races in school. The charge was that Bowles had conspired to violate the state's education law by encouraging white students to boycott the Milford high school until Negroes were barred.

The problem in Milford, according to its superintendent of schools, "was not caused by the students in any way." The difficulties arose, he said, "from the protests of parents" in surrounding rural areas. The superintendent's statement was made in a letter to New Rochelle High School declining its invitation to send up a student delegation to see how well integration worked in the New York school.

The invitation from New Rochelle students was accepted by four other high schools—three in Washington and one in Baltimore—where demonstrations against de-segregation had taken place A few students from each of the four are to be New Rochelle's guests this week, with their traveling expenses paid by volunteer classroom collections. New Rochelle High School has 1,600 students, of whom about one-fourth are Negroes. There is no discrimination in school activities, and a Negro was president of the student General Organization in 1950.

Voice Of The People

The Responsibility Of Negro Leadership

To the Editor:

I read with much interest your editorial of the 10th instant relative to your plan for a peaceful solution to the problems created by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States regarding segregation. The plan is ingenious and is indicative of much thought and effort. Your suggestion is, briefly, that what the Supreme Court says cannot be done by compulsion should be done voluntarily upon the agreement of "leaders" of the white and Negro races.

While due regard must be given the inviolate powers of the Supreme Court as well as the intensity of feeling of certain segments of the population of the South, it seems that you have missed the entire point, if not of the decision itself, then certainly of the significance of the 76 years of struggle which culminated in the recent decision.

1. The cases before the Supreme Court in its recent decision involved questions of compulsory segregation in schools as a result of state law. While the Supreme Court of the United States may properly address itself to matters of state action only, the opinion went further to state as the basis of the decision that segregation in education is of itself harmful to the Negro children who invariably, as experience shows, have received the "short end of the stick" in the states practicing segregation in education. Your plan, then loses its moral suasion as it advocates that "responsible leaders" agree to do something which the United States Supreme Court has said is wrong and harmful to Negro children in states practicing segregation in education.

2. Responsible Negro leaders have led this fight to end segregation in education since Gaines vs. Missouri. Lest you believe that they have not represented the vast majority of Negroes, both in the South and North, may I invite your attention to a record which shows that the hundreds of thousands of dollars expended to carry on the ceaseless effort to obtain equality of education opportunities have come primarily from 25- to 50-cent contributions of Negroes throughout the country. Social clubs, fraternal orders, churches, and labor unions have contributed; but theirs has not been the major part. Inasmuch as responsible Negro leaders have been in the vanguard of this fight with the support of the majority of Negroes, it is almost impossible to conceive that there can be found responsible Negro leaders who would concur in your conclusion. If a Negro could be found who sanctioned your proposal it would be reasonable to conclude that he was either not a "leader" or, if so, was not "responsible."

3. I think it fair to say that one of the attributes most admirably demonstrated by such leadership as Negroes in the South have produced over the years has been that of patience. Although there are instances of misunderstanding among the rank and file as to just what the Supreme Court did say, and occasional sputtering of dying fuses, I earnestly believe that responsible leadership in the South is aware of the gravity of the situation. Such leadership is not likely to rush pell-mell into situations which are likely to create even greater problems. While responsible leadership is and must be patient, it is and must be persistent. No realtistic view can close its eyes to the fact that there is as much difference between the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa and the State Teachers College at Montgomery as there is between the fragrance of a lily and limburger cheese. Please reconsider the efficacy of any "solution" which would ask responsible Negro leadership to accept voluntarily such a situation.

Opportunity And Security Denied Through Segregation

To the Editor:

The great evil of racial segregation is it is designed to promote unfairness toward the Negro. A race should not be given advantage over another race. It is designed to make short the limitations of the Negro's utopia, and wants him only to do a few small things and never have the will to do any of the larger things. It regulates and controls the destiny of the Negro and denies him a true pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

Racial segregation gives opportunity and recognition to low merit when it is white over a high merit when it is Negro. Because of segregation, the Negro is discriminated upon sight, whether friend or enemy. A long-standing and proven friendship does not alter the discrimination.

Whites will not keep the segregation agreement as they did not keep the agreement of "separate but equal" agreement in the case of Plessy vs. Furguson that was held in 1896 in New Orleans, La. Immediately after this agreement disfranchisement was sought and gained.

The Negro is not anxious to sit immediately beside the white. His anxieties are for his curriculums, facilities and opportunities and securities to be the same in technical standards. Segregation failed to provide genuine opportunity and security for the Negro. Segregation does not guarantee real security and opportunity for the Negro.

Opportunity and security have not come to the Negro through this type of isolation, and segregation is designed to perpetuate the isolation. We are convinced, therefore, that we cannot afford to gamble our opportunity and security and our survival on arrangements and programs that have no reasonable prospect of providing genuine security.

The World Is Watching

Editor, The Advertiser:

Recently a letter appeared in this column entitled "Preserve Racial Identity." This article was written by a doctor who posed as being a friend of the Negro. The essence of his writing had to do with keeping the races separate through segregation.

I stand at the opposite extreme of the doctor. The handwriting is on the wall —segregation is on its way out. There is no place for such in a democratic society.

It seems that one of the main reasons Southern people are opposed to integration is because they feel that it will result in interracial marriage or miscegenation. Should a person forget about his prejudices and think rationally along this line he will conclude that there is no problem. The Negro is not interested in marrying in the white race. The Negro is interested in equality. He wants no special jobs, he wants no special sections in which to ride on buses and trains. He wants no designated sections in which to live. He wants no special schools and no special churches. He wants just what other American citizens want. Nothing more and nothing less. Take it from me, he shall not rest until that "want" has become a living reality.

World peace is of far greater significance than preserving racial identity. The world has its eyes on America. Since the Supreme Court handed down the May 17 decision declaring segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional, people the world over have been watching and waiting to see whether or not America can actually practice what she preaches.

The dark people of the world, who constitute two-thirds of the world's population, are waiting for America to sell democracy in her own land before she attempts to sell it elsewhere. They are waiting to see America integrate the Negro into her democratic society.

SEGREGATION:

Row and Reprisal

The trouble started two days after eleven Negro students were admitted to the Lakeview High School in Milford, Del., a small farming town just north of the Mason-Dixon line. Mass meetings were held, school board members were threatened; parents began to keep their children out of school, fearing violence. One night a cross was burned.

Bryant W. Bowles, the 34-year-old organizer of an anti-integration group he calls the National Association for the Advancement of White People, arrived from his headquarters in Washington, D.C., and began fanning the flames of prejudice. "My daughters," he told one crowd, "will never attend school with Negroes so long as there is breath in my body and gunpowder will burn."

The school closed, then re-opened after the Negro students had been transferred to an all-Negro school 19 miles away in Dover. The tension mounted as Milford waited for a final decision from the state supreme court. Bowles continued his speeches to growing crowds and did a brisk business selling memberships in NAAWP at rates of $5 for a one-year membership and $50 for a "gold card" (life) membership.

This week, as Bowles arrived at Milford's airport to address a crowd of 1,500, state troopers arrested him on charges of conspiracy to violate school laws. In ordering the arrest, Gov. J. Caleb Boggs said: "The state of Delaware recognizes the right of lawful assembly and freedom of speech, but will not tolerate the inciting of organized mob rule and mass hysteria calculated to disrupt the education of our children." Bowles was later released on $6,000 bail pending a hearing scheduled for November.

R.S.V.P.

"First you start about a century ago," said the English gardener to the American who had asked how England grows beautiful lawns.

The student organization and the principal of New Rochelle, New York, High School have invited student representatives from the high schools in Washington, Baltimore, and Milford, Delaware, where desegregation has been resisted, to come and see how "integration" has been working successfully with 25 per cent of the enrollment Negroes.

This is a noble gesture, and behind it, without a doubt, stand some of the most hopeful and idealistic motives of youth. But when one more fact is supplied it becomes obvious that the idea falls short of reaching to the heart of the problem: Negroes, says the dispatch from New Rochelle, have been welcome in the public schools as far back as anyone can remember—back to a time, we would guess, when they constituted no more than 1 per cent of the student body.

Negroes in Washington, Baltimore, and Milford, Delaware, have not been welcome in the public schools as far back as anyone can remember. And the problem these communities face is not simply prejudice, but the prospect of rapid change from long-held concepts of what is proper.

Nevertheless, we hope the invited high schools accept. We wish parents had been invited, too, and would go. The visit could not but contribute perspective. And perspective is a wonderful aid to any solution.

New Junior High

Although not the pioneer junior high school in New Orleans—as an institution for the two highest elementary grades and the two lower high school years—the new $1,400,000 Carter G. Woodson school for Negro children on Freret between Third and Washington is the first designed and built as a junior high. During the past two years other schools have been made into junior highs. But none of them can compare with the new buildings into which students were moved only last week.

The some 1550 children who occupy the new school are reported to be greatly impresssed with it. As the largest and most costly school yet constructed under the Orleans parish school board's current building program, it is said to compare favorably with the facilities of any junior high school in large cities over the country. Occupying two square blocks, the school includes four classroom buildings along South Robertson; a central unit for library, administration and special classrooms for science, homemaking, industrial arts, and art; and other buildings, comprising an auditorium seating 770 people, a gymnasium that will seat 1700, music practice rooms, physical education department and cafeteria.

Because of the size and scope of its facilities, the new school represents something new in school buildings for the city. Newly built elementary schools, although similar in functional design, are on a much smaller scale.

Nevertheless, the Woodson school is reported to be "a good buy"—for cost-cutting construction methods held the price down to about $12 per square foot, as compared with the $16.74 cost per square foot of one new elementary school in the system.

Now Lift the Racial Bars From Milford School

The ruling by Vice Chancellor William Marvel, of Delaware, upholding the "clear and convincing" legal right of Negro children to attend the Milford high school from which they have been barred, is a welcome and vigorous blow to the forces of intolerance in that State.

Followed up by an order directing the school board to readmit the 10 affected students, it should pave the way for peaceable termination of a racial dispute, stirred up mainly by outside agitators, that has rocked the Delaware town for several weeks.

The Vice Chancellor's decision is the only proper one that could be made in view of the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling on equal educational rights in the public schools without regard to race or color. The Milford school board has admitted that the students have been barred only because they are Negroes; has conceded that they are within their rights to ask admission; but has insisted on withdrawing those rights temporarily.

If the school authorities in Milford had acted with courage and a sense of responsibility, instead of running away from their duty, the students would not have been excluded. The Negro pupils had attended the high school, along with 660 white students, for ten days at the outset of the term. Integration was on its way to becoming an accomplished fact, without undue attention paid to it, when professional preachers of race hatred appeared on the scene, with Bryant W. Bowles at the forefront. Milford was torn apart with boycotts, threats of violence and mass-meetings of the old Ku Klux Klan type. The Negroes were thereupon summarily ordered out of the school.

That such a denial of constitutional rights can continue to stand is beyond belief. Court relief has been inevitable, and even should the school board carry its weak case to the State Supreme Court, it can hardly overrule the law of the land. The best thing the board can do is hasten to correct its mistake, and remove the outlawed Jim Crow stigma from its public schools.

Racial 'Study' Loaded Against Court

By Benjamin Muse

THE STATE COMMITTEE on Public Education has not made a promising beginning.

Appointed August 28, its first public hearing is scheduled for November 15. In the past seven weeks, its accomplishments have been limited to the election of a chairman and the appointment of an executive committee, which has met several times in private.

As it is necessary regularly to point out, the "Committee on Public Education" is not a committee on education. It is Virginia's official agency "to ascertain . . . the wishes of the people" and "give careful study to plans or legislation or both" as a result of the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

THE OBJECTIVE VERBIAGE in the announcement of the committee's appointment, quoted from above, might suggest that it is in fact a fact-finding body. But the Governor who appointed it had already stated his own position in no uncertain terms.

Expressing his conviction that "separate schools are in the best interest of all the people of the Commonwealth," he said:

"In order that my position may be clearly understood, I should like to state further that I shall use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools in Virginia."

Governor Stanley used the same language again in addressing the committee at its initial meeting. It is his obvious intention that the committee should concern itself with "legal means," if any can be found, "to continue segregated schools."

WITH FEW EXCEPTIONS, that appears to be the purpose also of the 32 Byrd organization adherents Stanley appointed to his committee.

State Senator Garland Gray, who was elected chairman, is second only to Attorney General Lindsay Almond as a champion of racial segregation in Virginia. (He is also a candidate for governor, although less seriously considered.)

Gray was the prime mover in the somewhat secret June 19 meeting of Fourth District legislators in the Petersburg Firehouse, which adopted a resolution, saying in part:

"We desire to have recorded our unalterable opposition to the principle of integration of the races in the schools and that we hereby pledge to the people of our District and to all the citizens of Virginia our determined purpose to evolve some legal method whereby political subdivisions of the State may continue to maintain separate facilities for white and Negro students in schools."

Gray's continued outspoken remarks, in spite of his position as chairman of the committee, led the Virginia Methodist Advocate last week to question his "competence" to serve in that capacity.

The committee will proceed with public hearings, at which representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, church groups and others favoring compliance with the Supreme Court's rulings will have an opportunity to express themselves. The hearings may also produce some surprises.

BOTH THE COMMITTEE and Governor Stanley are evidently confident that a preponderance of the testimony in the hearings will support their present intention of "evolving" some means of circumventing the spirit of the Supreme Court's decision.

There has been no indication that the committee intends to address itself at all to the urgent task of planning for the gradual desegregation of Virginia's public schools. Nor does the committee now expect to have any recommendation to offer to Virginia's representatives at the December hearings of the Supreme Court.

The committee is left with the business of going over the half-dozen circumvention formulae which have been brought forward in this and other segregation states and deciding which one is most worth trying in Virginia. With the assistance of the State's resourceful Attorney General, it may also come up with a brand new one.

It is increasingly evident, however, that for constructive planning for the transition to a system of integrated public schools, which must take place during the coming years, Virginia will have to look elsewhere than the State Committee on Public Education.

Perspective on Segregation

The Supreme Court was well aware from the beginning of the practical difficulties in bringing an end to segregation in the public schools. The principle has been stated, but the methods of achieving compliance call for much study and consultation. As a first step, the court has called on the states themselves to offer their ideas on how to proceed.

Florida's response provides the opening sample of the South's formal reaction. Its Attorney General is opposed to swift integration of the schools. He warns that peremptory action would provoke "violent physical resistance." Now this need not be taken so much as a threat, but rather as a plea for patient understanding of the difficulties in large scale adjustment. What Florida proposes is that enforcement on the ground level be left to the school authorities and the Federal district courts. This may strike some people as a tactic for delay and evasion; they feel that unless the Supreme Court is extremely emphatic the process of desegregation can dawdle along indefinitely. But it must also be admitted that no challenge to constitutional interpretation is involved. Florida's point is that a tremendous problem has been presented, and that the desired end can only be achieved gradually through tact and wisdom.

One thing, however, needs to be remembered. This is that the national voice of conscience has spoken. The Supreme Court has said that it is wrong to discriminate. The declaration is founded in law and morality. It must be made to work. One reads of an unhappy deviation in one Delaware town or of a few trouble-makers in Baltimore. But such incidents are abnormal; Washington's success with integration shows what can be done.

The need is for calm perspective—neither to exaggerate nor minimize the hazards. A lot of struggle still lies ahead, but the big step has already been taken. The question henceforth is one of methods—how fast or slow to go. But the direction is ahead. And as public conscience is increasingly mobilized, the practical details of solution will steadily fall into place.

Confusion and Children

The one item with regard to Raleigh's dealing with the storm last week about which there was a possibly dangerous confusion was the matter above all others in which confusion should not occur. That was in the handling of the matter of the children in the schools.

During the morning radio stations continually broadcast an announcement, emanating from county civilian defense headquarters, that children would be kept in the schools until the storm subsided. Later school officials announced that schools would be dismissed at 1 p. m. That was a pretty late closing time, apparently based on a miscalculation of the Weather Bureau as to the speed of the storm's approach. The storm hit, if the stopping of electric clocks can be counted as the time it hit, at 1:31 p.m.

No harm resulted to any child. Apparently, however, civilian defense authorities acted first without consulting school officials. Apparently also school officials were a little late in making the decision which prevailed. Obviously if the civilian defense set-up is to be useful in any kind of civilian defense it must coordinate activities, not just announce them. Obviously also in the event of danger to children in the schools, it would be better for the children to be dismissed too soon, rather than too late—or even so late that the traffic congestion around schools should occur, as it did, close to the impact of the storm.

This incident, involving the city's most precious citizens, showed that though there has been much talk about civilian defense against disaster, no coordinated plan had been made even to protect children in the event of disaster. What is needed in any such case is not civilian defense improvisation on excited radio broadcasts but coordinated planning in advance with responsible authorities.

McKinley Integrates With Hardly a Ripple

By John McKelway

More than 1,000 persons, all from different breakfast tables filed up the hills to McKinley High School yesterday and were "integrated."

Those who came were in their teens—a difficult period, anyway—starting the first day of school in a new year. They came knowing that integration would be there, along with tough and easy teachers and the inevitable report card.

They lingered outside the school as long as possible, standing in little groups and chatting. Some grabbed a few quick puffs from cigarettes hidden in their hands. Most of all, they just looked the place over.

Restless Then Calm.

Then the bell rang at 9 a.m. and the groups merged in the halls. They split again into groups and sat down in the school's big auditorium. They squealed, scuffed their feet and were restless. A boy wearing glasses sat by himself on the front row and doodled. A gang of boys on the back row whistled at a couple of girls, late arrivals and evidently embarrassed. Or had the girls planned it that way?

If there was tension at McKinley High School yesterday it was then, when everybody was together, waiting to get on with school and the thing called integration. But it lifted quickly.

Maybe it happened when Joanne Morris, 19, who has a rich voice, sang the Lord's Prayer. Or when Dr. Charles E. Bish, principal, told the students:

New Type of Class.

"No school is better than what the Community thinks it is . . . Realistically, specific items are often generalized . . . The behavior of one individual can be taken by the community as representing the behavior of an entire group of individuals. Good behavior is everybody's job."

As names and "home rooms" were flashed on a screen, the groups began to split apart and new groups were formed—a new type of class for McKinley High School since 1891.

There was the usual confusion. Some names weren't on the list, some classrooms, as well as teachers, seemed to be missing. "Where's the gym . . . the cafeteria . . . the office . . . the machine shop . . . Can I switch my English class to history?"

DR. CHARLES E. BISH
Addresses the students.

They moved from class to class and filled out tiresome forms and slips and cards. Sometimes they were in the "majority," sometimes in the "minority." But they didn't complain—at least to their teachers.

And the teachers, as one said, "found it a challenge." Taking things as they come, they let the students flop down in their own "seating arrangements." Permanent seating would be decided later. The teachers found that those who had been at McKinley last year were helpful toward those who came for the first time—particularly in filling out the awful forms. They crossed the aisles to help.

At 12:15 p.m., the school day ended. Integration had come to McKinley after many years.

Bish "A Right Guy."

"I guess it'll be all right," a student said afterwards. "There are a few wise guys around, sure, but it doesn't make any difference to me. And Bish (Dr. Bish) is a right guy."

"They're just three of us," said one girl, "in a French class of 20. My parents told me to try it for a week and see how it goes. I talked to one real nice girl—helped her in gym class."

"I like this place," said a boy. "They've got a lot of equipment. You sure can get lost in this place, though."

"I didn't hear of one disagreeable incident," Dr. Bish said. "Maybe this is the honeymoon, I don't know. This thing is going to take time."

Headaches Ordinary.

A tall, easy-moving man, a physical education teacher and one of four new teachers at McKinley, said: "It's going to be an interesting year."

At a teacher's meeting following the close of school, the main trouble seemed to be too many children in one class, or not enough in another. Nobody said anything about integration. Their usual opening-day headaches were present, and they broke up to work things out.

By afternoon the halls of McKinley High School were empty. A wad of chewing gum rested in one of the fountains. School had started again.

This Morning

BY JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

"Justice is in one scale, and self-preservation in the other."
—Thomas Jefferson.

The American Negro, according to Zoologist Carl Stern, of the University of California, is doomed to disappear through "racial diffusion." Professor Stern is quite calm about it.

But you wonder if the "diffused" American he anticipates can keep this the greatest country and win the cold war.

In the animal world, scientists consider whether "diffusing" this breed and that is a good thing.

But in the world of human beings such thoughts are, of course, undemocratic, illiberal, unprogressive, unanthropological, illiterate—and Southern.

No matter how quietly they may have accepted (until lately) desegregation in the national capital (where there are more colored children than white and politicians and bureaucrats put up with all things for politics), acceptance doesn't mean desegregation is a success.

That is a long-run question.

The United States News reports that Dissenters agree "the big problems will be social, the dating of white and colored, the social dances."

"Of course we cannot have segregated dances," one teacher is quoted.

"True friendships are expected to develop between many white and Negro students," says The United States News, "and we rule out the possibility that some of these friendships might grow into romance."

* * *

Success or failure of desegregation won't be apparent until decades from now when it is ascertained whether we are a nation of mixed white and Negro blood and, if so, what sort of nation that will make in the competition to survive on a planet in cold war.

* * *

In District schools the much advertised busing is mostly token, apparently, a handful of one race or the other in each school. There are several exceptions where the races are mixed in nearly equal numbers but nothing has happened thus far except some "grumbling" which Walter White and his pet dogs see jealous fear that incoming busing may crowd white boys off the school team.

* * *

There is a snobbery about the race question which persuades many that discussing it is provincial and vulgar and that its basic question—mixing the blood—is not to be mentioned in polite society. But nobody is qualified to look down on anybody about this unless he has faced that basic question, ugly or not.

* * *

What Thomas Jefferson (misclaimed by Chief Justice Warren) said about equality may be found on pages 91 and 92 of Prof. Bernard Mayo's "Jefferson Himself" (Houghton Mifflin): "Nothing is more certainly written in the book of fate than that these people (the Negroes) are to be free; nor is anything more certain than that the two races, equally free, cannot live in the same government. Nature, habit, opinions have drawn indelible lines of distinction between them. It is still in our power to direct the process of emancipation and deportation peaceably. . . ."

"Justice is in one scale," Jefferson concluded, "and self-preservation in the other."

* * *

"No one seriously proposes deportation at this late date, and undoubtedly some of the differences mention have dimmed. But we are entitled to a Chief Justcie who won't claim Jefferson for his sentimentalities.

* * *

Walter White and Co. are flunking the Republicans!

On civil rights legislation the GOP is way behind Democrats, the NAACP Bulletin reports.

President Eisenhower did all right with the armed services, and Attorney General Brownell took the right stand in the desegregation case, it says, but Congress was a do-nothing and a washout.

As for Ike, he "not only failed to request Congress to act on any Civil Rights bill, but also repudiated the action of Secretary of Labor Mitchell when the latter endorsed an FEPC bill at a congressional hearing."

Christians who see religious principle violated by race segregation can't prove it by the Bible. The Rev. Dr. Henry W. Fancher, of Minter, Ala., who did postgraduate work at Harvard after becoming a Master of Theology at Louisville Seminary, has studied the Bible about it for years and written much, including a current pamphlet called "Segregation — God's Plan and God's Purpose." There is an introduction by Bruce Henderson.

* * *

Not being one who believes this question is to be settled on Biblical authority, I report Dr. Fancher's able, well-documented volume only in reminder to the literal that the Bible is probably more quotable for than against segregation.

'A Feeling Of Inferiority'

The demonstrations of white school children in Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia recall a section of the Supreme Court's May 17th decision invalidating school segregation.

Aside from the purely legal aspects of segregation, the court said, there was the psychological damage done to Negro children by the old "separate but equal" doctrine. "Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal," the court said, adding:

> To separate [Negro children] from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone . . .

The court then quoted with approval the decision of a Kansas court which contained this passage:

> . . . The policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group . . . Segregation, with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system.

In overruling the Plessy vs. Ferguson (separate but equal) decision of 1896, the court commented:

> Whatever may have been the extent of psychological knowledge at the time of Plessy vs. Ferguson, this finding [that segregation does harm to the hearts and minds of Negro children] is amply supported by modern authority.

The court thus balanced the great weight of its decision on sociological factors rather than legal ones. This the Supreme Court claims the historical right to do: to consider not only the strict constitutionality of laws, but their "wisdom" as well.

Applying the court's new doctrine of psychological inequality to the displays in Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia, how much greater damage is being done by the student revolts than was ever done under simple segregation? What effect will these demonstrations have on the hearts and minds of Negro children who are thus being told — humiliatingly — that they aren't wanted?

Even assuming that the demonstrations may be childish insurrections against authority, or no different from the senseless panty raids which swept the country a short time ago—even so, the psychological effect of integration in these cases must be the exact reverse of the Supreme Court's sociological theories.

Haste and ill-considered compulsion will not save Negro children from "a feeling of inferiority." Rather, such action is calculated to augment that feeling, for reasons made obvious by the "demonstrations" in the nation's capital, in Baltimore and elsewhere.

Delaware School Tense

The difficulty of abolishing racial segregation in public schools of the South was illustrated last week in Milford, a town in southern Delaware.

Before this term, Negro high school students had to travel to Dover, nineteen miles away, to attend an all-Negro school. In view of the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation, the Milford Board of Education admitted the eleven Negro high school students to the local school, which previously had been all white. But the board received a protest against integration, signed by 1,200 of the town's 5,200 population. Hotheads telephoned anonymous threats of violence if the Negroes were not ousted.

Rather than risk violence, the Board of Education kept the school closed all week, and also closed the town's second school. The board then appealed to the State Board of Education for vindication and support. The State board hedged on the principle involved and asked for a ruling from the Delaware Supreme Court. The local board members thereupon resigned.

The State board then took charge of the Milford schools and, pending court advice, ordered the schools reopened tomorrow on an interracial basis. The eleven Negroes will be free to attend the previously all-white school if they are willing to press the issue.

TENNESSEE, one of the few States to abandon the wait and see lethargy of state capitals, has tackled the problem on a state-wide basis. The State has asked permission to file a brief next month as a friend of the Supreme Court. Tennessee's brief is expected to suggest that school children be integrated gradually, beginning with the First Grade and moving up through the grades as the years pass. Said State Solicitor General Allison B. Humphreys, "The question (of segregation) was settled by decision last May. We see no point in further arguing the issue." Meanwhile, Tennessee schools will stay segregated for the semester, at least.

ARKANSAS will comply with the Supreme Court decision but school districts are not compelled to act this semester, and almost none have. One that did was Fayetteville, Ark., which will integrate twelve Negro high school students as an economy move.

MISSOURI has left the question of segregation up to Local School Boards. A few have acted and others are submitting long-range de-segregation plans to state officials.

TIME MAGAZINE comes up with an unusual article on segregated schools in its September 6 issue and has granted the GLOBE permission to print it. The article is as follows:

BURNING ISSUE

The most remarkable incident arising out of school de-segregation occured at Hillsboro, in southern Ohio. Hillsboro has an un-segregated high school, but maintains a segregated 50-pupil elementary school for Negroes. This year the school board decided to de-segregate, but proposed to do so in a gradual two-year program.

The delay ruffled Philip Partridge, 43, the county engineer, who is white and a vehement opponent of racial segregation. He reasoned that if the Negro school did not exist the authorities would have to de-segregate immediately. Accordingly, he set fire to the Negro school. After $4,000 worth of damage, firemen saved the building.

Partridge was sent to the State Hospital for the Insane at Lima. Doctors there released him, finding him sane, although possessed of "some unusual and strong ideas." He returned to Hillsboro to resume his duties as county engineer. The county commissioners tried to fire him, but strong-minded Partridge contended that he had job tenure, that his setting fire to the school was an after-hours act performed as a private person and did not affect his professional competence as a county engineer.

This week, as Hillsboro's Negro children prepared to go back to their school, now slightly charred, Highland County was still paying Partridge's salary, and the principle —if it is one — that civil servants are not answerable for their private thoughts and deeds was, for the moment, at least preserved.

COUNCIL ORGANIZED TO SAVE SEGREGATION

Groups Are Set Up In Three Alabama Counties

SELMA, Ala., Nov. 27.—(AP)—White citizens councils to apply economic pressure to Negroes who advocate desegregation have been formed in three Alabama counties.

Spread of the movement from Mississippi to a second Southern state was revealed Saturday by a Selma attorney, who asked to remain unidentified until a rally of the Dallas County Citizens Council Monday night.

The spokesman said councils have been formed in Dallas, Perry and Hale Counties, and a fourth will be organized in Marengo Monday night.

All are in the agricultural Black Belt of Alabama, where Negroes outnumber white residents as much as five to one.

The attorney said committees, one of which will be a screening panel, will furnish information to council members about whether a Negro is "all right" or should be given the "pressure."

"The white population in this county controls the money and this is an advantage that the council will use in a fight to legally maintain complete segregation of the races," the spokesman declared.

"We intend to make it difficult, if not impossible, for any Negro who advocates desegregation to find and hold a job, get credit or renew a mortgage."

"Women will not be allowed to join," the spokesman said, "because we feel that it is a job for men."

Only white men will be admitted to the rally.

Mississippi State Senator T. M. Williams, a leader in the Mississippi movement, was listed as the principal speaker here Monday. Mississippi council leaders helped organize those in Alabama.

The Dallas Council is ready "to lay its cards on the table," the spokesman said.

"We are not anti-Negro; we only want segregation maintained," he declared, "and we are not vigilantes. We will operate openly and violence is the furthest thing from the minds of the council members.

"We have lived with Negroes all of these years without trouble, and it is our utmost desire to continue the happy relationship, but on a segregated basis."

Councils Of White Citizens Operating In 3 Counties To Fight De-Segregation

SELMA, Nov. 27 (AP)—White Citizens Councils which will apply stern economic pressure to Negroes who advocate de-segregation have been formed in three Alabama counties.

Spread of the movement from Mississippi to a second Southern state was revealed today by a Selma attorney, who asked to remain unidentified until a rally of the Dallas County Citizens Council Monday night.

The spokesman said councils have been formed in Dallas, Perry and Hale Counties, and a fourth will be organized in Marengo Monday night.

All are in the agriculture Black Belt of Alabama, where Negroes outnumber white residents as much as five to one.

"Women will not be allowed to join," the spokesman said, "because we feel that it is a job for men."

Only white men will be admitted to the rally.

Mississippi State Senator T. M. Williams, a leader in the Mississippi movement, was listed as the principal speaker here Monday. Mississippi council leaders helped organize those in Alabama.

The Selma attorney, however, said that the Alabama councils will not have any connection with the Mississippi groups, and each Alabama council will be independent of the other.

"Each will operate independently, working out its own problems," he declared, "and if a state council is formed, it will be the servant of the county groups and not the governing body in the move."

The Dallas council is ready "to lay its cards on the table," the spokesman said.

"We are not anti-Negro; we only want segregation maintained," he declared, "And we are not vigilantes. We will operate openly and violence is the furtherest thing from the minds of the council members.

"We have lived with Negroes all of these years without trouble, and it is our utmost desire to continue the happy relationship, but on a segregated basis."

The spokesman asserted that the councils have no resemblance to the Ku Klux Klan."

"The two organizations are as different as daylight and dark," he said, "and to even mention them together is a slander of the council, bringing it undeserved detrimental publicity."

Top Scientists Study Ways To Divert School Trouble

NEW YORK, N.Y.—Forty-four of the nation's leading social scientists have formed a committee of consultants which will seek to prevent outbreaks or racial tension in connection with de-segregation of public schools, Thurgood Marshall, director and counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, announced Wednesday.

During the past weeks members of the committee were in Milford, Delaware, and White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, the two communities where overt frictions arose following integration of Negro children in white schools in accordance with the United States Supreme Court ruling of last May. Their purpose was to observe the start and development of community tensions, to analyze the forces at work, and to recommend methods for preventing such disturbances there and elsewhere.

Alfred McClng Lee, chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Brooklyn College, heads the committee of consultants, Marshall said. Robert M. MacIver, professor emeritus of sociology at California is honorary chairman and Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of phychology at City College of New York and research director of the Northside Center for Child Development, is vice-chairman.

The committee has offered its services as a consulting resource to the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Marshall said.

The civil rights lawyer pointed out that the U.S. Supreme Court had quoted the findings of several of these social scientists in its May 17 decision outlawing segregation in the public schools. In effecting the transition to an integrated school system, Mr. Marshall added, we need the assistance of these men and women who have a scientific understanding of the way community processes work.

Professor Lee has defined the need for the consultants' work, Marshall said. He believes that long-standing prejudices, misconceptions, fears and superstitions can only be relinquished through a careful program of reconditioning to new conceptions. He feels it is necessary to work with community processes in developing patterns of cooperation which can have general applicability. This is an area of community action about which there is little precise knowledge and for which new procedures are needed.

The committee's membership consists of social scientists and educators on the faculties of colleges and universities across the ccuntry. They include: James Luther Adams, Meadville Theological School; Gordon W. Allport, Harvard University; Samuel W. Blizzard, Union Theological Seminary; Herbert Blumer, University of Cailfornia; Isadore Chein, New York University; Martin P. Chworowsky, University of Pennsylvania; Carroll D. N.C. Baptists Name Committee To Study Segregation Problem

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C.

CHARLOTTE, Nov. 18 (AP) — The North Carolina Baptist Convention adjourned its 124th annual session here today after adopting a resolution naming a 21-man committee to study the segregation problem.

The resolution recognized the "validity of the spiritual and moral basis" of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision of last May 17 which declared public school segregation unconstitutional. The resolution urged "sound judgment and Christian love" in implementing the decision.

Named on the committee were the presidents of seven Baptist colleges, the heads of three Baptist institutions in the state, and the secretary of State Missions. Convention President Douglas M. Branch also will name 10 ministers and laymen. No date was set for the committee to make a report.

The resolution was couched in milder tones than that presented yesterday by Dowd Davis of Beaufort and the University of North Carolina, president of the Baptist Student Union. The BSU motion called on the convention to act in "utmost haste" in implementing the Supreme Court decision. The BSU commended the decision at its recent convention in Salisbury.

The record 3,084 registered messengers and visitors also heard the Rev. W. W. Finlator of Elizabeth City urge counter measures against race track operators who, he said, are "pressuring" state legislators to legalize pari-mutuel betting at the next session of the General Assembly.

"We are dealing with a shrewd well - financed and determined opponent," Finlator said, "but we can frustrate his purpose by awakening the Christian conscience of our state."

Also adopted was a resolution deploring the forcible closing of a Southern Baptist chapel at Madrid, Spain. The resolution termed the action last July 17 a "serious denial of the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience."

Copies of the resolution will be sent to North Carolina's U.S. senators and congressmen. The State Department will be asked to make a copy available to the U.S. embassy at Madrid, capital of Catholic Spain.

Speakers at the closing session included Dr. Edward H. Pruden, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Washington, D.C., and Dr. C. C. Warren, pastor of the host First Baptist Church.

Dr. Pruden called on North Carolina Baptists to understand better the work of the Baptist World Alliance, a voluntary group formed to promote fellowship and cooperation among Baptists. The World Alliance, which meets every five years, will hold its 40th anniversary meeting in London next year.

Dr. Warren substituted for Dr. James W. Storer, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, whose plane was grounded at Norfolk, Va. Dr. Warren said Baptists have a door of "unparallelled opportunity open to them" These opportunities include the great influx of new industries to the South and its expanded population, he said.

In other actions highlighting the three - day session the convention:

1. Approved a record budget of $2,725,000 for 1955.

2. Authorized three Baptist colleges to borrow nearly 3½ million dollars for building expansion.

3. Approved the recommendation of Wake Forest College trustees that the college postpone until mid-1956 movement to its new campus in Winston-Salem.

4. Re-elected all officers for another one - year term.

5. Gave the green light to a continuing fight against liquor, gambling and sexy literature.

6. Selected Asheville as the 1955 convention site.

Baptists Adopt Racial Report; Wake Forest to Move In 1956

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C.

Sun. 11-21-54

By DANIEL J. COUGHLIN

CHARLOTTE, Nov. 17 (AP) — The North Carolina Baptist Convention today adopted a report calling for "restrained emotions" on the segregation issue. It approved a continuing fight against liquor, legalized gambling and sex in literature.

Wake Forest College trustees, meeting in conjunction with the convention, voted unanimously, meanwhile, to delay until mid-1956 movement of the college to its new campus in Winston-Salem.

More than 2,700 messengers and visitors packed the First Baptist Church as the convention reached the halfway mark in its 124th annual session. They heard a full slate of speakers and a long list of reports. The convention also selected Asheville as the site of the 1955 session, re-elected all officers and approved a record $2,725,000 budget for 1955.

The Committee on Social Service and Civic Righteousness noted in its report that "members of both white and Negro races are involved in bringing about satisfactory relations. . ."

A motion by H. V. Scarborough, a messenger from Raleigh, to debate the report was defeated when the Rev. Douglas M. Branch of Rocky Mount, president, ruled Scarborough's remarks "out of order."

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C.

Scarborough prefaced his remarks by saying that Negroes in North Carolina "do not want the abolishment (sic)" of segregation.

Branch replied that the report did not imply approval or disapproval of segregation by the convention.

Scarborough retorted that the Baptists will have to face the issue "sooner or later" and they "might as well do it now."

Also defeated was a motion from the floor that the portion dealing with the U.S. Supreme Court's decision outlawing public school segregation be stricken.

The committee report, after calling for restrained emotions and stating that "in the South race relations is a biracial matter," declared:

"The Christian citizens of the South, if the spirit of the court's decision is taken seriously, must reaffirm their belief and teaching about man as having infinite worth in the sight of God. The crux of the Christian attitude is to view other humans as being equal worth and thus worthy of equal rights and responsibilities, until those persons prove themselves unfit for rights and responsibilities."

Another motion, proposing that the convention formulate a definite policy regarding integration of the races in its schools, orphanages and homes, was quickly shunted to a committee for study.

The Wake Forest trustees reached their decision quickly after hearing a report from a five-man committee which was named last month to study the question.

Noting that four of the five basic buildings on the new campus would not be ready by the summer of 1955 — the earlier moving date — the trustees recommended that the college now aim at moving by late spring or early summer of 1956 with the formal opening scheduled for September of that year.

Branch headed the full slate of officers re-elected. Others included Dr. D. R. Perry of Durham, 1st vice president; Claud B. Bowen of Greensboro, 2nd vice president; John E. Lawrence of Shelby, 3rd vice president; Malloy A. Huggins of Raleigh, general secretary and treasurer; and U.S. Rep. Charles B. Deane of Rockingham, recording secretary.

On the liquor issue, the Rev. W. P. Biggerstaff of Raleigh, representing the Allied Church League, said he believed public sentiment is shifting to the dry movement. He urged Baptists to support the trend wholeheartedly.

On gambling, W. W. Finlator of Elizabeth City urged the messengers to apply pressure to counteract what he termed the "buttonholing" of state legislators in an effort to have a bill passed which would provide for local option elections on the question of legalized gambling.

The Committee on Social Service and Civic Righteousness lashed out at publications depicting lust and violence. It said they take "a deadly toll of the highest. . .character traits of those who read them."

Earlier, the convention unanimously approved a record $2,725,000 financial goal for 1955. It also authorized three colleges to borrow 8½ million dollars for building expansion.

The borrowing program included three million dollars for Wake Forest for its new campus; $225,000 for new dormitory space at Campbell College; $150,000 for new classrooms at Meredith College; and $50,000 for additional work on the convention's permanent headquarters at Raleigh.

The convention's overall financial program is $450,000 greater than the budget for 1954. Of the total, $1,495,000 will be spent within the state for operating and capital expenditures and the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville. The remainder goes to the Cooperative Program of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Tonight the messengers heard a plea for more foreign missionaries from Dr. Baker James Cauthen of Richmond, Va., executive secretary of the Foreign Mission Board.

Dr. Cauthen, a former missionary to China, called on North Carolina Baptists to help the board double its annual number of missionary appointments.

"We have been appointing about 75 a year," Cauthen said, "but at this rate it will take 15 years to attain the staff of 1,750 we need."

By doubling the rate of appointments, the goal can be reached in half the time, he said.

Referring to the record number of ministerial students now enrolled in Baptist colleges and universities, Cauthen said "there are more than 10,000 of these. . .who should dedicate themselves for world mission service."

INTERRACIAL GROUP- RICHMOND, VA.

Interracial Group Meets To Discuss Court Ruling

Wire & Wod. 11-17-54

BY CARTER JEWEL

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — Political seers and social workers and educators in Virginia and North Carolina are predicting that the U. S. Supreme court decision desegregating public schools will launch a revolution in race relations in these two states and the rest of the South next year.

From statements made by Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, the commission is taking into accounts the views of the citizens of the commonwealth, but it is seeking "legal means" to circumvent the high court's ruling on segregated schools.

Local NAACP branches and the NAACP state conference had representatives at the hearing, setting forth their desire that the state plan at once to desegregate the schools in keeping with the court decision.

Other groups, including several Elk lodges supported by local daughter Elks, local civic, educational, religious, fraternal and PTA groups had representatives at the hearing urging immediate steps to comply with the court's degree when it is handed down. Some whites, also appeared in favor of the court's decision, particularly the ministerial groups.

White ministers of Norfolk, the Virginia Council of churches, an interracial organization; liberal white representatives of Episcopal, Presbyterian and other churches, urged the commission to recommend immediate compliance with the court's ruling.

GENERAL FEELING

One group's statement to the commission that, "We believe that no 'legal means' can be found to circumvent the said (court's) decision," sums up the general feeling expressed by groups urging immediate com pliance with the decision..

The late Gov. William Umstead of North Carolina appointed an interracial committee to study problems related to the court decision. That state, as a whole, has taken a snaer approach to the issues than has Va. The school board of Greensboro went on record a few days after the decision as being in favor of abiding by the law rather than taking steps against it.

Georgia and Mississippi have taken steps to circumvent the court's decision on the issue, and other southern states hope to find a way to retain segregation in the schools, even if they have to abolish public schools in favor of private schools.

Despite the increase of reports on groups expressing opposition to integrated schools, the South is headed for a revolution in the whole area of racial segregation, according to some educational, political and social work leaders.

Desegregation will not cause riots, UNESCO social scientists tells world

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The notion that mixing colored and white children in American schools will cause rioting and bloodshed was scornfully dismissed by social scientists, a publication by UNESCO disclosed Friday.

"The American — Whittling Away the Color Bar" was the title of the 36-page special article devoted largely to the U.S. Supreme Court's May 17 decision branding racial segregation in the nation's public schools as unconstitutional.

— o —

THE ARTICLE, written by Dr. Otto Klineberg, Columbia University psychology professor and a member of UNESCO's and a member of UNESCO' social science department, said:

"Apparently many people believe that somebody else will start the rioting, even though they themselves are prepared to accept the new situation," said an article on the subject.

"There will of course be difficulties in the way of further desegregation, but previous experience indicates that they can be surmounted."

The article will appear in the October issue of the UNESCO Courier, published monthly by the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris and distributed here.

— o O o —

DR. KLINEBERG pointed out that social scientists—psychologists, sociologists and anthropologists — and educators had helped the NAACP fight the school case through the courts.

In the lower courts, he said, many social scientists were pro-NAACP witnesses, and in the Supreme Court, 32 American social scientists signed a statement presented as an appendix to the NAACP brief.

This appendix—based on a questionnaire on school segregation sent to "a large number" of American social scientists—marshaled "an imposing array of evidence" that desegregation usually occurs without violence, Klineberg said.

— o O o —

IT NOTED that such moves and in the United States Armed Forces had gone through "without maior incidents."

The statement reported that 90 per cent of the social scientists questioned felt that segregation was "psychologically detrimental" to the segregated minority and 80 per cent felt it hurt the white majority also.

— o O o —

IN COLORED CHILDREN, Klineberg reported, the experts felt it generated a "generally defeatist attitude," while white children developed an overconfidence from "the unrealistic conviction that they are superior" because of their race.

The statement by the social scientists concluded that fears based on the notion of inborn racial differences in intelligence "are not well founded."

SOUTHERN CHURCHES URGED TO END RACE SEGREGATION

Daily World Dec. 10-6-54

WASHINGTON (A N P)—While Southern politicians continue to "create votes by creating strife," the major Southern church conventions have firmly backed the Supreme court decision declaring racial segregation in schools unconstitutional.

The Southern Regional council, a private research group financed by churches, union and the Ford foundation, has gathered quotes from recent southern church declarations:

Southern Baptist convention: "This Supreme court decisional guarantee of equal freedom is in harmony with the constitutional guarantee of equal freedom to all citizens and with the Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men."

Methodist conferences of North Georgia, North Arkansas, South-west Texas, Florida and Louisiana commended "the principle of the decision."

The Florida Methodists said: "We commend the recent decision of the Supreme court guaranteeing to all American citizens equal educational opportunities, making the law of the land more consistent with the Scriptures."

At the 94th general assembly of the Presbyterian church, U. S., southern delegates commended "the principle of the decision."

The assembly called on "sessions of local churches to admit persons to membership and fellowship in local church on the scriptural basis of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ without reference to race."

anarchy. The Supreme court decision is an example of Americanism at its best, and is a reflection of the seential principals of our Christian faith.

Reporting on the World Council of churches assembly, recently concluded in Evanston, Ill., Bishop Oxnam read the councils proclamation on racial segregation.

At the church meeting, the American university entertained three white and two colored districts of the city, during ceremonies marking "American University Day."

Meanwhile, another Methodist group heard Dr. Leroy Loemker, head, philosophy department, Emory university, state that there is no basis in the New Testament for claims of some politicians that it is Christian to defy the high court's decision.

Bishop Oxnam Takes Stand For Integration

Wash. City Post p. 1 10-22-54

WASHINGTON (ANP) — Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, presiding prelate of the Washington area, in addressing an interracial audience at Metropolitan Methodist church here last week, called the Supreme court decision on segregation an example of Americanism at its best.

Referring to disturbances in the schools of Milford, Del.; Baltimore and Washington, all within his own episcopal area, the bishop stated: "Those who advocate violation of the laws of our land contribute to

Disciples Of Christ Study Segregation

Baptist Messenger Houston Texas

MIAMI— The business session of the International Convention, Disciples of Christ, turned to the Christians concerned in the matter of segregation Saturday morning.

The non-governing body passed a resolution asking the churches and agencies to be directed by the spirit of the master in the problem of segregation.

Proponents of a strongly worded resolution, deploring segregation and asking for definite action, had to yield to the proponents of a milder resolution after much discussion and voting.

Wash. City Post 10-24-54

The resolution which was finally adopted called upon churches, agencies and institutions to re-examine themselves in the light of the implication of Christ's gospel and to initiate and encourage voluntary racially inclusive community groups that might plan for full compliance with the gospel of Christ; as well as plan definite techniques for implementation within their own bodies as the individual situation demands and permits, and as the spirit of the master directs.

The body also urged the churches, agencies and institutions, in the spirit of reconciliation, to teach forbearance, patience and generosity on both sides as they attempt to work out the problems of the Disciples of Christ and racial segregation.

Statement On Segregation Among Reports to Be Submitted at Charlotte

CHARLOTTE, Nov. 15 (AP)—North Carolina Baptists will hear a statement on segregation during the 124th annual session of the Baptist State Convention which opens here tomorrow.

The statement is included in the report of the Committee on Social Service and Civic Righteousness. The committee will report Wednesday.

Three-Day Meet.

The three-day meeting also may hear a request from Wake Forest College for authority to borrow another three million dollars for its new campus near Winston-Salem. The convention—held in Greensboro last year with a record registration of 2,875—approved at that time a three-million dollar loan for dormitories and faculty apartments at the new Wake Forest campus. This year's meeting, the first in Charlotte in six years, may hang up a new attendance record.

The sessions also will take indirect note of a split in the North Rocky Mount Baptist Church. The pastor, charging the Baptist State and Southern conventions were not adhering to strict Baptist theology, withdrew from the conventions and took a majority of the congregation with him. The question arose: Who owned the church building itself? This led to the naming last year of a committee to suggest model by-laws and constitution for a Baptist Church. This committee will report at this meeting.

Raleigh News & Observer

In Financial Terms.

In financial terms, the Baptist churches are a 30 million dollar a year business in North Carolina. The 3,107 churches with membership of 585,482 contributed $29,159,490 to all causes last year. It is expected that reports at this years sessions will push this figure beyond 30 million.

Appropriation of another $50,000 for a state headquarters building in Raleigh also is expected to be considered by the convention delegates, who are known officially as messengers.

Between sessions of the convention, work on the church is carried on by the General Board, composed of 85 members from every one of the 73 Baptist associations in the state. The convention will receive a summary tomorrow of the work of the General Board. And early in the meeting a committee will be named to study the report of the board and make recommendations.

Preliminaries today included meetings of pastors, educational workers and laymen.

AVC Asks Decree By Next Fall

Brief Proposes Boundaries and Voluntary Transfer

by LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—Gradualism in de-segregating public schools is blasted by the American Veterans Committee in a brief filed in the United States Supreme court Friday.

AVC filed its brief as a "friend of the court" in three of the five cases in which arguments are to be heard, beginning December 6, on the questions of how and when the court's decision of last May 17, outlawing racial segregation in the public schools, is to be put into effect.

The brief was filed in the Delaware, Kansas and District of Columbia cases, but not in the South Carolina and Virginia cases. Desegregation of the public schools in Delaware, Kansas and the District of Columbia is well advanced, but South Carolina and Virginia are seeking ways of getting around the Supreme Court decision.

Two Methods Urged

As to how the court should order desegregation proposed, AVC urges two methods: (1) The establishment of geographical boundaries for school districts, and (2) permitting students to remain in the schools they are now attending or voluntarily transferring to another school.

As to when the final decrees shall become effective, AVC urges that school authorities be required to desegregate public schools at the beginning of the next school year, September, 1955, or show good cause why that cannot be done.

The Supreme Court should indicate in its decree, AVC says, the principles underlying any method of desegregation, compliance with which will satisfy the constitutional prohibition against racial segregation.

If the court should remand the cases to lower courts for further proceedings without indicating the 'guide lines" of acceptable desegregation methods, AVC believes prejudiced school boards may force applicants for nonsegregated schooling to the "arduous, tortuous and time-consuming" process of prosecuting a separate suit in which the trial court would take over the administrative duties of the school board.

AVC charges that such a procedure is advocated by the Attorney General of Florida in a brief filed earlier as a "friend of the court" in all five school segregation cases.

Would Lead To Craos

Such a procedure adopted by the Supreme Court, AVC asserts, would, in some areas open the door to a "chaotic pulling-and-tugging" in which the trial courts would be "hard put to insist on applying the law rather than personal judgment concerning the community's 'willingness to accept' the requirement of equal justice under law."

The lode-star of answers to questions of how and when the decision should be put into effect, AVC states, should be inherent in the ruling of May 17:

1. That under the constitution all children of any racial ancestry, including both those now in the public schools and those who may come into the public schools in the future, should and must be permitted to enter the same public schools which children labelled "white" could enter.

2. That no public school authorities may, in their administration of the public school system, impose any distinctions or accord different treatment, by segregation or otherwise, on the basis of race, color, or ancestry.

As to children now in a segregation school, AVC says, the best way to bring the school system into conformity with the Constitution, while at the same time not denying to any child his constitutional rights, is to prescribe geographical school boundaries, based on the student's residential proximity and accessibility to the school, and requiring all students residing within such boundaries to go to that school.

The compulsory school attendance laws, AVC asserts, would cause the school to reflect the composition of the neighborhood. If the neighborhood population is racially mixed, the school will be racially mixed. If the neighborhood population is all-white or all-colored, the school population will have the same hue.

A School Board Decision

The Constitution does not necessarily compel a school board to fix such boundaries or permit or prevent choice of school by the child, AVC points out. If racial factors are not involved, the method used is for the school board, not a court, to determine, AVC states.

The school board may permit children to go to any school within the public school system, as in Baltimore, to require them to go to the nearest school within a certain area.

The second way school boards can give to each child in a school his constitutional right not to be subjected to compulsory racial segregation in public education, AVC says, is by permitting him to continue in the school he is attending or transfer to another school.

If, as in Baltimore, there are no school boundaries, except for students at a few overcrowded schools, the pupil may apply for transfer to any school within the system.

In localities where school boundaries are fixed, his application for transfer would be limited to the school within whose boundaries he resides.

The voluntary transfer method AVC asserts, permits adjustment to desegregation which will lean heavily on the readiness of the community, and, in areas of distrust of voluntary mixing, will permit more gradual desegregation than would use of fixed school boundaries.

The essence of the voluntary method, says AVC, is the child's right to admission to any school. The process of adjustment to a mixed system, it states, will begin and be effected as applications for transfer are made.

Any other method of gradual adjustment to a mixed system is either not permissible or inappropriate under the judicial process, AVC declares.

Worse Than Segregation

In any case, it adds, the court should reject the notion that until such time as the "hard core of public opinion has softened to the extent that there can be at least some measure of acceptance on the part of a majority of the people," school boards may reject applications for equal education.

The quotation is from the Florida brief. Adoption of that proposal, AVC states, would be worse than reinstatement of the "separate but equal" doctrine.

As to children entering school for the first time, assigning them on the basis of normal geographical boundaries would satisfy the Constitution as to them just as it would for children now in school, AVC asserts.

The final decrees of the court should be effective at the beginning of the school term immediately following the date of the decrees, AVC states, with provision for delay for an additional school term where the school boards proves to the lower court that unusual technical or administrative difficulties require such delay.

The period between the issuance of the decrees and the opening of the next school term, AVC suggests, should be ample time to make necessary changes in records and facilities, personnel assignments and other administrative changes to a non-racial basis.

Gradualism Not Necessary

Such administrative adjustments did not prove great obstacles in the desegregation programs of the relatively complex school system of Washington, Baltimore, Topeka, Wilmington, Delaware, and the States of New Jersey, Indiana, Illinois, and many other areas where public school desegregation has been proceeding smoothly, effectively and rapidly.

Gradualism, AVC argues, is not necessary to achieve smooth and effective desegregation.

Gradualism heightens, rather than lessens, tensions, AVC declares, citing the experiences of the District of Columbia Recreation board.

Efforts of the board at gradual and segmentary desegregation, which ended segregation at a dozen or so individual playgrounds, AVC says, visibly heightened racial tensions in Washington as the pro-and anti-segregationists pushed their views.

But after the board last May 18 abruptly abolished all segregation at one time in all facilities, racial tensions in public recreation calmed and ceased, AVC says.

That large numbers of people are affected, that the proportion of colored people may be substantial, and that desegregation is relatively rapid are not major obstacles, AVC maintains. To support this argument, it cites:

1. The recently desegregation of the vast military establishment, as rapidly as administrative adjustments could be made, was effected smoothly.

2. After the Supreme Court decision in the Thompson Restaurant case, racial segregation in the restaurants of Washington, which has a "southern exposure," ended overnight, without friction or disturbance.

3. Shortly after segregation in restaurants was ended, racial discrimination ceased in District of Columbia theaters and all public-ly-run recreational facilities, and the many thousands who now sit and play next to persons of another color "displayed no tremor or qualms.'

4. More than 60,000,000 Americans, through their legislative representatives in twelve states and at least thirty-two cities, have obligated themselves to abstain from racial discrimination in employment. Management has responded favorably, and many unions are extending the principle of non-discrimination, including nonsegregation.

5. Recent surveys show that large percentages of southern workers favor nondiscriminatory employment requirements. With increased industrialization the South is more and more accepting nondiscriminatory and nonsegregated employment.

6. President Eisenhower on November 11, 1953, announced the ending of racial segregation in facilities for civilian workers in Navy Yards in the South.

7. In the field of housing, the Federal Government now refuses home loan guarantees or insurance for property on which racial restrictive covenants have been recorded since February 15, 1950, and racial discriminatory practices are now prohibited by law in eleven states.

In addition, either by municipal ordinance or other action, or by resolution of the local housing authority, racial discrimination in housing is forbidden in twenty four cities including Baltimore, Washington, Wilmington, Delaware, New York, Los Angeles, Boston, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and St. Paul.

8. More than sixty cities have established human relations commissions, and at least fifty southern cities have adopted anti-mask ordinances designed to curb Ku Kluxism.

9. White and colored children already are sitting side by side in church schools in Arkansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia and other areas where segregation was the rule prior to the decision of May 17.

10. All schools on military reservations, run by commanding officers, have been integrated, and all schools on Federal property, run by local school boards, will be integrated by Sept. 1, 1955.

11. At least 116 colleges and professional schools in southern and border states, both public and private, which were previously all-white, are now desegregated.

12. Thousands of public elementary and high schools have also been de-segregated. Virtually every section of Missouri has some form of integration in its public schools.

In Arizona and New Mexico, public school segregation is now a thing of the past. In West Virginia, more than twenty-five colleges and junior colleges, which were formerly all-white, have been fully or partially integrated and threats of violence have been arranged.

In Recent picketing and threats which stopped or reversed integration plans of local school boards at Milford, Delaware, and White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, most colored students have also been fully or partially integrated for all practical purposes and the brief flurry of walkouts and racial extremism by a small proportion of students in Baltimore and truancy by a small proportion of the two teachers in Washington, AVC asserts, "do not undermine" the contention that integration is proposed to undermine out contention that 'gradualism' is unnecessary to colleges as soon as administrative details and facilities can be arranged. smooth integration."

These incidents, AVC says, were

'isolated instances of rowdyism largely inspired by professional hate mongers."

When compared to the overall picture of effective transition in the many areas where desegregation is taking place, AVC states, these incidents "shrink to their proper proportion."

The AVC brief was filed by Phineas Indritz, national counsel for AVC.

OES favors immediate school integration

Afro-American P. 8
Sat. 11-27-54

BALTIMORE

A standing vote favoring immediate school integration throughout the nation was taken Tuesday by Myra Grand Chapter Order of Eastern Star, Prince Hall Masons.

The action was taken at a public session of the three-day 58th annual meeting of the organization, at Metropolitan Baptist Church, Mosher and Mc[illegible]

With Grand Master Willard W. Allen and Grand Worthy Matron Annie E. Williams presiding, the meeting featured as guest speakers Carl Murphy, president of the AFRO - AMERICAN Newspapers and Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, president of Morgan State College.

DR. JENKINS told the assembly of 600 delegates and visitors that "Each of you has a position of leadership in your community. You and the other leaders must assume an active role in your community to make school integration work.

"It is necessary that a colored representative be on every committee of planning and procedure. It must be a representative who will stand up on his hind feet and not the type who goes along with his hat in his hand.

"Integration is a two-way street. We have got an important job as parents in this situation.

THE COLORED pupil, to make a favorable impression has got to be clean always, and must watch his behavior. He can't be as boisterous as heretofore; he must study harder and stand up in his school work.

"It is our responsibility to help these youngsters see their duty."

Mr. Murphy urged the group to stand up for immediate integration rather than "the gradual change" as advocated by Maryland's Attorney - General Edward D. E. Rollins in his brief submitted to the Supreme Court.

—o O o—

SUPPORTING the NAACP stand, Mr. Murphy pointed out that "on Nov. 15, Thurgood Marshall filed an order that we hope is a final brief or argument in the Supreme Court on segregation in public schools.

"In that argument he makes two points which I believe are important to us here today:

"First. That the Supreme Court has no power to integrate the schools gradually because it has no precedent for it. Therefore, lacking power it should integrate the public schools at once.

"Second. If it should conclude that it does have power or assume the power to order integration gradually, it should order some part of the integration program to being at once and be completed by Sept. 1955, or 1956 at the latest.

ADA Requests Post and School Strike Probe

Herald

Americans for Democratic Action's national board yesterday urged Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., to investigate the current outbreak of parent strikes against school integration to see if they are of "common origin and in violation of Federal civil rights statutes.

The ADA said parents in certain cities of Delaware, Maryland and West Virginia "have taken the law into their own hands in an attempt to enforce their prejudices on the community."

Washington

The political action group declared: "There is evidence that this defiance of the law is the result of a carefully planned conspiracy organized and led by a few people, typical of those who attempt to set group in hate against group."

The ADA leaders called upon education and civil authorities to enforce the Supreme Court's recent ruling that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional. They said "vigilante interference" cannot be tolerated.

Some 65 ADA leaders from all over the country are holding a two-day closed meeting at the Hotel Willard this weekend. Co-chairmen are Arthur Schlesinger, jr., Harvard professor of history, and James E. Doyle, Madison, Wis., lawyer.

In a second press announcement, the ADA praised Vice President Richard M. Nixon for a speech in Wilmington, Del., last Thursday in which he said equality in education and employment must be practiced in America to prove the sincerity of our democracy before the rest of the world.

Nixon is chairman of a special group named by President Eisenhower to eliminate racial discrimination in firms operating under Government contracts.

British Church Leader Calls For End Of Race Bias

Daily Worker

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—(ANP)—Canon L. J. Collins, St. Paul's cathedral, London, continues to speak out for the cause of Africans. His latest speech included an appeal for an "all-out" campaign against color discrimination by the church in Great Britain.

Canon Collins was addressing a congregation which included delegates to the conference of the World Association of Parliamentarians for World government.

He stated in part:

"I appeal to the archbishop of Canterbury and the bishops of the Church of England to declare publicly their support for Luthuli, the president. and Sisulu, the secretary, of the African National congress (Union of South Africa), at present suffering persecution.

"I appeal to them to ask the churches in South Africa to abolish at once any racial discrimination, even if it means a loss of white congregations.

"Let them ask us in Britain to be ready to make to the South African churches any financial loss that may be involved in following the policy propounded at the assembly of the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Ill., urging member churches to renounce and work for the abolition of all forms of segregation or discrimination, to its practical end.

Presbyterians Hit Segregation Hard

AUSTIN — The Texas Presbyterian (U.S.) Synod completely knocked out racial segregation in a series of decisive blows which took the form of policy actions adopted by the 99th session of the Synod held Sept. 1416 at Presbyterian McRanch Assembly.

By adopting with virtual unanimity recommendations from its Christian Education and Christian Social Relations Committees the Synod affirmed that "enforced racial segregation is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics".

Then the body went on to swift action, urging trustees and officers of local churches to admit persons Synod to adopt policies for operating these institutions and agencies on an unsegregated basis, asking the Presbyteries to urge session of local churche to admit persons to membership and fellowship in the local church "on the Scriptural basis of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ without reference to race," and instruc ing the executive committee of Christian Education "to bring any conrary practices on its part into line with our existing beliefs".

The measure passed without noticeable opposition.

A light scattering of negative votes was registered on the first test vote declaring enforced racial segregation to be discriminatory and un-Christian. After that all of the othtr votes seemed to be unanimous. The first policy statement also declared that "the Church, in its relationships to cultural patterns should lead rather than follow."

The Rev. R. W. Jablonowski of Fort Worth presented the recommendations of the Christian Education Committee and the Rev. Robert H. Bullock of Houston handled the report of the Christian Social Relations Committee.

The Synod voted to make dissolution of the Texas-Mexican Presbytery and integration of the Latin churches into the geographical presbyteries effective Jan. 1, 1955, rather than a year later as previously planned, favoring Presbyterian reunion.

The regular meeting was changed from September to July on account of the new fiscal year beginning Jan. 1. The meeting will be held in Waco July 1921. A budget of $1,009,415 was voted for Assembly's and Snod's causes.

Va. Presbyterians back desegregation

DANVILLE, Va. (ANP) — The 66th annual session of the Presbytery of Southern Virginia convened here recently and adopted a resolution endorsing the May 17 Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

Drafted by the organization's social education committee, the resolution read in part:

"Whereas, we have the intelligence of the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court of May 17, to the effect that the practice of segregation in the public schools on the basis of race is in violation of our national constitution.

"Be it resolved that this presbytery is in hearty approval of this just and far reaching decision, long overdue, to give equal rights to all the citizens of our great republic. . . ."

Oxnam Flays Integration Resistance

Disobedience Held Subversive, Worse Than Red Betrayal Of Government

By Kenneth Dole
Staff Reporter

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam yesterday declared that resistance to the Supreme Court decision on school integration is "subversive" and "does more to undermine democratic government than any traitor Communist can do."

A Communist can be dealt with but a person who waves the flag while disobeying the law is a more difficult subject, the Bishop said in a talk at the Methodist Building, 100 Maryland ave. ne.

Such a person, he said, "apparently doesn't know that disobedience to the law leads to anarchy."

"Resort to violence and refusal to obey the law," he added, "is subversive, and does more to undermine democratic government than any traitor Communist can do. We can deal with him as a traitor; but it poses something of a problem to know how to deal with a man who dares to carry the Stars and Stripes in a parade of persons who march to repudiate the law of the land and to reject the clear teaching of the Christian faith."

Calling segregation sinful, Bishop Oxnam praised the court decision as a "historic utterance" and said "it has done more to bring back to this beloved land the respect and gratitude of the peoples of the world than any statement since the historic utterances of our leaders that led to the adoption of the United Nations Charter."

The reaction to the decision "has been heartening beyond expression," he said. "But there are those among us who advocate disobedience of the law, who stand ready to use force to prohibit its execution."

He cautioned against hasty action in support of the decision. "Wisdom and patience must characterize loyal citizens," he said, "but unwisdom and precipitate action are unforgivable. These are the practices of the revolutionist."

The Washington Bishop spoke at the rededication of the renovated Simpson Memorial Chapel in the Methodist Building. In his address, "The Valley of Decision," he also remarked on foreign policy, McCarthyism and private exploitation of atomic energy.

On foreign policy:

"Within his own party, there are those who would undermine the President with recourse to isolationism, with threats of withdrawal from the United Nations, with crude pronouncements that offend sensitive peoples, and with practices that alienate our friends in the free world.

"The Secretary of State drives himself relentlessly to the end that the free world may be sufficiently strong and sufficiently united to stay the hand of those who would jeopardize the peace and thus give us the time necessary for conference and the solution of problems."

Warning against encroachments on the public domain by "big enterprise," he said:

"Big enterprise is not necessarily bad enterprise, but enterprise that would take over the results of the research that led to the release of atomic energy, forgetting that the people paid for the research, enterprise that would take over the forests and the oil reserves, is bad enterprise; and unless we are careful someone will be wishing to take over the National Parks and operate them for their own special privilege."

One of the most articulate opponents of McCarthyism, the Bishop commented simply on the Watkins report:

"Six Senators, faced with a difficult and politically explosive ask, nonetheless, in loyalty to principle and to the best interests of the Nation, have brought in a report, calm but challenging, and the Senate of the United States stands in the valley of decision."

The Simpson Chapel honors a Methodist Bishop who was a friend of Lincoln and delivered his funeral oration.

"Its strategic location makes it an ideal place of worship for the Capitol Hill community," according to Dr. Caradine R. Hooton, Executive Secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance, which owns the building. Midweek services to which al lare invited regardless of faith are planned for each Wednesday noon.

The chapel will be open for meditation and prayer at all times.

South's Church Conventions Strongly Back Desegregation

By MILT FREUDENHEIM
Of Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Major Southern church conventions have taken strong positions backing up the Supreme Court decision declaring racial segregation in schools unconstitutional.

Southern Regional Council, a private research group financed by churches, unions and the Ford Foundation, has rounded up the following quotes from recent Southern church declarations:

Southern Baptist Convention: ". . . this Supreme Court decision is in harmony with the constitutional guarantee of equal freedom to all citizens and with the Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men."

The Baptists affirmed "our belief in the public school system" and urged that the schools "place in our educational program shall not be impaired" during racial integration adjustments.

Methodist Conferences of Florida, North Georgia, Louisiana, North Arkansas and Southwest Texas "commended" the decision and called for community leadership.

Said the Florida Methodists: "We commend the recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court guaranteeing to all American citizens equal educational opportunities, making the law of the land more consistent with the Scriptures . . ."

Southern Presbyterians at the 94th General Assembly, Presbyterian Church, U. S., commended "the principle of the decision."

The Assembly called on "sessions of local churches (to) admit persons to membership and fellowship in the local church on the Scriptural basis of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ without reference to race."

Roman Catholic Bishops' Catholic Committee of the South republished a 1953 statement urging: "Let us Catholics, true to our convictions, set the pattern."

The San Antonio Archdiocese opened parochial schools to all children regardless of race. Richmond, Va., Catholic high schools followed suit, as did other Catholic school systems.

A Christian Life and Work Conference of the Southeastern (Fourth) province of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. endorsed the court decision as "just and right."

Southern B'nai B'rith, one of the oldest and largest Jewish groups, called for "orderly and legal adjustment consistent with both religious and democratic ideals."

Presidents of state councils of churchwomen and Christian social relations chairwomen from 15 Southern and border states resolved:

"We feel we are impelled to promote a Christian society in which segregation is no longer a burden upon the human spirit."

Desegregation Will Not Be 'Uneventful'

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER:

I read the editorial "Delaware Tried It" with much concern. When the Supreme Court declared that segregated schools were unconstitutional the people who are mentally honest knew that the decision only pointed up the beginning of a process of adjustment. They knew that in the process of adjustment there would be those who would conscientiously put forth efforts to determine the more practical ways and means of making the adjustments indicated in the decision. Those who understand the society in which we live knew that there would be those who would take the responsibility of calling for and holding to the law in the adjustment.

No person capable of thinking clearly expected desegregation "uneventfully." Man has never accepted great changes, not even for his own survival, "uneventfully. But progress has been made because there were enough wise and courageous people who were faithful in their efforts to find that better way of life in spite of discouraging events. We go on hoping for peace, but knowing certain eventualities will face us.

If someone had made a faithful effort to carry out the "separate but equal" decision we might not have had the agitation for the May 17 decision.

When are we going to have the Christian fortitude and the democratic firmness to make the necessary effort to correct the wrongs in this all-important area of our great society? Shall we go on digging chasms of misunderstanding and fanning the flames of bitter hatreds? Shall we go on in dumb resignation to eventualities that serve as road blocks to righteous adjustments?

Desegregation is not going to be "uneventful." We have taught every generation group-hatred. We still teach the younger generations to hate. We teach them in speeches, in newspapers, in the classrooms, and sometimes from the pulpit. In teaching Christian attitudes toward other groups we have failed Christ miserably.

We stand in judgement before God and before the world. Our ideals have been written across the map of the world in blood. How long are we going on in a state of contradiction to these ideals for which every group has given some of it's best blood to perpetuate?

The path of least resistance would be perhaps, to open the universities and colleges of Alabama to Negroes. The religious college like our own Huntington College (I call this college our own because it influences, one way or the other, the entire life of the community) should be open to Negroes.

There is a soft tender side to this monster—desegregation. We can find it if we have the will to do it.

AMEZ Bishop Warns Negro Leaders Against Compromise On Segregation In Resolution

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (ANP). — Resolutions urging Negro leaders not to "enter into any collusion or compromise" in affecting the Supreme Court decision on segregation, were adopted by the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church during its recent week-long convention here.

The resolutions, submitted by the bishops of the denomination, called the court's decision "nothing short of devine miracle..."

The warning to the leaders was contained in a statement which read:

"We would also press it upon those of our leadership who have the desire to get along with neighbors peacefully in race relations that they do not for the mere sake of temporary peace and falsely professed good will enter into any collusion or compromise in applying this great decision of law to the local communities, and by no means should we in any place permit ourselves to become adjusted to voluntary segregation, professing that we think it necessary to keep the peace."

The convention elected the following officers:

John S. Tally, Detroit, president; C. M. Palmer, Durham, N C., vice-president; Dr. Victor J Tulane, Washington, executive secretary, and Arthur E. Brooks Washington, treasurer.

Segregation A "Spiritual, Moral Issue" Say White Ga. Baptists

Daily World

AUGUSTA, Ga.— (SNS) — The white Georgia Baptist Convention adopted a carefully worded recommendation of Atty. H. G. Dukes that the convention urge individual Baptists to meet the desegregation problem "calmly and dispassionately."

Another official speaker at the convention was open in his attack on segregation. Rev. Henry Buchanan of Shellman called the issue a spiritual and moral question and called upon the messengers to speak out against it. He said:

A SPIRITUAL, MORAL ISSUE

"It is not a political question, concerning Talmadge, but a spiritual and moral issue concerning Jesus Christ." This remark came in reply to a statement made earlier by Hugh Grant of Augusta, attending the meeting only in a visitor status, who said the adoption of Mr. Dukes' report "directly repudiates Gov. Talmadge's program." He was later ruled out of order since he was not an official messenger of the convention and could be heard only as a visitor.

Rev. Buchanan, in his anti-segregation speech continued:

"If we don't speak out against segregation, then we must admit that we are afraid that when we get home we will be fired for making a decision that was not popular with the thinking of our people."

"NOT STRONG ENOUGH"

Rev. Henry J. Stokes of Macon praised the report, with a strong "misgiving that it might not be strong enough." Dr. James P. Wesberry of Atlanta's Morningside Baptist Church referring to the Grant speech, said "the issue shouldn't be brought out now."

Reporting for the Social Service Commission, Mr. Dukes asked for prayers "to God to guide us in our thinking, that in the end there should be justice and brotherly love." It continued, "we should urge all Christians and positive thinking and planning so that all people, of all races, would have equal rights as God would have it."

"The important thing is that we start out in the right spirit, in a spirit of Christ, and that we act in accordance with the will of God," it stated. The report suggested that Christians "try to find the answers as each issue presents itself."

Since each church is an autonomous body, the convention merely recommends actions to the individual churches it represents.

Mr. Dukes explained that his report did not ask the group to accept or reject the Supreme Court decision banning public school segregation. The ruling is a judicial fact.

However, "we have had no directive from the court," he said, "We will meet it when we come to it."

ALABAMA METHODISTS VOTE TO CONTINUE SEGREGATION IN SOUTH

Black Dispatch P.5

Ignore Plea of Official Representing Southern Regional Council B Big Vote

LAUDS INDEPENDENT NEGRO CHURCH

Oklahoma City Okla

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (ANP) — Over vigorous opposition, the old guard in the North Alabama Methodist conference, which convened last week at Birmingham-Southern college, forced through the adoption of a resolution favoring racial segregation.

The proposal passed by an estimated 3-2 or 4-5 vote over the opposition of the Rev. Dan Whitsett, pastor, First Methodist church, Sylacauga and Rev. Denman, Nashville.

Rev. Whitsett, chairman, Alabama division, Southern Regional council, argued that the pro-segregation resolution "will bring disrespect on our conference."

In opposing the resolution, Rev. Denman, one-time president of the five-man Jefferson county board of education, declared:

"I want this great body to be loyal to the Supreme court of the U. S. the same as they would be to any other governmental agency."

Rev. Whitsett pleaded:

"I hope and pray that this matter will be defeated."

But the majority of the 1,000 delegates sided with Rev. G. M. Davenport, pastor, Trinity Methodist church, Tuscaloosa, who charged that the school freedom issue was explosive beyond words."

"We have not arrived at the day when we are ready for mixed schools," he argued. "We are not ready for that day and we won't be ready for some time to come.

Lashing out at critics of the segregation resolution, Rev. Davenport described them as "the little minority who are throwing it up to us that we are not Christians.

Bitterly, he asserted, "They are the reformers who put their arms around the Negroes and want to bring them into the fold."

Answering this line of argument, Rev. Paul Clem, minister, McCoy Methodist church, suggested:

"I am not proud of the mistreatment of Negroes at the hands of whites. We have not given the Negro people anything like equal school facilities."

The resolution adopted said in part:

"The North Alabama conference has taken just pride in the educational advancement and progress which our state, county and city educators have brought about for the thousans of Negro children and youths. We are proud of the elegant school buildings and equipment which our leaders have provided for our Negroes.

"We are proud of the Negro superintendents, principals, supervisors and teachers who have manned these schools. It is therefore our honest conviction that it is for the good of both races that separate schools be maintained.

"We therefore are thoroughly committed to a central jurisdiction for our Negro members. The independent Negro churches who handle their own affairs are in the ascendancy among the Negroes.

"Independent Negro Methodist churches and independent Negro Baptist churches comprise the great majority of Negro church members in the U. S. Hence, we believe it is the interest of the Negro church members of the Methodist church that they continue on a central jurisdiction."

Ala. Methodists Laud Supreme Court Ruling In School Case

Record P-1 Birmingham, Ala.

DECATUR, Ala. — Members of the Central Alabama Methodist Conference have been urged "to give full support to the implementation" of the May 17 ruling of the United States Supreme Court banning the segregated school system.

Some 400 ministers and laymen delegates to the five-day 79th annual meeting of the conference Sept. 15-19 unanimously adopted a resolution September 18 highly commending the Supreme Court's May 17 anti-Jim Crow ruling and also declared that "Segregation ..... is human persecution."

"We know by painful experience, the statement said, "that segregation in education or any other area of human life is a complete evil."

The Rev. J. E. Lowery, of Mobile, pastor of the Warren Street Methodist Church, presented the statement and resolution which was sponsored by the Board of Social and Economic Relations. Other members of the committee were the Rev. Ernest D. Ridgeway, pastor of historic Morning Star Methodist Church of Bessemer; the Revs. C. L. Moore, E. C. Benford, H. V. Richardson, C. J. Booker, pastor of Enon Methodist Church and B. N. Smith.

The conference, presided over by Bishop J. W. E. Bowen of Atlanta, Georgia, presiding prelate of the Atlantic Coast Area of the Methodist Church, was held at King Memorial Methodist Church.

One week earlier, the North Alabama Methodist Conference, meeting at Birmingham-Southern College, September 11 modified its stand on segregated schools which two days before, Sept. 8, it had flatly favored racial segregation.

However, the revised position of the North Alabama Methodist Conference read, in part:

"The Supreme Court of our nation issued a unanimous decision that segregation of the races in our public school system is unconstitutional."

"This ruling of the Supreme Court upsets the traditions and customs of the people in many states in our nation. In seeking to conform to this decision, our state, county and city boards of education will face many problems.

"We not only call upon our people to obey the laws of our nation, state, county and municipalities, in order that our democracy may live, but also to be prayful and to show Christian patience as all of us work together for the good of all men."

The text of the statement and resolution of the Central Alabama Methodist Conference read:

"These are deeply troubled times. Hatreds, jealousies, and suspicions are rife in nearly every part of the world. Wars present and wars we fear may come and threaten us with widespread disaster if not the total destruction of our civilization.

"Yet in the midst of all these troubles Christians continue to hope for a better day. We look anxiously to the Church as the one force that can lead us into brotherhood, mutual helpfulness and peace. Thus Christians today have become the keepers of the hopes of humanity. It therefore becomes our obligation as Christians to do whatever we can to promote understanding and peace among men. We certainly cannot afford to do anything that will increase bitterness and suspicion among the people of the world that will surely contribute to the tragedy of our times."

"We know by painful experience that segregation in education or in any other area of human life is a complete evil. It has done no good and it has done much harm. It prevents men from seeing themselves as brothers. It brings humiliation and handicap to those who are segregated. It breeds conceit and guilt in the hearts of the perpetrators, and it breeds sorrow and resentment in the hearts of its victims."

"Regardless of statements to the contrary, wherever segregation is practiced it is human persecution. It arises out of a false sense of superiority, and its purpose is always to maintain some ill-gotten social and/or material advantages."

"Specifically, segregation in the field of public education is a senseless waste of state and federal funds and resources."

"It prevents the children of America from knowing and appreciating each other, and thereby from developing the unity of spirit essential to our nation's growth and security."

"We also know by painful experience, that the phrase "separate but equal" is a meaningless shibboleth, unattainable in practice and morally unjustifiable. It is a contradiction in terms. The demand for segregation comes from those who feel that others are unequal and who want to push their "unequal" brothers away."

"We are, therefore, grateful that the Supreme Court of these United States, by unanimous decision, has declared that the practice of racial segregation in the public schools in our nation is unconstitutional. We feel that the Court has undertaken to remove a vicious cancer from our national life."

"We feel, that in time, as we are able to think without passion we will all see the wisdom and good of the decision, and we will accept it willingly. Surely in the face of all our present troubles, this is no time for the blind defense of ancient prejudices, or for spiteful schemes to circumvent the law of the land. Our nation has enough lawlessness, already."

"We are called to venture into larger areas of brotherhood and good will. The end of our adventure will be greater nation and a more victorious Church."

"We therefore submit the following resolutions:

"E. We do hereby highly commend the Supreme Court of these United States for this just and historic pronouncement. We call upon the members of this Conference to give their full support to the implementation of this decision in their respective communities."

"2. Further, we do hereby call upon all disciples of Jesus Christ everywhere to join us in the support of the implementation of this decision which surely promotes the Christian principles of brotherhood and human dignity. Let us lay aside the weights of prejudice and hatred which beset us and preach and live the whole gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

North Alabama Methodists Favor Racial Segregation

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Over vigorous opposition, the old guard in the North Alabama Methodist Conference, covening Sept. 8 at Birmingham Southern College forced through the adoption of a resolution favoring racial segregation.

The proposal passed by an estimated 3 to 2 or 5 to 4 vote over the gallant opposition of the Rev. Dan Whitsett, pastor of First Methodist Church of Sylacauga and the Rev. Denman of Nashville.

Rev. Whitsett, who is chairman of the Alabama Division of Southern Regional Council of Atlanta, Ga., argued that the pro-segregation resolution "will bring disrespect in our conference."

In opposing the Jim Crow resolution, the Rev. Denman, who at one time served as president of the five-man Jefferson County Board of Education, declared: "I want this great body to be loyal to the Supreme Court of the United States the same as they would be to any other governmental agency.

Fervently, the Rev. Whitsett pleaded: "I hope and pray that this matter will be defeated.

But a majority of the 1,000 delegates sided with the Rev. G. M. Davenport, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, Tuscaloosa, who charged that the school freedom issue was "explosive beyond words."

The resolution adopted said in part:

"Independent Negro Methodist churches and independent Negro Baptist churches comprise the great majority of Negro church members in the United States. Hence, we believe it is the interest of the Negro church members of the Methodist Church that they continue on a central jurisdiction."

Meantime on another pro-segregation front, State Senator Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County, told members of the Birmingham Rotary Club Sept. 8 a workable save-school-segregation plan had been forward to Gov. Gordon Persons by a committee of legislators and lawyers.

He said that legislative segregation research committee had recommended that the legislature delete that section of the State Legislature requiring the state to support a public school system. Mr. Boutwell did not indicate what machinery would be suggested for providing free schooling for Alabama children.

State Senator Boutwell is chairman of an interim legislative commitee seeking ways to hang on to the U. S. Supreme Court outlawed segregated school system. Serving with him are Sens. Herbert Byars of Greene and J. Miller Bonner of Wilcox, and Reps. Robert Kendall, Coneuch; Jack Gallalee, Mobile and Ira Pruitt, Sumter.

At the request of the leigslative committee, the Alabama Bar Association named to help with the legal problems: Joseph F. Johnson and J. Kirkman Jackson, both of Birmingham; Norman Harris, Decatur, and Gessener T. McCorvey, Mobile.

On a third keep-segregated-schools front, Publisher Tom Abernethy, Republican candidate for the Alabama governorship, suggested that the Legislature be called into special session to workout a plan to save the segregated school system.

Methodists OK Race Division In Schoolrooms

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 8 (AP) — About 1,000 delegates to the North Alabama Methodist Conference today adopted a resolution supporting segregation in schools.

"It is our honest conviction that it is for the good of white and negroes that separate schools be maintained for the two races," the resolution said.

Meeting at Birmingham - Southern College, the delegates adopted the action unanimously.

The resolution read in part:

"The North Alabama Conference has taken a just pride in the educational Capital Advancement and progress which our state, county and city educators have brought about for the thousands of Negro children and youths. We are proud of the elegant school buildings and equipment which our educational leaders have provided for our Negroes.

"We are proud of the Negro superintendents, principals, supervisors and teachers who have manned these schools. It is therefore our honest conviction that it is for the good of both races that separate schools be maintained."

The resolution also said, "The independent Negro churches who handle their own affairs are in the ascendancy among the Negroes. Independent Negro Methodist churches and independent Negro Baptist churches comprise the great majority of Negro church members in the United States.

"Hence, we believe it is in the interest of the Negro members of the Methodist Church that they continue as a separate central jurisdiction."

SEGREGATION DECRIED BY EPISCOPAL GROUP

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20—A resolution urging the Episcopal Church to "witness against all forms of racial segregation and discrimination" was adopted today by the Twenty-fifth Synod of the Episcopal province of Washington.

"We decry all forms of racial segregation and call upon the members of our churches in all of their public and private contacts to correct this injustice to our brothers in Christ," the resolution said.

The synod, which represents thirteen dioceses in five states and the District of Columbia, will vote tomorrow on a resolution calling for support of the Supreme Court's decision against segregation in public schools.

The Rev. George Tittman of Arlington, Va., chairman of the synod's Department of Christian Social Relations, presented both resolutions.

At today's business session, the synod elected Ogle R. Singleton, patent attorney and secretary of the Washington, D. C., diocese, as its first layman delegate to the National Council of the denomination.

A resolution protesting against the choice of Honolulu for the triennial general convention next fall was tabled. The last general convention approved Houston, Tex., as the next meeting place, but the question of segregation arose when plans were being prepared and presiding Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill then decided on Honolulu.

Cook replied: "We'd have no need for a state school superintendent to supervise private schools. Dr. Collins is an honorable man and a good friend of mine. The state is deeply indebted to him for his contribution to the educational system."

Dr, Collins, addressing 1,000 teachers at the Tenth District GEA meeting in Athens, declared: I'd rather lose my job than see this diabolical amendment go through."

The teachers cheered when GEA Secretary Harold Saxon paid tribute to Collins.

Speaking in the University Fine Arts Building, Collins asked: "Have you forgotten Sept. 1, 1942, when the politicians caused the University System of Georgia to be taken off the accredited list? Are we going to sit idly by again and see both the colleges and the public schools marked off the accredited list? If we are then it will be a dark day in the history of Georgia."

Griffin, who was in Savannah for a television appearance, said there would be no difference in the operation of the schools if the plan passes. The same teachers would be employed at salary scales equal to, or even higher than those currently prescribed, he said.

"Do not believe any statements to the effect that segregation can be maintained in Georgia under the present laws of the state," Griffin warned. "Either we must obey the terms of the decision of the United States Supreme Court, or we must devise ways and means whereby we can maintain segregation legally in our schools outside the terms of the court's ruling."

Former Federal Judge Neil Andrews, addressing the Dalton Civitan Club, likened voting for the amendment to "jumping off a bridge in the middle of the night without knowing what's beneath." He said the amendment would knock out the constitutional provision earmarking gas taxes for road purposes, and thereby permit highway and all other funds to be used for educational purposes.

Clergy's Entry in School Fight Stems From Belief Moral Issue Is at Stake

By M. L. ST. JOHN

MOST UNUSUAL new developments in the fight over the "private school amendment" were entries of the Atlanta Baptist and Methodist ministers into the dispute. Preachers attempt to steer clear of politics, unless a moral issue is at stake. They think such an issue hangs in the balance now. Both Methodist and Baptist ministerial groups here are urging defeat of Amendment No. 4 on Nov. 2.

The Baptist preachers fear it will tear down the principle of separation of state and church. The Methodists say it will not solve the segregation problem, but, on the other hand, it will create many new problems. One of these new problems would be the one the Baptists fear—that state tax money will be used to send children to church schools, thereby violating the American principle of separation of church and state.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and Durwood Pye, attorneys who will play leading roles in drafting laws preparing to transfer Georgia education from public to private schools in event the amendment passes, have given their opinions time and time again that the change—if it ever takes place—will not break down separation of church and state. They declared that another provision of the Constitution prohibits state funds from being used to send children to church schools. They said the Legislature will not make grants to children to attend church schools. In licensing the private schools which a child must attend in order to get state grants, the General Assembly will refuse to license a church school, they asserted.

NULLIFY ALL PROVISIONS

Former Federal Judge Neil Andrews disputed all this. He said the new provision will nullify all other provisions of the State Constitution. He cited the language of the proposed provision which states "notwithstanding all other provisions of this Constitution" the Legislature may make grants of tax funds to citizens in discharge of all obligations to provide an education. He declared the state cannot exercise any licensing and supervising control over private schools, without coming back under the United States Supreme Court segregation decision. Once the state gives a child money for education purposes, it cannot tell the child which school to attend—be it church, mixed racial, Georgia school, European school, or otherwise, Andrews contended.

M. L. St. John's column appears regularly in the daily Atlanta Constitution.

The Baptist ministers had read the conflicting opinions of these learned lawyers. The varying opinions did nothing to quiet their fears of mixing state and church. They considered a resolution to pray over the amendment. They decided to do more. So they passed a resolution against the amendment. The action was unanimous.

NO SIMPLE THING

Action by the Methodist ministers, likewise, was unanimous. The Methodists, also, had been unconvinced by the arguments that the amendment is a simple thing.

Atty. Gen. Cook admitted that the state, under the new court decision, cannot force a school to be segregated even if it is a private school. He said he assumed the private operators would run segregated schools, however. Attorney Pye declared the state can force segregation in private schools by licensing one as a white school and the other as a colored school.

Aside from other things involved, it is of paramount importance to know whether the state can license, inspect, accredit, and regulate private schools without falling under the provisions of the court decision. Unfortunately the answer to that question cannot come before election day. If the amendment passes, the Legislature will attempt to set up such safeguards. Undoubtedly, these will be challenged in court suits.

Then the answer will come.

Most healthy sign to date over the amendment dispute is that it is being conducted on a fairly high plane. There have been some bad labels used. There have been some broad implications made by each side. However, the opposing leaders have been able to share the same platforms and debate the issues of the amendment without tempers flaring and without name-calling.

The ministers said that while the amendment is only permissive, its passage "would be interpreted as approval of an idea which we deem to be radical, revolutionary and destructive of a precious heritage, and of the welfare of our children, youth and adults." They said the amendment will create very serious problems, rather than solve any.

FACULTY MEMBERS

Methvin said the Extension Service of the University of Georgia will be ended if the university becomes a private school. The county agents are members of the university faculty, but they are paid largely from federal grants which would not be available to private schools. Loss of the agricultural agents would be the first step in what Chancellor Harmon Caldwell described as the "disintegration" of the Univeristy System, Methvin commented.

Supt. Collins quoted "able consttutional lawyers" as stating the law now on the books to withhold funds from school systems which integrate the races would make it possible to maintain public segreated schools. The amendment would completely disrupt Georogia's public education system, and establishment of private schools would be a death blow to democracy at the grass roots, Collins said.

Griffin said he is declaring his intentions now so there will be "no misrepresentations" and no "disillusionments." He urged passage of the amendment, stating it will enable him to preserve segregation without cutting off school funds.

Peters pleaded for the amendment in a talk to the State Board of Education, meeting informally in Americus. He called it a "last-ditch stand" to preserve segregation. Peters declared he does not believe the Georgia Education Association, which is fighting the amendment, favors mixing the races, however.

Roy Harris of Augusta, member of the Board of Regents and the Georgia Education Commission, predicted the private school plan will destroy the University System. The state will have to divide funds now going to the public colleges with students in privately-owned and church owned colleges, he said.

Southern Church Group Backs End To Segregation

WASHINGTON — (ANP) - While Southern politicians continue to "create votes by creating strife," the major Southern church conventions have firmly backed the Supreme court decision declaring racial segregation in schools unconstitutional.

The Southern Regional council, a private research group financed by churches, union and the Ford foundation, has gathered quotes from recent southern church declarations:

Southern Baptist convention: "This Supreme court decisional guarantee of equal freedom in harmony with the constitutional guarantee of equal freedom to all citizens and with the Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men."

Methodist conferences of North Georgia, North Arkansas, Southwest Texas, Florida, and Louisiana commended "the principle of the decision."

The Florida Methodist said:

"We commend the recent decision of the Supreme court guaranteeing to all American citizens equal educational opportunities, making the law of the land more consistent with the Scriptures."

At the 94th general assembly of the Presbyterian church, U.S., southern delegates commended "the principle of the decision."

The assembly called on "sessions of local churches to admit persons to membership and fellowship in local church on the scriptural basis of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, without reference to race."

Churches Not In Sympathy With Hate Mob

BALTIMORE, Md.—Opponents of integration in the city's public schools who caused nation wide attention to be focused on Baltimore last week by picketing several of the schools and making attempts at violence found no comfort from church groups.

The Council of Churches and Christian Education of Maryland-Delaware issued a call on October 1st to the clergymen of Baltimore to urge picketing parents to cease their "self-defeating movement and to join with the rest of our citizenry in an earnest effort to maintain law and order in Baltimore."

Especially strong statements were issued by Superintendents Norman L. Trott and J. Luther Neff of the Baltimore South and East Districts of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Church. Dr. Trott called upon South Baltimore Methodists "to support the position taken by the public school authorities in conformity with the Supreme Court decision." He declared that it is "good Americanism" to believe that all men are created equal.

He added, "Christians are likewise committed to the belief that all the people of the worl are children of the Heavenly Father and they are children in Christ. Methodists as good Christians and good Americans should cooperate with all responsible authorities in making possible this right decision regarding desegregation in our schools. They should not permit either persons or groups to upset the orderly process of law, substituting race prejudice instead."

The Rev. Herbert L. Weaver, Jr., pastor of the Patterson Memorial Methodist Church and chairman of the South Baltimore Association, deplored the outbreak at Southern High School for the following reasons:

"First, it was a deliberate attempt to discredit those whom God loves and to further the breach which already exists between His children. Words that were uttered and blows that were struck were a disgrace to a Christian community and an insult to the Almighty God. We must, as Christian ministers, condemn any such spirit or action.

"Second, it was an attempt at mob rule. The courts of our lands and our own local authorities have created laws concerning the operation of our schools. As long as they are in existence, we believe that they must be obeyed.

"We bow to the Almighty in repentance that we Have not more successfully led His people down the pathway of the Christian life."

Baptist Unit Here Hits School Plan

By ANNE COWEN

A forceful resolution against the "private school" amendment was given unanimous approval Wednesday by the Atlanta Baptist Assn.

The Baptist group expressed fear that passing the proposed amendment would jeopardize "the sacred principle of separation of church and state."

The resolution noted the amendment does not specify what schools children would attend with the money the state would allot to them.

"It would seem to us that children who attend denominationally connected schools would be eligible for public funds," it stated.

"We conceive it opening the door to a violation of our sacred and constitutional heritage of the separation of church and state," it continued.

"We the messengers of the Atlanta Association of Baptist Churches cannot approve this or any other amendment which tends toward violation of this sacred principle," it concluded.

The strong resolution was substituted for a weaker resolution urging "careful study and earnest prayers" over the amendment.

The first version was sent back to committee after Dr. J. L. Baggott and Dr. D. J. Evans suggested the association's stand on the issue should be "stronger."

The final resolution was the result of 30 minutes' work by the Rev. G. Merrill Meadows, Orchard Knob Baptist Church; Dr. Dick H. Hall, Decatur First; the Rev. W. T. Booth, Brookhaven; Dr. D. J. Evans, Gordon Street, and Dr. O. M. Seigler, Cascade. There was no general debate on either resolution.

Earlier at the Wednesday morning meeting at Woodland Hills Baptist Church, the association re-elected the Rev. R. L. O'Brien, Capitol Avenue, moderator, and Milton L. Holcombe, clerk-treasurer. The Rev. Ebb Kilpatrick was chosen vice moderator.

New officers of the associational brotherhood are L. Waites Guthrie, Capitol Avenue, president; Ray Kimsey, Brookhaven, and E. R. Jackson, Virginia Avenue, vice presidents; B. M. Calaway, Inman Park, secretary-treasurer, and Matt Baker, Providence, song leader.

The association will hold its 1955 meeting at Second-Ponce de Leon and North Avenue Baptist church, Oct. 18 and 19. The Rev. Roy Niager, Euclid Avenue, will be convention preacher.

Eight Southeastern Methodist Bishops Against Church Stand On Segregation

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. 11-29-54

BIRMINGHAM, Nov. 28. (AP)—Eight Southeastern Methodist bishops advised against any church statement on school segregation being made before the final decree of the U. S. Supreme Court. Bishop Clare Purcell said Mon. 11-29-54

Purcell is presiding bishop of the North Alabama Methodist Conference.

A statement adopted by the Methodist Council of Bishops in Chicago said, in part, that the high court decision furnished the church "with an unequalled opportunity to provide leadership during this period in support of the principles involved in the action of the court."

Purcell said the full statement of the council was approved by a majority and not a unanimous vote. He also claimed that a report by The Associated Press omitted an important part of the statement. This was the full statement, according to Purcell:

"The historic decision of the Supreme Court abolishing segregation in the public school system is in keeping with the attitude of the Methodist Church. In our official pronouncements, including the social creed and the Episcopal address adopted by the 1952 General Conference, our position has been clearly stated. The Supreme Court recognized that such a ruling brought with it difficulties of enforcement, and therefore, made provision of sufficient time to implement its decision. The declaration of the decision was made in the magnificent home of the Supreme Court in Washington, D.C., but the ultimate success of the ruling will be determined in the hearts of the people of the nation. Thus, the church is furnished with an unequaled opportunity to provide leadership during this period in support of the principles involved in the action of the court. We accept this responsibility, for one of the foundation stones of our faith is the belief that all men are brothers, equal in the sight of God. In that faith, we declare our support of the ruling of the Supreme Court."

"It should be stated," said Purcell, in commenting on the statement and news stories about it, "that the eight bishops of the southeast advised that no statement on the subject be made pending the final decree of the Supreme Court, which then was expected in December.

"Whatever their personal opinions on the issue may be," he continued, "they opposed any statement, some declining to vote and others voting against it. It should also be noted that the court recognized that such a ruling brought with it difficulti. of enforcement, and therefore, made provision for sufficient time to implement its decision,' It was never in the thinking of the council to pledge the church to 'lead the fight.' The council recognizes that many thousands of our people are sincerely divided on this issue and differ conscientiously.

"It is important also to note that the bishops' statement has no relation whatever to the present organization of the Methodist Church with a separate jurisdiction for the colored people. This is a constitutional matter and to change it would require a two-thirds vote in the General Conference and also a two-thirds vote in the Annual Conferences. I know of no effort now being made to initiate such a change.

"It now appears that the implementation of the decision will be referred to the lower courts where local conditions and opinions will be respected. Pending the final decision our people should exercise a fine restraint and Christian patience in the whole matter."

Leaders Ask Churches End Segregation

Constitution P. 28. Atlanta, Ga.

BOSTON, Dec. 1 (AP)—Christian leaders from across the country today called for deeds—and not words—to end racial segregation in America's churches.

"The present time is of crucial importance," declared a special section meeting at the biennial assembly of the National Council of Churches.

"In various situations and areas over the nation, sacrifice and bravery appear to be prerequisite in the adjustment of tradition to the teachings of Jesus."

The appeal was sounded, in numerous addresses and in various resolutions, as about 2,000 representatives of 30 Protestant and orthodox denominations worked to strengthen their joint fortress of faith.

Assistant Secretary of Labor J. Ernest Wilkins told the assembly that churches have given forth with "brave and inspired pronouncements" against segregation, but have been slow in putting the principles into practice.

Va. Baptists Quit Over Bias

Defender Bal. 12-4-54

NORFOLK, Va. — (ANP)—A resolution calling for acceptance of the Supreme Court decision holding segregation in public schools unconstitutional has caused the Virginia Baptist General Association to lose at least one of its members.

The Rural Baptist Brotherhood announced that it was leaving the association because "no other body of the Baptist Association has the right to speak for and on behalf of the Rural Baptist Brotherhood of Greensville county, on the question of segregation of the races in the public schools."

Urge Aid For Desegregation

Defender P. 12

The powerful Methodist Council of Bishops, representing more than nine million American methodists, reaffirmed its opposition to racial segregation in public schools last Monday, Nov. 23.

The bishops praised the Supreme Court ruling and called upon the "hearts of the people" to enforce it.

The message, approved and released by the council, read in part:

"The historic decision (of the Supreme court) abolishing segregation in the public school system is in keeping with the attitude of the Methodist church.

"But the ultimate success of the ruling will be determined in the hearts of the people. Thus, the church is furnished with an unequaled opportunity to provide leadership during this period in support of the principles involved in the action of the court.

"We accept this responsibility, for one of the foundation stones of our faith is the belief that all men are brothers equal in the sight of God. In that faith we declare our support of the ruling of the Supreme Court."

End Segregation, Protestants Urged

Units of National Council Implore Churchgoers To Show Brotherhood

Louisville, Ky. P. 2

From Wire Dispatches

Boston, Dec. 1.—American Protestantism was called on today to "repudiate completely" all forms of racial segregation.

In a resolution approved by two divisions of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., churchgoers were implored to "demonstrate principles of Christian brotherhood" by combating "all forms of injustice, discrimination, and segregation based on color or race."

The actions were taken by the division of foreign missions and the division of Christian life and work, representing two of the four major operational arms of the national council. The council speaks for 30 major Protestant and Eastern Orthodox bodies in the United States. It is holding its biennial general assembly here this week.

Courier 12-2-54

Some Discrimination Is Admitted

The resolution acknowledged that some member denominations by "customary practice admit or exclude individual members and local churches on the basis of color."

Deploring the inconsistency of this practice in the light of Christian teaching and in view of the progress made by governmental and lay groups in the field of racial integration, the resolution called for "similar or even greater progress by the Churches of Christ."

"We recognize that the need for Christian understanding of both the religious and legal requirements for a racially integrated school system is particularly acute at this time," the resolution declared. "In various situations and areas over the nation, sacrifices and bravery appear to be prerequisite in the adqustment of tradition to the teachings of Jesus. Everywhere patience and tolerance are the sine qua non of brotherhood."

A thumping victory for the East was recorded by delegates when they confirmed by standing vote the selection of New ork over Chicago as the permanent headquarters for the council. The vote was 276 to 106.

Latin American Threats Related

Actually, the controvery was resolved last September when the council's 125-member general board picked New ork. But a strong minority had kept the issue alive.

A Methodist missionary reported today that "religious persecution, fascism, and clericalism" are greater threats to democracy in Latin America than communism.

The Rev. B. Foster Stockwell, president of Union Theological Seminary, Buenos Aires, said:

"Our best friends in Latin America are profoundly disturbed by our professions of democracy on the one hand and on the other by the complacency or active support we have shown toward the fascist regimes like those of Venezuela, Colombia, or Spain."

He said Protestantism in Latin America was helping "in laying surer foundations for political democracy and international understanding," but "Roman Catholicism, when left to devlop along its own lines, becomes a totalitarian form of religion."

Scholarship Service Reports

Movement To Desegregation

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK — The largest movement of Negro students from segregated high schools in the South to non-segregated colleges in the South as well as the North — ever to take place in any single year was reported recently by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

The project is being directed by Richard L. Plaut, Executive Vice-Chairman of the NSSFNS, of which Dr. Harry J. Carman, Dean Emerius of Columbia College, is Chairman of the Board of Directors. The report was submitted to Dr. Alvin C. Eurich, Vice-President of the Ford Fund for the Advancement of Education.

July 11-23-54

The project furthers the basic purpose of the NSSFNS, which was established in 1947 to broaden and increase opportunities for qualified Negro students for high educatoin in an interracial environment. An independent agency, it is supported mainly by grants from foundations and allocations from college chest drives.

1 HIGH SCHOOLS

The talent search is being conducted directly through field services. During the 1953-54 school year, 81 high schools in the 45 largest Southern cities were visited four times each by the co-directors of the field services, Dr. Paul F. Lawrence and Mr. Donald W. Wyatt on leaves of absence from Howard and Fisk Universities, respectively.

Tests were given to 1,485 students, selected by principals and counselors as constituting the top ten percent of their senior classes. Of this group, less than half, an alarmingly small percentage, attained minimum scores for college admission and scholarship aid. Of the 737 who qualified, 399 indicated their desire to go to an interracial college; 207 actually completed applications; 197 were accepted and 191 finally enrolled this fall.

Of the 388 qualifying students who showed no interest in attending an interracial college, the great majority (70 percent) applied to Negro colleges where most of them (90 percent) were readily accepted. Aside from the major factor of low-cost, these students favored Negro colleges because they were more confident of admission and anticipated a more satisfactory social adjustment.

INTERRACIAL COLLEGES

Sholarships from colleges and other sources amounting to $78,630 were awarded to 119 of the 191 students who enrolled at interracial colleges; while 70 of the 119 were also awarded $21,985 in supplementary aid by the NSSFNS to bridge the gap between the total cost of their first college year and the combined total of scholarships, earnings and help from home. About 80 percent of scholarships recipients needed supplementary aid.

The 191 students who enrolled at the interracial colleges this past academic year represent a 180 percent increase over the 68 students who enrolled in 1952-53. This increase, the report states, is directly due to the finer screening made possible by the testing program and the added stimulus and fuller information provided candidates through the on-thespot counselling service.

Negro Americans, our largest minority group, repreent 10 percent of our population but less than one percent of our interracial college population, the NSSFNS states. It contends that broadening the educational opportunities for qualified Negro students will enable them to take their appropriate places of leadership and add to the total of trained and skilled manpower for which there is such an acute national need.

According, the NSSFNS sought an objective analysis by man-power specialists of the magnitude and quality of exisiting talent and the extent of their financial need. Such an analysis was rendered by Dr Eli Ginzberg, Director, and Dr. Douglas Bray, his associate, of the Conservation of Human Resources of the Graduate School of Business of Columbia University.

They projected that on the basis of the figures disclosed by the project, there were now about 1,200 Negro students each year throughout the entire South who could be considered qualified college candidates; this figure, however, includes only those who were in the upper 10 percent of their class and who have taken a college preparatory course. To provide for the total financial needs of these students, about 900,000 would be needed.

The analysis noted that less than three percent of all Negro high school graduates in the states covered by the project were found to be likely candidates for an interracial college. This relatively poor showing is the result of reduced motivation to learn in school because of economic and cultural deprivation in the home and the ill effects of segregation on the development of scholastic aptitude.

An additional aim of the talent search project is to involve local community leaders in the discovery of able Negro students. According to the report, some progress has already been made toward organizing community committees in Richmond, Atlanta, Louisville and Kansas City.

Less Than 3% of Graduates Adjudged Likely Candidates for Interracial Colleges

P-14c

Despite a record enrollment of Southern Negro students in interracial colleges, a survey has shown that less than 3 per cent of the graduates of segregated high schools for Negroes would be likely candidates for non-segregated colleges.

Pennsylvania

This was announced yesterday as the result of a year's "talent search" by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. The project is part of a two-year survey under a grant of $170,000 from the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Dr. Eli Ginzberg, director of the Conservation of Human Resources of the Graduate School of Business, Columbia University, who was asked to analyze the report figures, estimated that there were about 1,200 Negro students each year throughout the South who could be considered qualified college candidates.

These, he said, would be found among the upper 10 per cent of their classes. It would require about $900,000 a year to provide for their financial needs, he said.

While the report showed half of the top 10 per cent of senior classes in the eighty-one schools covered had minimum requirements for college, Dr. Ginzberg estimated that the figure for all high schools for Negroes in states covered by the project would be under 3 per cent.

The search for qualified Negro college candidates, conducted among the eighty-one high schools in forty-five cities, gave added credence to that part of the recent Supreme Court ruling on segregation that stated that a separate school system was not inherently an equal system, the report stated.

Other Findings

The findings included:

¶The movement of Negro students to nonsegregated colleges in the South for the 1953-54 academic year was 180 per cent higher than the record high of the previous year.

¶Only half of the top 10 per cent of the senior classes in the surveyed high schools—considered those of highest rank for Negroes in the South—possessed minimum college qualifications.

¶Of the 737 who qualified out of 1,485 tested, 191 enrolled in interracial colleges although 197 were accepted.

¶Of 388 qualifying students who showed no interest in attending an interracial college, 70 per cent applied to Negro colleges and 90 per cent of these were accepted.

As a result of the findings, the report concluded "that these scores would seem to cast a serious reflection on the effectiveness of the dual school system in the South, at least in the system's ability to produce successful college candidates.

"That they emphasize the serious handicap which students from the lower socio-economic brackets must overcome to acquire elsewhere the cultural background necessary for college, when it is not found at home."

Concerning the limited number completing applications to interracial colleges the, report held it was due to:

¶Reluctance on the part of both parents and students to venture out of a lifelong segregated environment.

¶Fear of not being able to meet the scholastic standards and the financial cost of an interracial college.

¶The influence of parents, principals, teachers and counselors in favor of the predominantly Negro College near home, frequently their alma mater.

The report added that "The number of qualified candidates might have been much larger had it not been for the many whose learning potentials had been submerged in discouraging environmental influences, providing little intellectual motivation."

Georgia CIO Fights Talmadge Move To Kill Public Schools, Keep Bias

P13 Mon, 10-18-54

AN ALL-OUT effort was pledged by the Georgia CIO Council convention at Macon to defeat Gov. Talmadge's proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the State's public school system—the oldest in U. S.

The proposal would send children to private schools to perpetuate segregated education which the Supreme Court has outlawed.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey delivered a blistering attack on the Eisenhower Administration and called on the delegates "to carry on the trade union job of political action that is going to be so essential to the country over between now and Nov. 2."

Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, said the "banners" of Eisenhower's "great crusade are smeared with oil from the payoffs of those who lubricate the wheels of the Republican bandwagon."

He said the crusade banners were sullied by "the members of Eisenhower's own party, the men who selected him to lead and then proceeded to make mockery of the things he promised in his campaign speeches."

Carey pointed out that the Administration had not lived up to Eisenhower's campaign promises to cut taxes and balance the budget. He also said that "if we have a firm, stable, unyielding foreign policy for as long as an hour, that becomes a red-letter day in State Dept. history."

HE ALSO reiterated the CIO demand that Assistant Sec. of Commerce Lothair Teetor be fired.

Carey said that "greed for profits" was causing companies to move their plants South in the hope that they could get rich quicker "by paying substandard wages and extracting a higher workload because the people had never had a yardstick be-fore to evaluate the intention of these migrants."

He predicted that these runaway plants would "find the same union at their front door."

THE CONVENTION elected W. H. Montague, an Auto Worker, as president to succeed William H. Crawford, who was presented with a plaque on his retirement after serving for three years. The plaque honored Crawford, who is the CIO Steelworkers' district director, "for his life of dedication to the labor movement, and for his ability to build strong unions."

GEORGIA CIO honors W. H. Crawford (left) by presenting him with plaque on retirement as Council president. Pres. William Sapp of USA-CIO Local 2401, Atlanta, presents plaque. High School Principal Takes an Exception To the GEA Stand on Private School Plan

Forum: As a member of the Georgia Education Assn., I perhaps feel that the people of Georgia should understand the apparent opposition of the GEA to Amendment No. 4 to be voted on in the general election of Nov. 2.

During the last session of the GEA Convention in Atlanta a resolution was introduced and adopted opposing this amendment. The leadership of the GEA took this as definite mandate that every member and every local unit, and every district was strongly opposed to this amendment. Such was not the case then and is not so today. This most important matter was handled contrary to usual procedure of the GEA. As a matter of rule, all important matters coming to the organization are discussed and acted upon at the local level. As public teachers in your county if any action by your local unit has ever been taken on this all-important issue.

The GEA is apparently opposed to the Amendment No. 4 because the leadership is opposed to it. This leadership has tried desperately to scare the teachers of this state to death by setting up an army of straw men and shooting them full of poisonous arrows of every imaginable evil. This leadership has not said just where it stands on segregated schools at the NEA Convention in New York last summer.

Jaycees Hit School Plan; Backers Pat

Talmadge, Griffin Say 'Only Means'

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Atlanta Jaycees Thursday came out against the "private school" amendment, while Gov. Talmadge said the proposal will enable the Legislature to provide an education for Georgia's children.

Judge William Ingram of Cartersville, long-time staunch supporter of the Talmadges, told the Atlanta Jaycees that Georgia cannot escape providing racially-integrated schools—even if it has to do so by setting up a third school system in addition to the present segregated system. He said the amendment "wouldn't work."

Durwood Pye, secretary of the Georgia Education Commission who debated Ingram, said the amendment will permit establishment of the "three-school" system if necessary, but that Georgia can have no schools without the amendment if the Spreme Court moves in.

GRIFFIN, TALMADGE

Gov.-Nominate Marvin Griffin and Gov. Talmadge stepped up their campaign with a joint statement issued here to answer objections raised by opponents of the plan. They appealed for passage of the amendment as the "only" means of giving the incoming administration the "tools to do the job of preserving segregation in schools."

The Gainesville Board of Education went on record against the amendment.

Gov.-Nominate Griffin carried his campaign to Albany Thursday night for a television appearance.

State School Supt. M. D. Collins and GEA leaders continued to assail the amendment as "destruction of the public school system" and "no protection of segregation" in a district meeting of teachers at Gainesville.

"ENABLING ACT"

Gov. Talmadge spoke Thursday night at Sparta. He said the court's decision will apply only to schools operated by the states or their political subdivisions. It will not apply to schools where grants are made directly to the child, he stated.

"The amendment takes no action and requires none," Talmadge asserted. "It is merely an enabling act which frees the hands of the representatives to avert the breakdown of the state's educational system which necessarily will follow a Supreme Court order for mixed schools."

Ingram said a private school operator becomes an "agent" of the state in that he is fulfilling the state's obligation to provide an education for its citizens and is doing it with state funds.

"An agent of the state would be bound by the same court decision that binds the state, itself," the former City Court judge asserted. "There is no way the state, by any system, can follow its educational money to the end result without having to follow the court's decision."

Ingram predicted that the fact that the Legislature, governor, attorney general and Georgia Education Commission have advertised the amendment as a plan to avoid complying with the court decision would be offered as evidence in the court hearings.

CIVIL RIGHTS

In suggesting the "three-school" plan advocated in the gubernatorial campaign by Tom Linder, Ingram said he didn't see how a person's civil rights would be violated if he had a choice of attending mixed or segregated schools.

Pye declared Georgia's schools need not lose their accredited standing if the system is changed from public to private. Private schools are accredited now, he pointed out. The state would continue to operate schools on a high level to warrant accreditation, he promised.

However, Pye warned, if the courts force the schools to close and the Legislature hasn't the power to make educational grants, Georgia will have no accredited schools. It will have no schools at all, he added.

TWO GOVERNORS

The Griffin-Talmadge joint statement said that:

1. The amendment does not abolish the public school system.
2. The teacher retirement system will continue undiminished and uninterrupted.
3. The state constitutional provision requiring separation of church and state would stand inviolate and none of the grants could be used for religious education.
4. Grants would cover all costs of books, tuition, transportation and all other educational expenses.
5. Schools would continue to operate with the same high academic standards now in force.
6. The amendment is solely a "last resort" measure to be utilized only when needed to preserve free, segregated schools.

Says Ga. Cannot Enforce Segregation In Schools

By International News Service

Georgia's Attorney General said Weldnesday the state would be powerless to enforce segregation in the schools in the face of a court order whether the private school amendment passes or fails.

Atty.-Gen. Eugene Cook, answering questions propounded by Atlantan Mrs. Nancy Fletcher, said that under the U. S. Supreme Court ruling against separate schools the state has no power to require segregation in any school system. He added:

"If a white citizen desires to attend a mixed school, there is no legal way to stop him with or without the private school amendment."

The amendment, which Cook supports, would permit the legislature to grant money to individuals for educational purposes. It would clear the way for a system of private schools should public school segregation be banned.

Answering other questions, Cook said:

. . Religious groups would have no claim to public funds under provisions of the amendment which permits grants to individual students. He said the legislature might give or deny such grants to students going to church schools.

. . Textbooks and other school supplies could be purchased from the grants that would be given individual children.

. . . Private schools leasing buildings owned by the State School Building Authority would have to pay rent to the Authority.

. . . While the amendment provides that grants of public funds would go to the individual students the legislature might determine that they could be paid direct to the schools attended by the students.

. . . The compulsory school attendance law would remain in effect, requiring children to attend school, whether private or public.

INTEGRATION PROGRESS IS MADE AT LOCAL LEVEL

But South's Divided Views Create Complex Problems for High Court

By JOHN H. POPHAM
Special to The New York Times.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 6—On Dec. 6, the Supreme Court will begin hearing oral arguments concerning the decrees it should issue to enforce its historic decision of last May 17 that public school racial segregation is unconstitutional.

The court itself has noted that the formulation of such decrees presents problems of considerable complexity," and it has invited that the oral debate set forth suggestions on the procedural steps that would construct the best scaffolding for the vast social changes involved.

At this stage, the seventeen Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, having school segregation statutes that were affected by the court ruling, are widely divided on the issue. Their official views fall into various shadings, ranging from determined opposition to ready acceptance of the decree.

Action Locally

Below this state-wide level, hundreds of county and community school boards and superintendents, regarded by many as the "key" factors in the drama, unquestionably have been quietly scanning their immediate problems at home.

They have been looking into zoning regulations, redistricting possibilities, neighborhood housing segregation patterns and community "attitudes." Under the old tight segregation laws, these were matters they never before considered.

This particular group at this stage, quite naturally, is not taking any overt action until the state-wide political leadership speaks out. As evident from recent school integration flareups in Baltimore, Washington and Milford, Del., their great problem rests in such questions as "to what extent would higher authorities give sanction to local integration moves?" and "what are the techniques for measuring local community support at critical stages?"

Role of N. A. A. C. P.

In this particular context is the Negro role, spearheaded by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Through its state chapters the N. A. A. C. P. has petitioned most of the local school boards to make room at the conference table for Negro spokesmen. The N. A. A. C. P. has stressed that its formal petitions were mainly to get bi-racial negotiations under way at community level, but this temperate gesture on the N. A. A. C. P.'s part has been lost in the explosive atmosphere.

Position Defined

Another important facet concerns those educators, religious leaders and workers for interracial harmony who have acclaimed the desegregation decision as an inspiring moral challenge. They, too, have been quietly prepared for the adjustment period ahead, holding question-and-answer sessions in church-sponsored seminars, distributing thousands of pamphlets outlinig the possibilities for local accommodations.

This group takes the position mainly that region-wide there are a thousand or more counties, each with 10 per cent or less Negro population, that could "accept" some school integration if properly prepared in advance.

Many of the region's experts hold that a significant item missing since May 17 has been what they term a lack of national leadership emphasizing to domestic and world opinion that since the Supreme Court laid down its broad principle, the segregation issue has become primarily a vast social engineering project.

'NOW THE DIFFICULT TASK'

INTEGRATION FOES ARISE IN THE SOUTH

New Groups Use Boycotts to Prevent Desegration—Units Are Described

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 20 (AP)—A new type of anti-Negro vigilante movement—using boycotts instead of bullwhips—has arisen in at least one state in the South.

And in the wake of last spring's Supreme Court decision declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional, new organizations have appeared elsewhere in the South to sound the call for preservation of our southern heritage," the old rallying car of the Ku Klux Klan.

At present these various groups operate independently of one another. Most are weak, capable of drawing crowds of only several hundred even when appealing for mass protest meetings. But two of them exhibit considerable vigor and have some powerful backing.

The two strongest are the

INTEGRATION FOES

American States Rights Association with headquarters in Birmingham, Ala., and a network of Citizens' Councils in Mississippi. It is the Citizens Councils that have advocated, and apparently already put in use, the idea of substituting economic pressure for physical force, the traditional weapon of the Klan.

Citizens Councils have been organized in twenty-two of Mississippi's eighty-two counties and are spreading. Their purpose is to apply economic pressures to "troublemakers" who would upset the "southern way of life." A 'troublemaker" is anyone who advocates compliance with the Supreme Court decision.

The ire of the councils is directed against "outside agitators" in general and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in particular. The only organized opposition to the movement, and hence its chief target, is the handful of N. A. A. C. P. members inside Mississippi. Dr. Emmett J. Stringer, a Columbus, Miss., dentist, is state president for the N. A. A. C. P.

Incidents Described

Dr. Stringer said he believed there had been some action on the part of the councils.

"We had a branch president, a merchant, who had to give up," he said. "A group of white men drove up to his store and told him to get in the car. He did and they took him to his bank and there were the banker, his wholesaler and other people who gave him credit. They told him they would give him no more * * *. He had to give up, go bankrupt or get out."

Dr. Stringer, a graduate of Meharry Medical College at Nashville, Tenn., said he had reports from one area that the public utility services of any Negro leader who became even one day in arrears on his bills were cut off abruptly.

"As for me," he said, "I can't get credit anywhere in Mississippi, and I'm just getting started too."

After the existence of the semi-secret councils was reported in late summer, the Mississippi Assembly Representative from Sunflower County, Mrs. Wilma B. Sledge, announced that the councils "are a widespread group composed of reliable white male citizens who believe that segregation is not discrimination and are organized for the sole purpose of maintaining segregation."

"They do not and will not advocate violence in any form," she added.

While the councils propose to fight the court's decision by legal means, there are undercurrents that suggest violence would be tolerated if necessary.

The movement is backed by some of the state's leading citizens—bankers, politicians, druggists, lawyers, planters, merchants and newspaper men.

State Organization Set Up

At a meeting on Oct. 12 at Winona, a state organization of the councils was set up with Robert B. Patterson, a Holly Ridge planter and former college football star, as executive secretary.

Mr. Patterson is the only official whose name has been made public.

Ostensibly membership in the councils is not secret and apparently is well known in various local communities. A stranger, however, who makes inquiries as to membership, even though a southerner himself, is met with open hostility, suspicion or a plea of ignorance.

The first Citizens Council was organized in Sunflower County's seat, the town of Indianola. A reliable source there said it began with a meeting of five or six men in a private home. Among those present were Mr. Patterson and Herman Moore, head of the Indianola Bank.

The plan for the councils reportedly was drawn from the book "Black Monday," by Circuit Judge Tom P. Brady of Brookhaven, in which the theory of economic pressures is advanced. (Black Monday is the designation given by some to May 17, the day the Supreme Court decision was announced.)

Mr. Moore subsequently became chairman of the Indianola Council. The minutes of the first meeting were duplicated and distributed throughout the state to a carefully selected mailing list.

According to the minutes, Arthur J. Clark Jr., an attorney, explained:

"It is the thought of our group that the solution to this problem may become easier if various agitators and the like could be removed from the communities in which they now operate. We propose to accomplish this through the careful application of economic pressures."

The remarks also were tape recorded and distributed to an even more carefully selected group. With the original account of the Indianola meeting went a statement urging members to read certain publications. The bulk of them, while anti-Negro, are also anti-Semitic.

Mississippi Farm Bureau Backs Segregated Schools

Group Agrees to Support Proposed Amendment

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 11 (AP)—The Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation today resolved to support segregated public schools as a prerequisite to improving existing facilities.

Delegates attending the 33rd annual convention of the bureau voted overwhelmingly to insist that no building program for equalizing schools begin "until reasonable assurance can be given that segregated schools will continue."

The group agreed to support the proposed constitutional amendment, to be voted Dec. 21, empowering the Legislature to abolish public schools "in the event it is the only way to maintain segregation."

Farm, County Matter

The Farm Bureau Federation boasts no active Negro membership. Negroes may belong only as associates.

The Negro division of the federation was in session at the same time, at a different convention site.

W. E. Ammons of Jackson, state leader of Negro men's work of the Agricultural Extension Service, said the Negro convention "stuck strictly to farm and county matters and the segregation question did not come up."

Main Factor

The resolution adopted by the whites urged equalization of facilities and opportunities not only between Negroes and whites but also between rural and urban schools.

"Actual need rather than 'equal facilities'" should be the main factor in determining size, location, etc., of schools, the resolution stated, and financing "should come from increases in sales, tobacco, income and severance taxes in that order insofar as is necessary to meet the needs."

The education equalization program was enacted by the 1953 special session of the Legislature and partially financed by the 1954 regular session.

Some lawmakers have pledged not to vote for full financing unless the abolition amendment is ratified.

Supports Favored

Without finances, Mississippi's schools would become inoperative.

The delegates also adopted a resolution in favor of 90 per cent of parity price supports for cotton and of a realistic national cotton acreage allotment.

The acreage resolution stated that one million bales is "sufficient reduction in our cotton stocks in any one year, and we support a realistic national allotment, allocated under present provisions of the law."

Earlier today, Boswell Stevens of Macon was re-elected president of the federation. Three vice presidents also were elected. They were H. H. Huddleston of Lamont, C. D. Maddox of West and Aldèn McNair of Learned.

OWEN COOPER, executive secretary of the Mississippi Chemical Corporation, Yazoo City, holds the Farm Bureau plaque for the most outstanding contribution to agriculture in Mississippi which he was presented at the Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation banquet in Jackson.

After Two Turndowns

Finally Find Place to Meet

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—At long last, some of the country's top legal officers have found a place to meet. They'll gather at this swank Mountaineer State resort for their convention (National Association of Attorneys General) beginning Dec. 8.

Earlier this year they had to switch from Biloxi, Miss., because the Attorney General of that state wouldn't invite Attorney General Herbert Brownell. Reason: His position on school integration!

Last week, the association cancelled plans to meet at the swank Camelback Inn at Phoenix, Ariz., because of the Inn's restrictions against Jews.

SEVERAL STATE Attorneys General had hinted they would refuse to stay at the Inn.

So now it comes here . . . the third choice!

Wonder what would have happened had one of the attorneys general been a Negro! Possibly, they'd still be looking for a spot.

Army Still Has Race Designation

FORT DIX, N. J. (ANP)—Although the Defense Department recently announced that segregation in the Army is a thing of the past, racial identification still exists on the soldier's most important record, the "Form 20," and the No. 1 in his files.

ATTORNEYS' MEETING SHIFTED TO ARIZONA

Refuse To Invite Brownell

Results in Shock From Mississippi

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The National Association of Attorneys General Monday shifted the site of its annual convention from Mississippi to Arizona because of a dispute over United States Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr.

The association's executive committee said the 48th annual convention will be held Dec. 8-10 at Phoenix, instead of at Biloxi as previously scheduled.

Didn't Invite Brownell

Eugene Cook, president of the organization and attorney general of Georgia, said the site was changed because he did not invite Mr. Brownell to the convention, a traditional gesture.

Mr. Cook said one of the reasons he did not invite Mr. Brownell was that Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi, who would have been the convention host, does not like Mr. Brownell.

Mr. Coleman said at Little Rock, Ark., that the "action was taken in advance and with my consent. The decision to transfer the meeting to Arizon was reached sometime ago."

Mr. Coleman said he expects to attend the convention at Phoenix "If my schedule will permit the trip."

Four Other Reasons

Mr. Cook said he had four other reasons for not inviting Mr. Brownell: Because Mr. Brownell made "ruthless political attacks" on former President Truman; because he attacked the late Senator Robert A. Taft; because he intervened in the school segregation case, and because at the 1953 convention he defended the Federal Government's right to inspect state penitentiaries without notifying state officials.

The announcement of the executive committee did not go into the reasons for the change.

Mr. Cook said he personally would not invite Mr. Brownell to attend to address the convention, even though the site has been shifted.

But he said the matter now would be up to the executive committee and to Ross Jones, the host attorney general.

ATTORNEYS GENERAL CONFAB IN HOT SPOT RESPECTING BAN PLACED ON JEWS IN PHOENIX

Meeting Switched to White Springs, W. Va., Where Whites Objected to Desegregation

CAMELBACK INN BLASTED BECAUSE OF RACIAL POLICY

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Anti-semitism has caused a second switch in site for the Dec. 8-10 convention of the National Association of Attorneys General.

The meeting, scheduled originally for Biloxi, Miss, was switched to Phoenix, Ariz. when Mississippi Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman, and Eugene Cook of Georgia, association president, made it clear that U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell would not be welcome because he "intervened in segregation."

The site has now been changed to White Springs, W. Va., to avoid what a spokesman for the association termed, "restrictions."

"Restrictions" is long standing policy of the Camelback Inn in Phoenix, where the meetings of the convention were to be held, of accepting only "carefully selected" members of the Jewish religion during the conventions and the regular guest season.

Cook, in Atlanta, said the second move was taken after a phone conference among the 10 members of the executive committee brought an 8-to-2 vote for the move.

Attys. Gen. Nathaniel Goldstein of New York, George Feingold of Massachusetts and Edmund G. Brown of California said they would not stay at the Camelback Inn in view of its policy.

Jack Stewart, manager of the Inn said:

"We are happy to abide by the decision of the attorneys general to cancel their meeting at Camelback Inn. The attorneys general as late as Monday night would have been willing to come to Camelback Inn had I submitted to extreme pressure from the Anti-Defamation League (a largely Jewish civil rights organization) to change our policy of guest selection."

The policy of "selection," he said, has been followed since 1936.

Meeting in White Sulphur Springs, however, will not remove the convention away from discrimination sorespots. White Sulphur Springs received notoriety early in September when the schools in line with the Supreme court decision, when angry white parents and students demonstrated against the entrance of Negroes into a formerly all-white high school.

crimination, has ended up in a little community which bounced into the national picture in September because of a school strike stemming from efforts toward desegregation.

About 250 White Sulphur Springs High school students staged a short-lived walkout after 12 Negro pupils registered under a Greenbrier county board of education ruling.

Discussions Scheduled

The board of education rescinded, on the same day of the strike, its decision and ordered the Negro students to return to classrooms they formerly occupied at Bolling High school in Lewisburg.

Atty. Gen. John G. Fox of West Virginia estimated that about 175 persons would register for the meeting here.

The convention program calls for informal discussion sessions of a round-table nature Wednesday and Thursday morning and afternoon, and on Friday morning. Discussion topics will include:

Control and regulation of lobby activities; states' highway problems; habeas corpus and post-conviction procedures; internal office procedure and administration, and training programs and conferences for prosecutors; and juvenile delinquency and duties of youth authorities.

Convention Site Changed

The dispute which brought a change in the convention site from Phoenix centered about a policy at an inn where the meetings were to be held.

The policy is one of admitting only a few "carefully selected" members of the Jewish religion, Jack McGowan, chief deputy Arizona attorney general said earlier.

The management of the resort hotel refused to change the policy.

The earlier change from Biloxi followed a dispute over inviting Brownell to address the meeting. Eugene Cook, attorney general of Georgia and association president, said he would not invite Brownell because of his part in school desegregation cases.

BROWNELL WILL ADDRESS NAAG

Attorneys General Convention to Open Wednesday

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Dec. 5 (AP)—The National Association of Attorneys General opens its 48th annual meeting here Wednesday after twice changing the site for the gathering.

Originally scheduled in Biloxi, Miss., and then moved to Phoenix, Ariz., before the switch here, the convention will continue through a state dinner Friday night.

Addressing that affair will be United States Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr.

P-TA Adopts Policies on Integration

Post Times Herald
Sun. 10-10-54
Washington, D.C.

School officials should consider hiring of teachers regardless of race to work in overcrowded schools, a Montgomery County Parent-Teachers Association panel recommended yesterday. P. 22 M

The panel met at the tenth annual workshop of the Montgomery County Council of Parent-Teacher Associations and the Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations in Negro Schools.

Other recommendations by the integration panel were:

Give parents a choice of schools in which to enroll their children.

All county civic groups should make recommendations on integration to the Board of Education before the present segregated system is abandoned.

Plan extra-curricular activites which would allow students of different races to meet each other outside the classroom.

Train teachers in problems of inter-group relations.

County School Superintendent Dr. Forbes H. Norris told the workshop that Montgomery County will have to hire an average of 400 teachers each year for the next five or six years.

He said he hoped the school board and County Council will work out a final salary plan for teachers by March 1.

"It's a bad business when a teacher has to wait for his first paycheck until he knows what he's getting," Norris added.

The school official said two new reports on county schools will soon be distributed to the public.

AFL Wants Better Break For Nation's School Kids

The American Federation of Labor wants a better break for the Nation's school children who have just begun another term. It favors a socially-integrated program, better housing, recreational and library facilities, and schools with good teachers, and means to assure adequate living standards within the child's family.

Part of Great Problem

"All these are part of one great problem—caring for our children," the AFL said in adopting at the 1954 convention a broad program for improving schools, broadening educational opportunities and assisting teachers obtain a higher standard of living.

The AFL reaffirmed its support in the 84th Congress for bills granting Federal financial aid for school construction, teachers' salaries, scholarships, to combat illiteracy, and for services for children.

It called also for:

1—Replacement with new books at the start of every term of the worn, dilapidated, dog-eared texts; free textbooks; opposition to censorship and the use of industry-written texts in public schools.

2—Protests against the unauthorized use of confidential information under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of the United States for the purpose of dismissing teachers without charges or hearings.

Train Deserving Youths

3—Creating of an AFL Committee on Cooperative Education to promote and stimulate participation of international and local unions in plans for cooperative education to provide college training for deserving youths, especially in the field of engineering.

4—A national conference called by the AFL Committee on Education on "Education and Training for Work" to give full consideration to vocational education and its relation to the entire educational structure.

5—Participation by AFL representatives as members of local school boards, and of county, state, regional and national school advisory bodies.

6—Full participation in international exchange and educational programs of our Government, International Labor Organization, and the United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

All Unions Told to Aid School Shift

The American Federation of Labor called upon central labor unions, state federations, international and national unions and the federal labor unions to assist in every way possible to make a peaceful and orderly transition from segregated to nonsegregated public schools.

The AFL position—approved by the 73d convention—loomed important in the light of numerous "incidents" in cities where desegregation began with the opening of the 1954-55 school term.

Three Demonstrations

Both Baltimore and Washington witnessed demonstrations by pupils and parents while Milford, Del., parents forced resignation of the school board and the retention of segregated schools.

The Washington demonstrations occurred after three weeks of peaceful operations on a desegregated basis.

The AFL said this task of desegregation should be carried out "with the realization and conviction that if our youth, black and white, can fight together and die together on the battle fields in every war involving our country to preserve our American way of life, its national sovereignty and honor, they can, by the same token, go to the same school together and study together, which democratic procedure is certain to make and keep our country great."

The AFL pledged also to join with the American Federation of Teachers in furnishing facts for the Supreme Court that will aid desegregation without compromise of principle, and to insist upon fair labor procedures so that no group of teachers or administrators will suffer.

Teachers Argued Cases

The American Federation of Teachers appeared before the Supreme Court during arguments on the cases which led to the historic desegregation order. The AFT previously had dissolved "separate but equal" locals in its own ranks and integrated its Washington, D. C., locals well in advance of the court decision.

A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, urged all delegates to the recent AFL convention to urge their organizations "to cooperate with the local school boards and various governmental authorities in helping to bring about an orderly transition from a segregated public school system to a non-segregated system."

Labor Help On School Integration Asked By NAACP

ORGANIZED labor can play a major part in helping solve the "serious internal problems" arising out of opposition to the Supreme Court decision against school segregation, the steel convention was told by Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

White's speech was delivered by Herbert Hill of the NAACP, because of White's illness.

Describing a number of moves designed to offset the court decision, White's speech said that "all these fantasies are merely tactics of desperation, to postpone as long as possible the inevitable day of integration —when we as a nation will, in education, jobs, housing, government and moral principle, be truly indivisible."

The USA-CIO civil rights resolution renewed a pledge to work for the "emancipation" of all who are denied their basic rights and to make meaningful the constitutional guarantee of equality.

Women Hit Constitutional Segregation Amendment

Mon. 29-11-54
Atlanta Ga.
P. 9

By M. L. ST. JOHN

The Georgia League of Women Voters are urging Georgians to vote against the Constitutional Amendment No. 4 so as to preserve public schools.

In a pamphlet published over the weekend, the league declared that the amendment, if passed, would "hurt your child . . . hurt your teachers by jeopardizing the school system . . . make schools private, abolish public schools . . . give unlimited power to the Legislature, thereby overriding the Georgia Constitution . . . and would not guarantee segregation, whether constitutional or not."

The pamphlet, "Georgia Voters," outlined the league's position on other statewide amendments to be decided by the people Nov. 2.

BACKS NO. 1

The league supports Amendment No. 1 which would make Home Rule possible.

The league takes no stand on amendments which would provide for annual sessions of the Legislature, tax exemption for church parsonages, a tax-supported pension system for firemen, for cities to undertake slum clearance and redevelopment projects, and the lifting of the 15-mill ceiling on taxation for school purposes.

On the private school amendment, the league commented:

"Giving up our system of public education to keep segregation in schools would be like giving up democracy to keep communism out of democracy. No end is so important that it justifies the use of any means."

NO SEGREGATION STAND

The league said it has taken no stand on the issue of segregation but that the private school amendment contains no reference to segregation. The proposed powers to be vested in the General Assembly are not limited to that or to any other end, the league pointed out.

"The League of Women Voters has long supported the principle of public education," the pamphlet concluded. "This amendment clearly aims to do away with public or state responsibility for education at a time when schools are crowded as never before in history; at a time when more than half of our state budget is being spent for schools."

The league noted that proponents of the amendment have not yet made public details of the private school plan. It said the United States Supreme Court decision doesn't yet apply to Georgia—"but we must decide in November the fate of our public schools."

Mixed Va. women's body for integration

NORFOLK, Va. (ANP) — The Woman's Council for Interracial Cooperation unanimously voted last week in support of the Supreme Court decision of May 17 holding that segregated public schools are unconstitutional.

The group also decided to send a delegate to Richmond, Nov. 17 to give its views at a hearing on the question.

The Norfolk group, which took its action at a meeting in the white YWCA building, is believed to be the first interracial civic group in the state to vote its solid approval of the court's ruling.

—o O o—

SEVERAL WHITE church groups and a number of colored and interracial church groups have adopted resolutions in support of the Supreme Court, but no civic interracial group had done so before.

In disclosing its views on the court decision, the group approved the following statement:

"The Norfolk Women's Council for Interracial Cooperation applauds the Supreme Court decision of May 17 and urges the governor and his committee to form a plan that will be in keeping with the spirit of that decision."

THE STATEMENT, drafted by the council's school committee will be enlarged by the committee in cooperation with the executive group preparatory to presenting it to the governor's commission at the Richmond hearing.

Mrs. James R. Chambers, attorney, associated with E. W. Dawley in the practice of law in Norfolk, president of the council, presided at the meeting.

INTERRACIAL BODY SUPPORTS COURT RULING

NORFOLK, Va. —(ANP)— The Woman's Council for Interracial Cooperation, headed by a Negro lawyer, voted last week unanimously in support of the Supreme Court's decision of May 17 holding that segregated public schools are unconstitutional. The group also decided to send a delegate to Richmond on Nov. 17 to give its views at a hearing on the question.

The Norfolk group, which took its action at a meeting in the white YWCA building, is believed to be the first interracial civic group in the state to vote its solid approval of the court's ruling. Several white church groups and several Negro and interracial church groups have adopted resolutions in support of the Supreme Court, but no civic interracial group has done so before.

In disclosing its views on the court decision, the group approved the following statement:

"The Norfolk Women's Council for Interracial Cooperation applauds the Supreme Court decision on May 17 and urges the governor and his committee to form a plan that will be in keeping with the spirit of that decision."

The statement drafted by the council's school committee, will be enlarged by the committee in cooperation with the executive group preparatory to presenting it to the governor's commission at the Richmond hearing.

Mrs. James R. Chambers, who is associated with E. W. Dawley in the practice of law in Norfolk, is president of the council and presided at the meeting.

Social scientists scoff at threat of school riots

BY WILLIAM N. OATIS

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 24—(AP)—Social scientists pooh-pooh the notion mixing Negroes and whites in American schools will cause rioting and bloodshed, a UNESCO publication said today.

"Apparently many people believe that SOMEBODY ELSE will start the rioting, even though they themselves are prepared to accept the new situation," said an article on the subject.

"There will of course be difficulties in the way of further desegregation, but previous experience indicates that they can be surmounted."

THE ARTICLE appears in the October issue of the UNESCO Courier, published monthly by the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris and distributed here.

The entire 36-page special issue was titled "The American Negro —whittling away the color bar." It was devoted largely to the U. S. Supreme Court's May 17 decision declaring race segregation in public schools contrary to the Constitution.

The article, "Social Science and Segregation," was written by Dr. Otto Klineberg, Columbia University psychology professor and member of UNESCO's social science department.

He said social scientists—psychologists, sociologists and anthropologists—and educators had helped the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People fight the school case through the courts.

In the lower courts, he said, many social scientists were pro-NAACP witnesses, and in the Supreme Court 32 American social scientists signed a statement presented as an appendix to the NAACP brief.

THE STATEMENT reported 90 per cent of the social scientists questioned felt segregation was "psychologically detrimental" to the segregated Negro minority and 90 per cent felt it hurt the white majority also.

The Court Decision

A Time for Patience—Not Extremism

An Associated Press round-up of press comment on Monday's historic Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools appeared in this space yesterday. Today's sampling was prepared by the United Press.

Knoxville News-Sentinel—"It is a just and wise decision, and in time will be so recognized in our opinion even by those who are now troubled and shocked. The Supreme Court wisely has provided time [for carrying out its decision] * * * plenty of time for people of good will of both races to think and work for a solution if only they can keep the extremists of both races from precipitating trouble, and if only the people of the North, both black and white, will have patience while the people of the South, both black and white, wrestle with their problems."

Montgomery Advertiser—"The decision itself is dramatic and revolutionary, but the results of the decision may be undramatic and merely evolutionary. It is not a signal for the firebrands and hotspurs to do their stuff. Alabama's segregation system is not to be suddenly upended and rent. Reform will not come at a bound. Neither the court nor the plaintiffs demand that. May it come to pass that * * * Alabama will be spared the impotent wheezing and hoarse croaking of its wind bags and demagogues. Let's give ear to the cool and matter-of-fact among our leadership.

Chicago Tribune—The principle established by this decision is not that anybody has to give up any of his prejudices, no matter how desirable it might be that he do so. The principle is the much simpler one that the state governments, North and South, must regard all men as created equal so far as opportunities at the disposal of the state are concerned. That idea may appear dangerously novel to some citizens, but the Supreme Court didn't invent it. Indeed, they can be said to have borrowed it from a distinguished Virginian named Thomas Jefferson.

Atlanta Journal—"Final decrees on segregation are being delayed * * * This period of study offers hope that the Supreme Court, as it listens to the problems of the people, will come to realize just how complex the segregation question is * * * This is a time for calm and collected judgment on the part of all Americans * * * It now rests with the people of the various states affected to find the best answer to these problems."

Nashville Banner—"It is no time for demagogic appeals from either side of the long controversy. It is a time for reasoned and cautious treatment of the case presented to reconcile both the national interest and states' rights on the Constitution, which is the firm foundation of both. These questions will not be finally and comprehensively settled today or tomorrow, next month, or next fall. They cannot be settled on any false base, as narrow as racism. They must be settled on the basis of justice and equity, by law and reason, which is historically the American way."

Columbia (S. C.) State—"The State does not see how the Court could ignore the powerful arguments made by Mr. (John W.) Davis and others in the South Carolina case. But the fact remains that the highest court in the land has spoken and therefore the question is no longer academic, but what in view of the decision, should be the procedure."

"We think the Supreme Court would be practical in the application of its ruling. Having stated emphatically that segregation is not constitutinal, it could well allow years to elapse before invoking its decree; or it might allow no appreciable wait. For the best interests of all concerned it should be very liberal in its timing."

Dallas Morning News—"Constitutionally the News does not believe the Court to be wrong * * * but it is to be hoped that the same nine justices will see as clearly the second of two phases with which the rights and wrongs of segregation are concerned * * * [forcing] social association on the unwilling * * *. In the citizen's private business and social contacts, he has an equal right to his own choice * * *.

"In the South one result may be to sharply reduce the amount of public education as many who can afford it turn to private schooling * * *. So the South comes to a bridge that it must cross without experience in how to do it."

Jackson (Miss.) Daily News—"Human blood may stain Southern soil in many places because of this decision but the dark red stains of that blood will be on the marble steps of the United States Supreme Court Building. White and Negro children in the same schools will lead to miscegnation * * *. It means racial strife of the bitterest sort * * *. Mississippi cannot and will not try to abide by such a decision."

New York Times—"The decision reached was inevitable in the year 1954 regardless of what may have been the case in 1868, when the 14th Amendment was adopted, or in 1896, when the "separate but equal" doctrine was laid down * * *. It is true, of course, that the Court is not talking of that sort of "equality" which produces inter-racial marriages. It is not talking of a social system at all. It is talking of a system of human rights which was foreshadowed in the second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence, which states that "all men are created equal.' Mr. Jefferson and the others * * * did not intend to say that all men are equally intelligent, equally good or equal in height or weight. They meant to say that men were, and ought to be, equal before the law. If men are equal, children are equal, too. * * *.
